That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government, looking to the action of the British Government in analogous cases, would not be justified in demanding compensation of the Spanish Government on behalf of Mr. Young, but that the strongest representations may properly be made to the Spanish Government by Her Majesty's Government, with a view to obtain for Mr. Young some compensation for the serious sufferings which he has undergone. We think it would be well to point out to the Spanish Government the following facts:—

That the homicide happened in January 1878, and Mr. Young was at once imprisoned.

That he was not informed until June 1878 that he had been found guilty of imprudence, and sentenced to four months' imprisonment and a fine of 20*l*.

That thereupon the fine was paid, and his sentence of four months' imprisonment having been undergone the Spanish law was satisfied, and at that time Mr. Young ought to have been set at liberty, but was unjustly detained a prisoner.

That representations were made on his behalf by the British Minister at Madrid to the Spanish Government in June 1879, September 1879, October 1879, February 1880, and May 1880, and that it was only in June 1880 that Mr. Young was released, having suffered both in body and mind for two years and a-half, and that such delay apparently resulted from the defects in the administration of public justice, which must be under the control of the Spanish Government.

Annex.

Memoradum on Mr. Young's Case.

Nos 1 and 5 of Print, Confidential No. 4364.

Mr. J. C. Young, a British subject, when defending himself from the attack of an armed native, at Elobey, in Spanish territory, who was trying to kill him, shot him, and was arrested on the 17th January, 1878, and brought a prisoner to Fernando Po.

Nos. 5 and 6. Inclosure 2 in No. 10.

He was tried and found guilty of "imprudence," and sentenced to four months imprisonment, or, according to Mr. Young's statement, a fine of 20*l*., having already been kept a close prisoner before the trial for nearly four months.

No. 1.

Nos. 10 and 16, and Inclosure 6 in No. 10.

Inclosure in No. 11, and Inclosure 1 in No. 16.

As regards the alternative of the fine, there is much discrepancy in the different statements. In his first Report, Consul Hopkins says—"Governor Salgado intimated to us that if we paid 20*l*. compensation to the friends of the man killed, and became bail to the extent of 50*l*. for Mr. Young, he would release him." But in later despatches, and in one communication which he addressed to the local authority, he asserts that Mr. Young was sentenced to "four months' imprisonment and a fine of 20*l*.," while in another letter to the local authority he says "fined 20*l*. and or (?) four months' imprisonment." The fine is denied by the Acting Governor, whose version agrees with Consul Hopkins' first statement.

Inclosure 2 in No. 10.

However, the 20*l*. was raised among the English in Fernando Po and paid, together with 10*l*. or 12*l*. for doctors' fees, and Mr. Young was released on the 13th July, 1878. After remaining quietly in the island for about four months he endeavoured to make his escape on the 7th November, in an English mail-steamer. The Captain fearing the consequences brought him back, and he was made a close prisoner on board the guard-ship.

Inclosure 3 in No. 16.

Fernando Po being under the jurisdiction of Cuba, the sentence was referred to Cuba, and Mr. Young remained a prisoner either on board the guard-ship, in hospital, or in prison ("cuartel," i.e., quarters or barracks), to the serious injury of his health, and even danger of his life.

The time during which he remained a close prisoner appears to have been:—

1. From the 17th January, 1878, to the 13th July, 1878—seven months.

No. 5, and Inclosure 2 in No. 9.

Inclosure in No. 19.

2. After his attempt to escape on the 7th November, 1878, to some date between the 11th August, 1879, when he complained to the Consul of his continued detention, and the 29th October, the date of a despatch from the Fernando Po authorities to the Spanish Government, reporting that he was released on bail, viz., between nine and eleven months, or altogether from sixteen to eighteen months.

No. 27.

(Mr. Easton, writing on the 7th February, 1880, says he is not detained in gaol.)

7 altogether, viz.:—on January 29, 1879, No. 4; June 25, 1879, No. 9; September 20, 1879, Inclosure in No. 13; October 27, 1879, No. 18 and Inclosure; February 12, 1880, No. 24; February 13, 1880, Inclosure in No. 29; March 20, 1880, No. 27.

Inclosure in No. 13.

Repeated representations, verbal and written, were made to the Spanish Government by Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid, on behalf of Mr. Young, and in the communication of the 20th September, 1879, they were informed that he had put forward a claim to compensation, which Her Majesty's Government considered to be well founded.

Inclosure in No. 10.

The amount then claimed by Mr. Young, the 23rd June, 1879, more than a year ago, was 1,000*l*.

No. 16 and Inclosure No. 2, and Inclosure 7 in No. 10.

Several representations were also made by Mr. Hopkins to the local authorities, who, however, informed him that he had no right to interfere, and Mr. Young states that the Governor refused him a copy of his case, to which he understood he was entitled by law, on the ground of a possibility of his submitting it to the Consul, and thereby obtaining the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

Inclosure in No. 37.

It was not till the 27th July that Mr. Wyndham was informed that a telegram had been received from the Captain-General of Cuba, reporting that Mr. Young had been "acquitted and exempted from all responsibility." In a further communication, dated the 4th August, the Spanish Government informed Mr. Wyndham that the Havana Court of Justice had found Mr. Young to have acted in self-defence, and declared him fully acquitted, and had given costs against the Government.

We do not know if he has yet been released.

On this charge, then, which turns out to have been quite unfounded, he has been kept a prisoner, either in actual custody or on bail, for more than two years and a-half, of which about one year and a-half was spent in prison under such privations and sufferings as to injure his health, and even at times to endanger his life; and this treatment was inflicted on him in spite of the continued remonstrances of Her Majesty's

Consul, and although the compensation to the family of the deceased suggested by the Governor as a condition of his release had been paid by public subscription.

Temple, July 15, 1880.

My Lord,

Trade marks. New Swiss law.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith papers, as marked in the margin,* on the subject of a law respecting the protection of trade marks passed by the Swiss Government on the 19th December last.

That we would find a copy of that law inclosed in Mr. Vivian's despatch No. 14, Commercial, of the 7th April last, together with a memorandum on the questions to which it had given rise; and copies of an opinion by Professor König, and of a memorandum by M. Droz, the Federal Minister of Commerce and Agriculture.

That the law in its terms dealt generally with the registration and protection of Swiss trade marks, but Article 7 (2) provided for the registration of foreign trade marks where there was a reciprocity of treatment; nevertheless, by Articles 27 and 28 a period of three months was to be fixed within which application was to be made for the registration only of Swiss trade marks legitimately used before the 1st October, 1879; and by Article 29 (as to which we were referred to the statement of M. Droz, reported in Mr. Vivian's despatch No. 20 of the 3rd May), the registration of foreign trade marks could not be effected until after the applications for the registration of Swiss trade marks under Articles 27 and 28 had been disposed of.

That it further appeared that, in the opinion of M. Droz, a special Convention would be necessary to secure the protection of the new law to British trade marks. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the inquiries addressed by direction of your Lordship to the Federal Government (Mr. Vivian's No. 22 of the 19th May), and to their reply (ibid., No. 29 of 12th June). That, that reply did not give a definite answer to the important question whether the registration of a Swiss trade mark under Articles 7, 27, and 28 of the new law could be opposed on the ground of its being a piracy of a British trade mark duly registered in this country. That, if not, it followed that British subjects, being precluded from registering a trade mark in Switzerland until after the expiration of the period assigned for the registration of Swiss trade marks, would have no redress against such piracy.

That the French Government, in their reply, intimated their willingness to enter into a Convention with Great Britain, whereby reciprocity of treatment to Swiss trade marks in Great Britain should be guaranteed.

As to British rights under "most-favoured-nation" Clause of Treaty 1855.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our attention to the letter addressed to the Foreign Office by the Huddersfield Chamber of Commerce (26th May), and by the Association of Chambers of Commerce (16th June), and he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions discussed in the Report of Professor König (Inclosure 3 in Mr. Vivian's No. 14 of the 7th April), as to whether, under the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty of 1855, between Great Britain and Switzerland, of which a copy was annexed (see § 10),† Her Majesty's Government were entitled to claim all the advantages in regard to the protection of trade marks secured by the Treaties and Conventions between Switzerland and France, Germany and Italy, referred to by Professor König. We would observe that Mr. Vivian, in his

That Her Majesty's Government had also quite recently notified to the Federal Government their readiness to conclude a Convention on the subject (Mr. Vivian's No. 22 of the 19th May). That, on the other hand, it was more convenient in practice to enter in Special Conventions than to rely on a most-favoured-nation clause, and that it was not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to waive their rights under Article X of the Treaty of 1855 by the negotiations in question.

Safest course would be to conclude a Convention on the subject with Swiss Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it is open to contention that under Article X of 1855 Her Majesty's Government are entitled to claim all the advantages in regard to the protection of trade marks secured by the Treaties and Conventions between Switzerland and other countries, but that, in our opinion, considerable difficulties may be raised if the question of trade marks is left to be dealt with solely under the most-favoured-nation clause in the Treaty of 1855, and the safest and most desirable course will be to conclude a Convention on the subject which may adequately protect British interests in Switzerland under the new law in that country.

Piracy in Persian Gulf.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 2nd December instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 4th October relative to the measures proposed for the suppression of piracy in the Persian Gulf, he had the honour to transmit to us therewith, by direction of your Lordship, a further despatch received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Porte,* reporting that he had found it necessary to make fresh representations to the Turkish Government upon the subject; and to request that we would take that despatch into consideration, together with the papers previously forwarded, and would return it with our Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the previous papers referred to in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 2nd instant were, with our Report upon them, transmitted to the Foreign Office before we received Lord Tenterden's letter.

Protection of British interests in Turkish waters. Steps to be taken in case of neglect by Porte to act.

Should the Porte neglect to take any measures for the security of British trade in the Persian Gulf, Her Majesty's Government may, consistently with international law, endeavour to obtain from the Porte permission to act in Turkish waters against pirates and marauders, and should this permission be refused, and the Porte continue to allow piracy in its waters, Her Majesty's Government might not improperly make such negligence a ground for reprisals. Whether either of these courses would be worth the expenses and trouble abroad, and possibly at home, we cannot form an opinion.

Another and less objectionable measure, though probably not attended with any success in the present state of Turkey, would be to demand compensation in any case

My Lord,

Dr. Koelle, Protestant missionary. Arrest at Constantinople. Right of Turkish authorities to arrest foreigners.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion on a question of great practical importance in the Levant, which had arisen in connection with the case of Dr. Koelle, a Protestant missionary at Constantinople.

That that gentleman (who was a German subject) was lately arrested by the Turkish police on suspicion of having committed an offence against Turkish law. That he was not only arrested, but his person was searched and his papers examined and detained without the intervention of the Diplomatic or Consular Representative of his nation.

That Dr. Koelle was a clergyman of the Church of England; and in the course of the correspondence between Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople and the Porte to which the above incident had given rise, Sawas Pasha, the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressed to Sir H. Layard a letter which was embodied in extenso in a telegram to Musurus Pasha (the Turkish Ambassador at this Court), of which a printed copy was annexed.* That in that letter Sawas Pasha endeavoured to vindicate the action of the Porte in the case of Dr. Koelle, and with reference to his arrest he claimed for the Turkish police the right to arrest in the public street, and in accordance with Turkish procedure, any person, whether a native or a foreigner, whom they might believe to have been guilty of a crime or offence against Ottoman law, and also to search for and examine the papers and effects which he might carry about him, and that he proceeded to describe the course which it was the duty of the police to follow where the accused was a foreigner.

That Sir H. Layard and other foreign Representatives at Constantinople had protested against those pretensions.

That it appeared that a copy of the above-mentioned letter of Sawas Pasha was communicated to some of the Powers through the Turkish Representatives abroad, and the question having thus become one of general interest, the German Ambassador at this Court had expressed to your Lordship the desire of his Government to know what are the views of Her Majesty's Government on the subject, and he had intimated at the same time the opinion of his Government that the right to arrest a foreigner in the public street without the intervention of the Representative of his nation could only be conceded to the Turkish authorities in cases where the offender is found flagrante delicto.

That your Lordship would be glad to know whether, in our opinion, the view of the German Government was founded on legal right, and if not, to what extent Her Majesty's Government were entitled to object to the arrest of British subjects for a crime or offence against Turkish law, and to the search for and examination of the papers and effects which they might carry about them, without the intervention of the British Diplomatic or Consular Representative.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a copy of the Capitulations, and a printed memorandum, prepared by the Librarian of that Department,† in which reference was made to the particular Articles bearing on Her Majesty's ex-territorial rights in the Levant, and also to various cases in which British subjects had been arrested by the Turkish authorities. That it did not appear, however, from the Reports of those cases, whether the arrest was effected flagrante delicto or otherwise.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 4th instant, relative to certain questions which had arisen with regard to the circumstances under which the Turkish police authorities had a right to arrest foreigners and examine their papers and effects, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople inclosing the note from the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, upon which our opinion was desired.

That Sir Henry Layard also inclosed memoranda* by Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople upon the claim advanced in that note, and opinions which had been communicated to him by his German and Italian colleagues.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was further to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome,† reporting that the Italian Government had expressed themselves willing to support Her Majesty's Government in contesting the claim of the Porte.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, with those already forwarded to us, and would return them with our reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the Turkish police have the right to arrest a foreigner in the public streets, whom they have reasonable grounds to believe guilty of a crime or offence against Ottoman law, and to search and examine the papers and effects which he may carry about him.

This right is one which every Government, for the sake of maintaining public peace and order, must be deemed to possess, unless the right has been surrendered by Treaty, or in some other way.

We are not aware of any surrender of this right by the Porte. On the contrary, it seems to us that in the Protocol of the 18th June, 1867,‡ Article 11 (p. 76 of Sir E. Hertslet's Treaties with Turkey), the right to arrest is so expressly referred to that we consider (at least so far as Her Majesty's Government is concerned) the argument of Sawas Pasha is unanswerable.

The passage in the Protocol to which we refer is the following :—

"Beyond the dwelling the action of the police shall be free and without reserve; but in case an individual accused of a crime or offence should be arrested, and the accused be a foreign subject, the immunities attaching to his person shall be observed with regard to him."

We can find no reason or authority for believing that these immunities can be extended to save the person of the accused from being searched, or the papers and effects upon his person from being seized.

For these reasons, and as far as Her Majesty's Government is concerned, we are of opinion that the view of the German Government is not well founded.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he transmitted therewith a copy of the Additional Articles to the Public Act for the Navigation of the Danube, which had been signed by the English, French, Italian, and Turkish Commissioners at Galatz, and to which the adhesion of the Austrian and German Governments might shortly be expected.§

That an account of the discussions which took place previous to the signature of that document, and copies of the Protocols in which those discussions were recorded, would be found in the despatch from Colonel Siborne, Her Majesty's Commissioner, which was also inclosed.

That the history of the previous negotiations was given in the accompanying collection of printed papers,|| in which those bearing upon the particular questions were marked in the margin; and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a memorandum containing a brief statement of the present position of the question, and of the circumstances under which Colonel Siborne was authorized to give his adhesion, subject to the ratification by Her Majesty, to the Additional Act signed by the Commissioners above mentioned.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion whether Her Majesty might properly be advised to ratify the Supplemental Act in its present form, and in the manner prescribed in Article X; and also generally with any observations which we might have to offer with regard to any of its provisions.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to call our attention to the reservations made by the Roumanian Delegate, as recorded in the Protocol of the sitting of the Commission held on the 3rd January, 1880 (print, No. 4301, p. 225), and repeated in the inclosed note from the Roumanian Agent at Paris to Her Majesty's Ambassador there,* as to the acceptance by his Government of Articles VI and VII of the Additional Act.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

But we, in obedience to your Lordship's directions that we should offer any observations which might occur to us in reference to any of the provisions in the Supplemental Act, submit for your consideration whether, unless time is of great importance, the apparently reasonable wishes of the Roumanian Government should not be considered and made part of the Act; and, in order to avoid future complications, the accession of the Russian Government be obtained before Her Majesty actually ratifies the Act.

Dr. Koelle's case. Adhere to previous Report on arrest of foreigners in Turkey.

My Lord,

That in that despatch Sir H. Layard drew attention to an article in the "Courrier d'Orient," in which reference was made to certain clauses of the Treaties concluded by the Porte with France, Austria, Denmark, and the United States, the benefit of which could be claimed by Great Britain under the most-friendly-nation clause (see Treaty of 1861, Article I: Hertslet, p. 42), and which it was contended were opposed to the contention of the Turkish Government in that matter. That, as regarded the clauses of the Treaties with France and Austria which were cited in the newspaper article inclosed in the despatch, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that they appeared to relate to the actual trial and punishment of offenders, and not to their preliminary arrest on a charge.

That the clause cited from the Danish Treaty did not seem to apply to the question of jurisdiction at all.

That, as regarded the Treaty with the United States, the citation of Article IV was incomplete. That the concluding words, which had been omitted, were "et punis suivant leur délit en observant sur ce point l'usage établi à l'égard d'autres Francs."

That that Article, when examined in its entirety, did not seem to go further than

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to transmit therewith Férand-Giraud's work on French Jurisdiction in the Levant, in which we should find the full text of the clauses, except Article XII of the Danish Treaty, which was not even mentioned (see Vol. I, Austria, p. 132; France, p. 188; Denmark, p. 122; United States, p. 133).

That Sir J. Mr, O. Arsenian. Seizure of his offices and warehouses by Persian Minister.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters which had been received from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce,† claiming the intervention of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople on behalf of Mr. Oskian Arsenian, a naturalized British subject, against the proceedings of the Persian Representative at the Porte, by whose orders his offices and warehouses in that capital had been seized and sealed.

Claim for British intervention.

That the Queen's Advocate in his Report of December 8, 1871, which was inclosed therewith,‡ advised that a native of Gibraltar born of Spanish parents, and therefore having a double nationality, British and Spanish, could not, when in Morocco, be protected by the British Consul as against the Spanish Consular authorities who claimed to exercise jurisdiction over him within the territories of Morocco, under Treaty engagements with that Power.

That your Lordship would therefore be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the application of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, transmitting a letter which had been received from Mr. Arsenian,§ containing further explanations respecting his case, which it was requested might be taken into consideration together with the other papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we presume that the origin of Mr. Arsenian is Persian, and that in Constantinople the relation between Persian subjects and the Persian Representative is similar to that between British subjects and Her Majesty's Representative.

On this presumption the application of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce may properly be replied to by saying that—

He has no rights as a naturalized British subject at Constantinople against Persian Minister.

Mr. Oskian Arsenian, a Persian subject by origin, has at Constantinople no rights as a naturalized British subject which Her Majesty's Ambassador can enforce on his behalf in opposition to the Persian Representative at the Porte.

My Lord,

Appointment of a Member of Parliament as Special Ambassador abroad without salary.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 5th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state that it was proposed to appoint a Member of Parliament to proceed, without salary, as Special Ambassador to a foreign Court. That before completing the appointment your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether, by accepting that office, the Member of Parliament would vacate his seat.

That as instances of Members of Parliament who had proceeded on special Missions Lord Tenterden was to mention Mr. Cobden, who negotiated at Paris and signed, under full powers the Royal Sign-manual, the Treaty of Commerce with France in 1860; the Right Honourable Sir Stafford Northcote, who acted as High Commissioner, and signed the Treaty of Washington in 1871, under similar full powers; the Right Honourable Sir Stephen Cave, who proceeded on a special Mission to Egypt in 1875; Mr. Russell Gurney, who was Claims' Commissioner in the United States during various periods from 1871 to 1873; and Sir H. Wolff, recently Delegate in the Eastern Roumelian Commission.

That Lord Tenterden was also to refer us to Sir Erskine May's "Parliamentary Practice," edition 1879, p. 655, in which it was stated that: "It has always been held that the office of Ambassador, or other foreign Minister, does not disqualify, nor its acceptance vacate, the seat of a Member."

That it would be seen from the note to that passage that the acceptance of the paid appointment of Minister at Madrid by Mr. Layard in 1869 did not vacate the seat he then held for the Borough of Southwark.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

He does not thereby vacate his seat.

That we are clearly of opinion that the Member of Parliament proceeding without salary as Special Ambassador to a foreign Court does not thereby vacate his seat in Parliament.

We have, &c.

Temple, June 9, 1880.

My Lord,

Case of Mr. A. V. Arsenian, a naturalized British subject of Persian origin, and question as to his protection against action of Persian Consul at Constantinople.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th May last, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the margin,* relating to the case of Mr. A. V. Arsenian, a naturalized British subject, of Persian origin, residing at Manchester, and carrying on business as a merchant there and at Constantinople.

That Mr. Arsenian was naturalized in 1868.

That, on the 19th March last, the Manchester Chamber of Commerce addressed a letter to the Foreign Office requesting the intervention of Her Majesty's Government for the protection of Mr. Arsenian against the action of the Persian Consul at Constantinople, by whose orders his warehouses there had been taken possession of and sealed.

That doubts being entertained whether Her Majesty's Government could claim the right to interfere in the case, the question was referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, who reported that, assuming the relation between Persian subjects and the Persian Representative at Constantinople to be similar to that existing between British subjects and Her Majesty's Representative, Mr. Arsenian, being a Persian subject by origin, had at Constantinople no rights as a naturalized British subject which Her Majesty's Ambassador could enforce on his behalf in opposition to the Persian Representative at the Porte, but that Her Majesty's Ambassador might be instructed officiously to employ the best means in his power to assist Mr. Arsenian.

That Sir H. Layard was instructed accordingly, and, on the 9th May, he telegraphed to the effect that the Porte denied the right of the Persian Consulate to exercise jurisdiction over Mr. Arsenian, and he had consequently protested to the Persian Ambassador against the intended sale on the following day by the Persian Consulate of Mr. Arsenian's stores, holding the Consul responsible for all loss and damages resulting therefrom. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was now to refer us to Sir Henry Layard's despatch No. 500 of the 11th May, which had since been received, and to the twelve numbered documents therein contained, especially to the letters of the Persian Ambassador (Nos. 4 and 5) explaining the nature of the legal proceedings, and vindicating the action of the Persian Consulate, also to the protest of Sir H. Layard, No. 10, and to the copy of the Convention between the Porte and Persia (No. 12).

That in the letters above referred to (Nos. 4 and 5) it was stated by the Persian Ambassador that, according to Persian law, Mr. Arsenian, not having obtained the sanction of the Persian Government to his assumption of British nationality, he still remained a Persian subject. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that, although the Capitulations did not apply to Persia, Article VII of the Convention (No. 12) provided that all suits or proceedings, civil or criminal, arising between Persian subjects should be heard and determined by the Consuls and Vice-Consuls of Persia.

That it would seem to follow, therefore, that as regarded civil and criminal jurisdiction, the relations between Persian subjects and the Persian Representative in Constantinople were placed by the above Convention on the same footing as the relations which existed between the subjects of Christian Powers and their Representatives under the Capitulations.

That we would observe, however, that Sir H. Layard based his protest (No. 10) on Article XII of the Convention, treating Mr. Arsenian as a British subject.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request, therefore, that we would take all the papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Sir Henry Layard's protest was well founded, or whether the Persian Consul was entitled to treat Mr. Arsenian as a Persian subject, notwithstanding his British naturalization, and to exercise jurisdiction over his property at Constantinople.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken all the papers submitted to us into consideration, and we gather from them that the parties to the litigation will be Mr. Arsenian on the one side, and Persian subjects on the other side, Mr. Arsenian being a Persian subject by birth, but a naturalized British subject since 1868.

And the question is whether, by virtue of such naturalization, Mr. Arsenian can claim British protection, and exemption from the jurisdiction of the Persian Consul in Constantinople.

We think that Article XII of the Convention between the Porte and Persia is not applicable unless we could assume that Mr. Arsenian was, in a controversy with other Persian subjects in Constantinople, to be considered a British subject, and we are unable to make this assumption; Article VII of the Convention appears to us to give the Persian authorities in Constantinople the same control over processes between their subjects as other Powers have under the Capitulations, and the Persian law, it seems, requires the permission of his own Government before a Persian can change his nationality, a permission which Mr. Arsenian has not obtained.

We think, therefore, that Mr. Arsenian is amenable to the jurisdiction of the Persian Consul, and is not entitled to protection, as a British subject, against the exercise of such jurisdiction, and therefore report—

That, in our opinion, Sir Henry Layard's protest is not well founded, and the Persian Consul is entitled to treat Mr. Arsenian as a Persian subject, notwithstanding his British naturalization, and to exercise jurisdiction over his property in Constantinople.

We have, &c.

Imprisonment of G. Scifo at Malta: as to period of termination of second sentence.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to lay before us the papers noted in the margin,* and relating to the case of Guglielmo Scifo, a prisoner in the gaol at Malta, who had petitioned for the remission of his remaining term or terms of imprisonment.

That Scifo was tried at Smyrna in March 1870 before Sir Philip Francis, Judge of the Supreme Consular Court in the Levant, and was sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment with hard labour for the manslaughter of Giacmo Remur, and to five years' imprisonment with hard labour for wounding one Antonio Sansonn, with intent, etc. That both charges were tried on the same day, and arose out of the same disturbance. In the month of May in the same year Scifo was tried for breach of prison, and was sentenced to undergo one year's imprisonment with hard labour "after the expiration of the former terms of fifteen and five years' imprisonment."

That a report on the case was called for from Mr. Fawcett, the present Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, and Sir Julian was also to refer us to Mr. Fawcett's despatch No. 40 of the 31st May last, inclosing a copy of the Judge's notes of the evidence taken on the three trials, and pointing out that the record of the second sentence did not show that it was intended to take effect after the expiration of the first.

That Scifo stated in his petition that he had now completed his first sentence of fifteen years. That he had possibly obtained some remission under the prison regulations, as an official note in the petition recorded that his conduct in prison for the last seven years had been very good. That further information on that point would be called for. That in the meanwhile Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the second sentence of five years must be taken to have run concurrently with the first sentence, and consequently to have expired.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, inasmuch as the second sentence of five years is not directed to commence at the termination of the first sentence, it must be regarded as commencing from the time it was pronounced, and therefore it has now expired.

the sum of 105,305 dollars, on account of damages alleged to have been sustained through the violent interference by British subjects with United States' fishermen while engaged in catching herring at Fortune Bay, in the Colony of Newfoundland, in the alleged exercise of their rights under the Treaty of Washington.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was also to inclose a printed Memorandum* containing a statement of the facts and a reference to the Treaties, Colonial Acts, and other documents bearing on the case; and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would take all those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the claim, and with our advice as to the answer which should be returned to the letter addressed by the United States' Minister to your Lordship on the 13th August, 1879 (see Further Correspondence, p. 1), transmitting a copy of Mr. Evarts' despatch to him of the 1st August, 1879.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

United States' fishermen have no right to use the beach for fishing.

That, in our opinion, the American fishermen had not, under the Treaty of Washington, the right to use the beach for the purpose of working their seine and barring the fish.

Their claims should not be entertained, though unnecessary violence was used.

Probably greater and more continued violence was used by the British fishermen than was necessary, but as the Americans were the first offenders, their claim for compensation should not be entertained.

United States' citizens have equal rights with British subjects, which cannot be modified by local legislation subsequent to Treaty.

Legislation subsequent to the time of the Treaty of Washington cannot, in our opinion, modify or restrict the rights and privileges which the citizens of the United States acquired, and their Government have paid for, under that Treaty.

But we think the Americans were bound by all local laws in existence at the time when the Treaty was made; that, by the words of the Treaty, they were on the territorial waters of Newfoundland entitled to equal rights, and to the fishery in common with British subjects.

As to the answer, we have the honour to report—

Answer to United States' Minister.

That the United States' Minister may, in our opinion, properly be answered to the following effect:—

That the right of the citizens of the United States to compensation for damage sustained by them in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January, 1878, depends upon the facts and occurrences which happened on the day and in the place named, and the construction of those Articles of the Treaty of Washington of 1871 which are applicable to the facts.

First, as to facts.

The ends of the seines of the United States' citizens were secured to the shore. This fact, which is material, is not noticed by Mr. Evarts in his Inclosure No. 1 to Mr. Welsh, though at p. 5 of the Further Correspondence, in continuation of No. 2920, he says, referring to the affidavits of Rode, Dagle, and Murray, that "the seining was conducted at a distance from any land, fishery, or privilege, or the occupation of any British subject."

From the affidavits of Maclurison, p. 14, and the deposition of Ramsey, p. 17, of Correspondence 3851, it appears that on the day in question a large number of the crews belonging to the United States' fishery vessels came on shore and from the beach barred the herrings.

If these facts are true—and that they are true appears clearly from the statement transmitted by Mr. Evarts to Sir E. Thornton (Correspondence No. 3851, p. 5)—the United States' citizens, in landing and setting and working their seines from the shore, were guilty of a breach of the Convention of 1818 and the Treaty of Washington of 1871.

The rights secured by these to the citizens of the United States are to take fish on certain portions of the coast of Newfoundland, and to use the shore for the purposes of purchasing wood, obtaining water, drying their nets, and curing fish. The citizens of the United States are thus, by clear implication, absolutely precluded from the use of the shore in the direct act of catching fish.

In endeavouring to use the shore for fishing purposes they committed a breach of the privileges given by the Treaty.

It may be admitted, with regret, that more force than was necessary may, on the occasion, have been used by the Newfoundland people; but as the citizens of the United States, by a direct infringement of the Treaties and of the rights of the Newfoundland people, were the first and real cause of the mischief, Her Majesty's Government sees no reason for compensating them for any damages which they may have sustained in consequence of their own illegal acts.

* Memorandum by Mr. Bergne, November 1879, Confidential No. 4064.

Her Majesty's Government has already stated "that British sovereignty, as regards these waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation."

And Her Majesty's Government fully admits that United States' fishermen have the right, by Treaty, of participation in the Newfoundland inshore fisheries in common with British subjects.

But it does not follow that from this right of participation in common with the British fishermen, the United States' fishermen have any other, and still less greater rights than the British; on the contrary, the proper meaning of the provision would be that the rights and the obligations were equal, and that in the territorial waters, as distinct from the shore or land, each had the same and no greater right than the other.

If then, at the time of the Treaty of Washington, 1871, certain restraints were, by the municipal law, imposed upon the British fisherman, the United States' fisherman was, by the very words of the Treaty, bound to observe, in common with the British, the then existing local laws and regulations.

The obligation implied by the words "in common" attached upon the United States' citizen as soon as he claimed the benefit of the Treaty. The local regulations existing at the time of the Treaty, and established by the Colonial authorities for the protection of the fisheries, are as binding upon the citizens of the United States, who claim the privileges secured by the Treaty, as they are binding upon the British.

True it is that the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, passed since the Washington Treaty, 1871, contain certain restrictions as to the time and manner of fishing on the shores, and, as already said, those restrictions, when in conflict with the Treaty rights of the United States, cannot be insisted upon by the British Government.

But the regulations which were in force at the time of the Treaty were not abolished but confirmed by the Statutes subsequent to that time, should have been known to the United States, and are binding, under the Treaty, upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects.

This Act at p. 17, Correspondence 3920, should be annexed for convenience to the answer.

Her Majesty's Government, sharing the regret expressed by Mr. Evarts on the part of the United States' Government at any apparent conflict of interests or of opinions which may exist as to the privileges secured by the Treaty to the citizens of the United States, will willingly co-operate with the Government of the United States "in settling the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871, and in making regulations which shall be a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, of conciliating a community of interests by a just proportion of advantages and profits," and removing any future ground or cause of complaint on the part of the Government and citizens of the United States or the British Government and British subjects.

Claims of United States' fishermen on account of occurrence at Fortune Bay.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 11th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of the note which your Lordship proposed to address to the United States' Minister in London, in reply to Mr. Welsh's note of the 13th August last, in which he preferred the claim of United States' fishermen to compensation for damages alleged to have been sustained by them at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was also to inclose, for convenience of reference, the papers which accompanied his letter to us of the 1st January last,* and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed reply on behalf of Her Majesty's Government is right and proper, under the circumstances of the case.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to add that the United States' Government were urgently pressing for an immediate reply to the claim preferred by them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the proposed reply to the United States' Minister is, in the circumstances of the case, right and proper.

Annex.

Draft of a Despatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Lowell.

Foreign Office, March , 1880.

Sir,

In the note which I had the honour to address to Mr. Hoppin on the 12th instant I explained the reason why a certain time has unavoidably elapsed before Her Majesty's Government were in a position to reply to Mr. Welsh's notes of the 13th August last, in which he preferred, on the part of your Government, a claim for 105,305 dol. 2 c. as compensation to some United States' fishermen on account of losses stated to have been sustained by them through certain occurrences which took place at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th January, 1878. The delay which has arisen has been occasioned by the necessity of instituting a very careful inquiry into the circumstances of the case, to which, in all its bearings, Her Majesty's Government were anxious to give the fullest consideration before coming to a decision. Her Majesty's Government having now completed that inquiry so far as lies within their power, I beg leave to request you to be so good as to communicate to your Government the following observations on the case.

In considering whether compensation can properly be demanded and paid in this case, regard must be had to the facts as established, and to the intent and effect of the Articles of the Treaty of Washington and the Convention of 1818 which are applicable to those facts.

The facts, so far as they are known to Her Majesty's Government, are disclosed by the affidavits contained in the inclosed printed paper, which, for convenience of reference, have been numbered in consecutive order. Nos. 1 and 2 were received by Her Majesty's Government from his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland; Nos. 3 to 10, inclusive, were attached to the Report made by Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius," who was instructed to make an inquiry into the case. These were communicated to Mr. Welsh with my note of the 7th November, 1878. Nos. 11 to 16, inclusive, are the affidavits of United States' fishermen, printed in the "New York Herald" of the 28th January, 1878, and were received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington. They have not been received officially from the Government of the United States, but Her Majesty's Government see no reason to doubt their authenticity. Nos. 17 to 22 were annexed to Mr. Welsh's note of the 13th August last.

A careful examination of the above evidence shows that on the day in question a large number of the crews of the United States' fishing vessels came on shore, and from the beach barred the herrings, the ends of their seines being secured to the shore. That the fishermen of the locality remonstrated against these proceedings, and upon their remonstrances proving unavailing, removed the nets by force.

Such being the facts, the following two questions arise:—

1. Have United States' fishermen the right to use the strand for purposes of actual fishing?

* See List in Report of February 11.

2. Have they the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland?

The answers to the above questions depend on the interpretation of the Treaties.

With regard to the first question, namely, the right to the strand fishery, I would observe that Article I of the Convention between Great Britain and the United States of the 20th October, 1818, secured to citizens of the United States the right, in common with British subjects, to take fish of every kind on certain specified portions of the coast of Newfoundland, and to use the shore for the purposes of purchasing wood and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington superadded to the above-mentioned privileges the right for United States' fishermen to take fish of every kind (with certain exceptions not relevant to the present case) on all portions of the coast of that island, and permission to land for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish, "provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coast in their occupancy for the same purpose."

Thus, whilst absolute freedom in the matter of fishing in territorial waters is granted, the right to use the shore for four specified purposes alone is mentioned in the Treaty Articles from which United States' fishermen derive their privileges, viz., to purchase wood, to obtain water, to dry nets, and cure fish.

The citizens of the United States are thus by clear implication absolutely precluded from the use of the shore in the direct act of catching fish. This view was maintained in the strongest manner before the Halifax Commission by the United States' Agent, who, with reference to the proper interpretation to be placed on the Treaty stipulations, used the following language: "No rights to do anything upon the land are conferred upon the citizens of the United States under this Treaty, with the single exception of the right to dry nets and cure fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, if we did not possess that before. No right to land for the purpose of seining from the shore; no right to the 'strand fishery' as it has been called; no right to do anything except, water-borne on our vessels, to go within the limits which had been previously forbidden.

"So far as the herring trade goes, we could not, if we were disposed to, carry it on successfully under the provisions of the Treaty; for this herring trade is substantially a seining from the shore—a strand fishing, as it is called—and we have no right anywhere conferred by this Treaty to go ashore and seine herring any more than we have to establish fish-traps."

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, cannot anticipate that any difference of opinion will be found to exist between the two Governments on this point.

The incident now under discussion occurred on that part of the shore of Fortune Bay which is called Tickle Beach, Long Harbour. On this Beach is situated the fishing settlement of Mark Bolt, a British fisherman, who, in his evidence taken upon oath, deposed as follows: "The ground I occupy was granted me for life by Government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the Beach; there were three in winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement. If these large American seines are allowed to be hauled it forces me away from the place."

John Saunders, another British fisherman of Tickle Beach, deposed that the United States' fishermen hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of his property.

The United States' fishermen, therefore, on the occasion in question, not only exceeded the limits of their Treaty privileges by fishing from the shore, but they "interfered with the rights of private property and with British fishermen in the peaceable use of that part of the coast in their occupancy for the same purpose," contrary to the express provisions of Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington. Further, they used seines for the purpose of in-barring herrings, and this leads me to the consideration of the second question, viz.: whether United States' fishermen have the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland.

The in-barring of herrings is a practice most injurious; and, if continued, calculated in time to destroy the fishery; consequently it has been prohibited by Statute since 1862.

In my note to Mr. Welsh of the 7th November, 1878, I stated "that British sovereignty as regards these waters is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation;" and Her Majesty's Government fully admit that United States' fishermen have the right of participation on the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, in common with British subjects, as specified in Article XVIII of that Treaty. But it cannot be claimed, consistently with this right of participation in common with the British fishermen, that the United States' fishermen have any other, and still less that they have greater, rights than the British; on the contrary, the only true construction must be that, in the territorial waters, as distinct from the shore or land, the rights and obligations of the people of each nation are identical.

If, then, at the date of the signature of the Treaty of Washington certain restraints were by the municipal law imposed upon the British fishermen, the United States' fishermen were, by the express terms of the Treaty, equally subjected to those restraints; and the obligation to observe, in common with the British, the then existing local laws and regulations which is implied by the words "in common," attached to the United States' citizens as soon as they claimed the benefit of the Treaty.

That such was the view entertained by the Government of the United States during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty, under which United States' fishermen enjoyed precisely the same rights of fishing as they do now under the Treaty of Washington, is proved conclusively by the Circular issued on the 28th March, 1856, by the Collector of Customs at Boston, which so thoroughly expressed the views of Her Majesty's Government on this point that I quote it here in extenso:—

"Mr. Marcy to Mr. Peaslee.

"Department of State, Washington, March 28, 1856.

"Sir,

"It is understood that there are certain Acts of the British North American Colonial Legislatures, and also, perhaps, executive regulations intended to prevent the wanton destruction of the fish which frequent the coasts of the Colonies, and injuries to the fishing thereon. It is deemed reasonable and desirable that both United States' and British fishermen should pay a like respect to such laws and regulations, which are designed to preserve and increase the productiveness of the fisheries on those coasts. Such being the object of these laws and regulations, the observance of them is enforced upon the citizens of the United States in the like manner as they are observed by British subjects. By granting the mutual use of the inshore fisheries, neither party has yielded its right to civic jurisdiction over a marine league along its coasts.

"Its laws are as obligatory upon the citizens or subjects of the other as upon its own. The laws of the British provinces, not in conflict with the provisions of the Reciprocity Treaty, would be as binding upon the citizens of the United States within that jurisdiction as upon British subjects. Should they be so framed or executed as to make any discrimination in favour of British fishermen, or to impair the rights secured to American fishermen by that Treaty, those injuriously affected by them will appeal to this Government for redress. In presenting complaints of this kind, should there be cause for doing so, they are requested to furnish the Department of State with a copy of the law or regulation which is alleged injuriously to affect their rights, or to make an unfair discrimination between the fishermen of the respective countries, or with a statement of any supposed grievance in the execution of such law or regulation, in order that the matter may be arranged by the two Governments.

"You will make this direction known to the masters of such fishing-vessels as belong to your port in such manner as you may deem most advisable.

(Signed) "W. L. MARCY,
"Collector of the Customs, Boston."

I have the honour to inclose a copy of an Act passed by the Colonial Legislature of Newfoundland, on the 27th March, 1862, for the protection of the herring and salmon fisheries on the coast, and a copy of Cap. 102 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, passed in 1872. The first section of the Act of 1862 prohibited the taking of herrings with a seine between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April, and further prohibited the use of seines at any time for the purpose of barring herrings. These Regulations, which were in force at the date of the Treaty of Washington, were not abolished, but confirmed by the subsequent Statutes, and are binding under the Treaty upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects.

The United States' fishermen, therefore, in landing for the purpose of fishing at Tickle Beach, in using a seine at a prohibited time, and in barring herrings with seines from the shore, exceeded their Treaty privileges and were engaged in unlawful acts.

Her Majesty's Government have no wish to insist on any illiberal construction of the language of the Treaty, and would not consider it necessary to make any formal complaint on the subject of a casual infringement of the letter of its stipulations which did not involve any substantial detriment to British interests, and to the fishery in general.

An excess on the part of the United States' fishermen of the precise limits of the rights secured to them might proceed as much from ignorance as from wilfulness; but the present claim for compensation is based on losses resulting from a collision which was the direct consequence of such excess, and Her Majesty's Government feel bound to point to the fact that the United States' fishermen were the first and real cause of the mischief by overstepping the limits of the privileges secured to them, in a manner gravely prejudicial to the rights of other fishermen.

For the reasons above stated, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case as at present within their knowledge, the claim advanced by the United States' fishermen for compensation on account of the losses stated to have been sustained by them on the occasion in question is one which should not be entertained.

I have only to add, in conclusion, that Her Majesty's Government, sharing the regret expressed by Mr. Evarts, on the part of the Government of the United States, at any apparent conflict of interests or of opinions which may exist as to the privileges secured by the Treaty to the citizens of the United States, will willingly co-operate with the Government of the United States in settling any differences that may have arisen as to the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871, and in making such regulations as shall remove any just cause of complaint on the part of the Government and citizens of the United States, or the Government and subjects of Great Britain.*

My Lord,

Mr. J. H. Tunstall, British subject, murdered in New Mexico.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers as marked in the margin,† relative to the murder of Mr. J. H. Tunstall, a British subject, in New Mexico, whose father demanded compensation for the loss sustained by himself through his son's death and the plunder of his property, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the circumstances of the case justified Her Majesty's Government in presenting a claim on behalf of Mr. J. P. Tunstall to the United States' Government.

Claim of the father to compensation.

That the facts were stated in the case laid by Sir Edward Thornton before Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the Legal Adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, and in that gentleman's Report thereon. (Inclosures 1 and 2 in Sir Edward Thornton's No. 24.)

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we entirely agree with Mr. Calderon Carlisle, and in our opinion the circumstances of the case justify Her Majesty's Government in presenting a claim on behalf of Mr. J. P. Tunstall to the United States Government.

Opinion of Mr. Calderon Carlisle.

In the matter of the Murder of the British subject John H. Tunstall, in Lincoln County, New Mexico, United States of America.

307, D Street, Washington, D.C., January 22, 1880.

Sir,

Opinion of Mr. C. Carlisle.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 8th instant, in which you do me the honour to ask my opinion on certain questions, arising upon a state of facts therein set forth, which is further elucidated by voluminous inclosures.

Amongst these inclosures is a Report of the Special Agent of the Department of Justice (or rather, a copy thereof), laid before the Secretary of State by the Attorney-General, which is accompanied by a large number of depositions or extracts from depositions. After diligent consideration of your questions, in the light of the papers laid before me, I am of opinion that the Report of the Special Agent of the Department of Justice of the United States, supported by depositions, shows a state of facts which, independent of the unsworn allegations of aggravating circumstances made by the father of the murdered man, make a primâ facie case against the United States which would warrant the intervention of Her Majesty's Minister.

The Special Agent in question was sent out to New Mexico "charged" with the duty "of especially learning all the particulars of the murder, as well as the causes which led to the same." The material facts found by him are:—

1. That the murdered man was a peaceful inhabitant of Lincoln county, New Mexico, of the highest character, deserving well of the community, and having given no just cause of offence to any officer or private citizen.

2. That an attachment, issued against the property of one McSween and the Sheriff of Lincoln county, determined to levy the same on certain property in the possession of Tunstall; that thereupon he sent his deputy, who assembled "a large posse, among whom were the most desperate outlaws of the territory," and started for Tunstall's ranch. Tunstall, informed of this, left his ranch, taking with him all the horses, and started for Lincoln, the county seat. The deputy Sheriff arriving at the ranch and finding that Tunstall had left with the horses, sent forward one Morton, of the posse, who selected eighteen men to accompany him, "ostensibly to capture the horses." This posse overtook "Tunstall and his party with the horses, and commenced firing on them. Immediately Tunstall and his party left the horses, and attempted to escape; were pursued, and Tunstall was killed some 100 yards or more from the horses." The Special Agent adds "There was no object in following after Tunstall except to murder him, for they had the horses which they desired to attach before they commenced to pursue him and his party," and he closes his narrative of facts by stating his "conclusion that John H. Tunstall was murdered in cold blood, and was not shot in attempting to resist an officer of the law."

From the above facts, found by an official of the United States after diligent inquiry, it appears—

That the people who murdered Tunstall were a portion of a Sheriff's posse, and were lawfully deputed to execute a lawful process of the United States, i.e., to attach certain horses in the possession of Tunstall, and that, in the actual execution of this process, they murdered the man in whose possession they found the horses.

I use the terms "process of the United States" advisedly, because the territory of New Mexico is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and all officers appointed or elected, and all laws passed therein, derive their authority and sanction from the Statutes enacted by the Congress of the United States.

I proceed now to answer the questions which you have done me the honour to submit for my opinion.

1. Whether you "should be justified in demanding from the Government of the United States compensation for the losses to which Mr. J. P. Tunstall has been subjected by reason of the murder of his son, and of the subsequent plunder of his property."

I confine myself for the moment to the single ground of claim which is the subject of the investigation by the Department of Justice, and of which the remaining ground, referred to in your question, may be said to be a direct consequence. I should premise, also, that my opinion is not asked as to whether Mr. J. P. Tunstall, the father, is the only person entitled to be compensated for the murder of his son, though I infer that the murdered man had no wife or children, in which case the father would be the proper party claimant.

1. I am of opinion that you would be justified in demanding compensation for the murder of a British subject under the circumstances found by the special Agent.

The allegations of Mr. J. P. Tunstall would seem to furnish grounds for—

First, a claim on his part on account of his pecuniary interest in his son's life; and Second, on account of the alleged plundering of his son's property by a Sheriff's posse after the murder.

The state of the county and intent and surroundings of the murder, as disclosed by the depositions, would seem to render it extremely probable that these allegations are substantially true. In any event, satisfactory proof would be required by the United States if they should admit the principles contended for, and, unless diplomatic usage or the precedents in Her Majesty's Legation require these allegations to be supported by sworn proof, I submit with great deference that the claim, as it appears by the allegations of the claimant, except, perhaps, the charge that General Dudley made a "criminal use" of United States' troops, may be presented by you to the Secretary of State.

If I am right in this opinion, and if no other person is interested more closely in the life of J. H. Tunstall, the claim may be presented as indicated in your question, i.e., "for compensation for the losses to which Mr. J. P. Tunstall has been subjected by reason of the murder of his son, and of the subsequent plunder of his son's property."

2. Whether I "consider that there were any acts of omission or commission on the part of the authorities, federal or territorial, which you could adduce in support of such demand?"

2. In my opinion the facts found by the Special Agents, as already summed up by me, furnish an affirmative answer to this question; and I may add that the alleged failure of the Sheriff to aid in the arrest of the murderers in the house of the enemies of the murdered man, may be called an act of omission on his part strongly supporting the theory of his connection with the murder, while the alleged actual prevention by him of the arrest of the murderers, who had taken refuge in the house where he was, would seem to place his complicity in the murder beyond a doubt.

3. "Whether there is any precedent that 'I" know of of such compensation having been granted under similar circumstances by the United States?"

3. I am not aware of any precedent of a grant of compensation by the United States under similar circumstances. But before the Spanish and American Commission the Department of State has presented three claims on behalf of relations of American citizens shot in Cuba, and quite recently the Umpire has made an award of 65,000 dollars in favour of a son whose father was shot by some volunteers.

In this last case the defence, apart from questions of nationality, was that the deceased endeavoured to escape when under arrest, but as this was not substantiated in the opinion of the Umpire, an award of the above-mentioned sum was made in favour of the United States, though there was no proof of pecuniary loss by the son in consequence of his father's death, and though Spain's authority in Cuba was crippled by the bloody insurrection then at its height, and the consequent disorder and excitement.

4. "Whether Mr. J. P. Tunstall has it in his power to recover damages by proceedings at law, or otherwise, from the Territorial Government of New Mexico."

4. To this I must answer that, in my opinion, he has not. It is a case where an American citizen could not obtain anything like a fair compensation without resort to Congress; and the only reasonable hope of redress which this British subject can entertain is that he may obtain compensation through the intervention of Her Majesty's Goverment.

In conclusion I have to say that I have based my opinion upon the facts found by the Special Agent, because it is reasonable to suppose that they represent fairly the state of the case.

If my answers to your questions, or the statement on which they are based, are too general, or are wanting in any respect, I beg that you will indicate it to me that I may, if I should be able, remedy the defect.

The inclosures, five in number (the testimony being in two parts), are herewith returned.

No. 79.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 29.)

Temple, April 28, 1880.

My Lord,

Trial, at Calcutta, of a British subject, John Anderson, for manslaughter on board the American barque "C. O. Whitmore," on the high seas.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, papers respecting the case of a British subject named John Anderson, who, in May 1879, was convicted by the High Court of Calcutta of the crime of manslaughter on board the American barque "C. O. Whitmore," on the high seas.

That John Anderson at the time of the commission of the offence was serving on board the "C. O. Whitmore" as an ordinary seaman.

That on the 29th July, 1879, Mr. Welsh, the United States' Minister in London, addressed a note to your Lordship, objecting, on behalf of his Government, to the exercise of jurisdiction by the High Court of Calcutta, in that case as a breach of comity, and contending that, as regards common crimes committed on board merchant-vessels on the high seas, the competent Tribunals of the vessel's nation had exclusive jurisdiction, whatever might be the nationality of the offender. That a copy of Mr. Welsh's note was transmitted to the India Office in the Foreign Office letter of the 5th August, 1879.

That in that letter the attention of the Secretary of State for India was drawn to the fact that the offence having been committed on board a foreign ship on the high seas, the accused could only be tried under clause 11 of the Act 30 and 31 Vict., cap. 124, and that as the accused belonged to the ship he was within the exception of that enactment, and that inquiry was made whether Lord Cranbrook was in possession of any information showing the jurisdiction of the High Court of Calcutta in the case. (Foreign Office to India Office, 5th August, 1879.)

That the correspondence was referred by Lord Cranbrook to the Government of India, from whom a Report had been received, which formed the printed inclosure to the letter from the India Office to the Foreign Office of the 11th ultimo. That Sir J. Pauncefote was to refer us to the letter from the Government of India to Lord Cranbrook of the 28th January, 1880 (print p. 1), for a precise statement of the facts of the case, and of the legal questions raised thereby.

That it appeared from that letter that Anderson was tried by the High Court under the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 96, as extended to India by the Act of 23 and 24 Vict., cap. 88 (print p. 7), and that the Government of India, in support of their view that in the present case jurisdiction was rightly exercised under that Act, referred to the case of a British subject named Murphy, who was tried by the Calcutta High Court in 1867 for an offence committed by him on board the American ship "Nonantium" on the high seas, and to the opinion of Sir Travers Twiss and Mr. W. Forsyth on that case, which we should find at p. 11 of the second printed annexe to their letter.

That they added, however, that the course of subsequent Parliamentary legislation seemed adverse to their view, and that, as the matter was open to doubt, they suggested that an authoritative ruling should be obtained from Her Majesty's Law Officers as to the proper construction of the Act 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 96, as also in regard to the points mentioned in paragraphs 13 and 14 of their letter.

Question of Admiralty jurisdiction.

That the first question submitted by the Government of India was, whether the High Court at Calcutta had jurisdiction to try a British subject for an offence committed by him on the high seas on board a foreign vessel to which he belonged; or, in other words, whether the jurisdiction of the Admiralty extended to offences committed on the high seas on other than British ships?

That the second question was, whether, having regard to the decision in Tirnan's case (33 L. T. M. C., 201), that the word "jurisdiction" in the Extradition clause of the Ashburton Treaty meant exclusive jurisdiction, Her Majesty's Government might decline to surrender a fugitive to the United States' Government under that clause in a case where there was concurrent jurisdiction, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 6 and 27 of the Extradition Act of 1870.

That the third question was whether, supposing that Her Majesty's Government were not bound to give up the fugitive in such a case, they had power to do so under the Extradition Act above referred to. That for a more detailed statement of the above questions, Sir J. Pauncefote was to refer us to paragraphs 11, 13, 14, and 15 of the letter of the Government of India, and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

That as regarded the question raised by the United States' Minister, whether, assuming the High Court to have had jurisdiction in the case of John Anderson, the statutes conferring such jurisdiction violated any principle of international law or comity, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether, in our opinion, the objection taken by the United States' Government might properly be answered in the sense of the observations thereon, which were contained in paragraph 12 of the letter of the Government of India.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Jurisdiction of Admiralty does not extend to offences on the high seas in other than British ships.

That, in our opinion, the jurisdiction of the Admiralty does not extend to offences committed on the high seas in other than British ships. The jurisdiction of the Admiralty cannot, we think, be held to reach foreign vessels of every kind on board of which any crime may have been committed on the high seas; and though the words of a British statute may seem large enough to cover all offences committed on the high seas, the meaning of those words must be limited, and applied only to British ships which are on the high seas, and not within territorial waters.

Extradition. Concurrent jurisdiction.

2. Having considered the provisions in sections 6 and 27 of the Extradition Act, 1870, the decision in Tirnan's case, and the Ashburton Treaty (Article X), we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may not properly decline to surrender a fugitive to the United States' Government in a case where there is concurrent jurisdiction.

3. And we think Her Majesty's Government has the power to surrender a fugitive[*] where there is concurrent jurisdiction, under the Extradition Act, 1870.

We are not prepared to say that a statute conferring jurisdiction on the Court of the country of the offender in the case of offences committed on the high seas on board a foreign vessel, or in places within foreign jurisdiction, would violate any principle of international law or comity. On the contrary, we are of opinion that there are many cases in which the conferring of such jurisdiction would subserve the purposes of justice, and be quite consistent with the principles of international law and comity. But the right to exercise such a jurisdiction in cases where the extradition has been properly demanded is a totally different matter, and that right should, in our opinion, be, if ever, most sparingly exercised.

Sir,

The claim of Mr. J. P. Tunstall for compensation for the loss sustained by himself through the murder of his son, Mr. J. H. My Lord,

Trial of John Anderson for murder on board an American vessel on the high seas.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the margin‡ relating to a complaint on the part of the United States' Government of the exercise of jurisdiction by the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta in the case of John Anderson, a British subject, on the Articles of the American barque "C. O. Whitmore," who was charged with having killed the first officer of that vessel while on the high seas.

That the facts of the case appeared in the reference to the Law Officers of the Crown, and in the papers annexed thereto, which were then transmitted, together with a copy of their Report thereon of the 28th ultimo, from which we would perceive that, in the opinion of our predecessors, the High Court at Calcutta had no jurisdiction to try the offender, and that, under the circumstances, his extradition should have been granted to the United States' Government.

Offences committed on board merchant-vessels on the high seas. Exclusive jurisdiction of State to which the vessel belonged.

That your Lordship now proposed to reply to the letter of the late United States' Minister, Mr. Welsh, to the Marquis of Salisbury of the 29th July last. That that letter, as we would observe, dealt only with the general proposition, that offences committed on board merchant-vessels on the high seas were under the exclusive jurisdiction of the State to which the vessel belonged, irrespectively of the nationality of the offender, and the United States' Government would seem to have assumed that the jurisdiction of the High Court at Calcutta was exercised in that case under powers

Foreign Office, June , 1880.

Sir,

Her Majesty's Government have had under consideration, in communication with the Government of India, the letter addressed by Mr. Welsh to my predecessor on the 29th July,* on the subject of the trial at Calcutta, in January 1879, of one John Anderson, a British subject, on the Articles of the American barque "C. O. Whitmore," who was charged with having killed the first officer of that vessel while on the high seas.† In that letter Mr. Welsh stated that, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the exercise of jurisdiction in that case by the High Court at Calcutta was a breach of comity. He urged that, "as regards common crimes committed on board merchant-vessels on the high seas, the competent Tribunals of the vessel's nation have exclusive jurisdiction of the question of trial and punishment of any person thus accused of the commission of a crime against its municipal law."

As regards the general proposition above laid down, Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to admit that a statute conferring jurisdiction on the Court of the country of the offender, in the case of offences committed by its own subjects on the high seas, on board a foreign vessel or in places within foreign jurisdiction, would violate any principle of international law or comity. On the contrary, they are of opinion that there are many cases in which the conferring of such jurisdiction would subserve the purposes of justice, and be quite consistent with these principles.

Such an assumption of jurisdiction does not involve a denial of jurisdiction on the part of the State in whose territory the offence was committed; it involves no more than an assertion of a right of concurrent jurisdiction; and the most eminent authorities on international law in this country and also in the United States‡ lay down that the legislative and judicial powers of a State extend to the punishment of all offences against its municipal laws by its subjects, wheresoever committed.

But as regards the particular case of John Anderson, it appears, from a Report furnished by the Government of India, that, in the opinion of their Law Officers, the High Court at Calcutta had jurisdiction to try the accused by virtue of the Imperial Act 23 & 24 Vict., cap. 88, which extends to Her Majesty's territories in India the provisions of the Act 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 96, "to provide for the prosecution and trial, in Her Majesty's Colonies, of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty."

The question of jurisdiction was not raised at the trial, and no decision was, therefore, pronounced on it, but Her Majesty's Government are advised by the Law Officers of the Crown in this country, that the jurisdiction of the Admiralty does not extend to offences committed on the high seas in other than British ships. It follows, therefore, from their view of the law, that the High Court at Calcutta had not jurisdiction to try the case, and that the trial was a nullity. It further appears, from the Report of the Governor of India, that after the trial the Consul-General of the United States applied for the extradition of the prisoner, and was informed that the Government of India were unable to order the surrender of a person on a charge, in respect of which he had been already tried and convicted by a competent British Court.

I have the honour to request that you will express to your Government the regret of Her Majesty's Government that the action of the authorities at Calcutta, in the case of John Anderson, should have been governed by a view of the law which, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, cannot be supported; and I trust that you will convey to them the assurance that Mr. Evarts has justly attributed this incident to a misconception, and not to any design to question the jurisdiction of the United States in this or any similar case.

No. 82.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received July 15.)

Temple, July 15, 1880.

My Lord,

Fortune Bay fishery claims.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to lay before us the papers noted in the accompanying list* relating to a controversy now pending between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States.

That the controversy arose out of a claim preferred by the Government of the United States for compensation in respect of injuries and losses alleged to have been sustained by American fishermen while engaged in the exercise of the fishery rights secured to them by the Treaty of Washington, owing to the violent interference and obstruction they encountered from British fishermen at Fortune Bay, in the Colony of Newfoundland, on Sunday, the 6th January, 1878.

That the correspondence which took place between the two Governments was laid before the Law Officers of the Crown on the 1st day of January last, together with a printed Memorandum containing a statement of the facts and a reference to the Treaties, Colonial Acts, and other documents bearing on the case. (Further Correspondence, No. 20, p. 35.)

That their Report was printed at p. 38 (No. 22); and on the 3rd April last the Marquis of Salisbury, in accordance with the advice tendered therein, transmitted to the United States' Chargé d'Affaires the reply of Her Majesty's Government to the claim in question, stating the grounds on which they considered that it should not be entertained.

That that reply, which was printed at p. 44 (No. 31), was the same (with a variation which did not affect the legal argument) as that which had been previously submitted to and approved by the Law Officers of the Crown (No. 29, p. 44). That the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to satisfy that claim had caused great dissatisfaction in the United States, and, after a careful examination of the whole question, your Lordship felt great difficulty in adopting the conclusions arrived at by the late Government.

That their refusal to entertain the claim was based on the ground that the losses sustained by the United States' fishermen resulted from a collision which was the direct consequence of an excess on their part of their Treaty privileges, and of a violation by them of the local fishery laws.

That they were charged with having exceeded their Treaty privileges by fishing from the shore, and with having violated the local laws in using a seine during the close season and in barring herrings, contrary to section 1 of the Newfoundland Act of 1862 (25 Vict., cap. 2: Further Correspondence, p. 63), confirmed by section 1 of the Consolidated Act of 1872 (ibid., p. 64).

That as regarded the excess of Treaty privileges by fishing from the shore, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that it appeared from the depositions of the British witnesses (Further Correspondence, pp. 49–55) that no objection had been raised before or since the day on which the disturbance occurred to the use of the shore by the American fishermen for the purpose of hauling their seines, and that the grievance which really gave rise to the disturbance was the prosecution by them of their fishery on Sunday, contrary to the provisions of a local law which was passed subsequently to the date of the Treaty, and was therefore admitted to be inapplicable to them. That it appeared to your Lordship hardly equitable to base the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to award compensation for the damage sustained by the American fishermen on the ground that they were technically, and perhaps unwittingly, exceeding their Treaty rights by fishing from the shore, a practice which, up to that time, had been tolerated, if not encouraged, by the local fishermen.

That the only ground on which it appeared to your Lordship that such refusal could fairly be based was that they were knowingly committing a breach of some local fishery law which they were bound to observe, and it became most important, therefore, to consider whether they were bound by the provisions of the local laws which they were charged with having violated.

That on that point Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our particular attention to the correspondence which took place between the two Governments in 1873-74, and which was referred to in Sir Edward Thornton's despatch No. 296 of the 4th November, 1878 (Correspondence, Part I, p. 40). That that correspondence, of which a précis was annexed to the papers, was contained in the "Foreign Office Confidential Papers respecting the British North American Fisheries," and, having regard to the objection of the United States' Government to the proposed Proclamation under the Act passed in Newfoundland to give effect to the Treaty, to the consequent repeal of the Act, and to the substitution of a new Act and Proclamation in which the proviso objected to was omitted, your Lordship entertained grave doubts whether Her Majesty's Government were not now precluded from maintaining that the fishery laws of Newfoundland, whether in force at the date of the Treaty or not, were binding on citizens of the United States.

That we would observe that Mr. Evarts' letter to Mr. Welsh of the 28th September, 1878 (Correspondence, Part I, p. 36, par. 5), contains the following passage:—

"This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States conceded by the Treaty of Washington are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that Government."

That, on the other hand, in his letter to Mr. Welsh of the 1st August, 1879 (Further Correspondence, p. 13, last paragraph), Mr. Evarts, after expressing regret at "the conflict of interests which the exercise of the Treaty privileges enjoyed by the United States appears to have developed," concluded as follows:—

"There is no intention on the part of this Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the colonial fishermen.

"While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet, if the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States' Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits."

That if we should be of opinion, after examining the correspondence relating to the Newfoundland Act of 1874, that Her Majesty's Government were precluded from maintaining that the American fishermen were bound by the fishery laws which they were charged with having violated on the occasion in question, your Lordship would be disposed to consider the propriety of at once satisfying the claim of the United States' Government to the extent of the losses which could be shown to have been really sustained by the American fishermen, and to accept the offer of the United States' Government to co-operate with Her Majesty's Government in framing such regulations for future observance by the fishermen of both nations as were suggested in the concluding paragraph of Mr. Evarts' letter above referred to.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all the papers in this case into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion upon the points raised in that letter, and on the legal rights of this country in relation to the controversy in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have carefully considered the facts connected with this case, and the different views which have been presented in relation to them.

We have regarded the facts as being as follows:—

Views with regard to the restrictions imposed by local legislation prior and subsequent to March 1874.

By the Treaty of May 1871 the United States secured for American subjects additional rights of fishery on certain coasts of the British North American Colonies in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty (Article XVIII).

By Article XXXII of the Treaty the provisions of the Fishery Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, were extended to the Colony of Newfoundland, subject to the Legislature of Newfoundland and the Congress of the United States, embracing the Colony of Newfoundland, in their laws enacted for carrying such Articles into effect.

The Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, 1872, c. 102 (substantially re-enacting an Act of 1862), placed certain restrictions upon the prosecution of the fisheries by British subjects.

By section 1 of that Statute fishermen were prohibited from using a seine for taking herrings between the 20th October and the 12th April. By the same section they were further prohibited from using a seine at any time except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling it, thus preventing herrings from being "barred."

By section 18 it was declared that nothing in that chapter should affect the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects of any State or Power in amity with Her Majesty.

It will be observed that the above restrictions were imposed prior to the acceptance of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington by the United States so far as they relate to Newfoundland, which took place in March 1874.

By the Act of the Newfoundland Legislature of the 5th May, 1873, passed for carrying into effect the Treaty of Washington, the laws relating to the time and manner of prosecuting the fisheries were expressly saved from suspension. Mr. Fish, on the part of the United States' Government, objected to this provision on the ground that no such limitations were contained in the Treaty, and in consequence declined taking the necessary steps on the part of his Government for bringing the Fishery Articles into operation. In the following year, on the 28th March, 1874, an Act was passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland enabling the Governor by Proclamation to declare that the provisions of Articles XVIII to XXV of the Treaty should come into operation in Newfoundland, and should continue in force, any law of the Colony to the contrary notwithstanding. This Act omitted all reference to the laws relating to the time and manner of prosecuting the fisheries, and on the 29th April, 1874, an Act was passed repealing the Act of the 5th May, 1873. Thereupon the requisite Proclamations for bringing the Treaty into operation were published by the United States' Government and the Governor of Newfoundland. It will be seen that Mr. Fish's objection was thus substantially recognized.

On the 26th April, 1876, an Act was passed by Newfoundland prohibiting any taking of herrings between 12 o'clock on Saturday night and 12 o'clock on Sunday night.

On Sunday, the 6th January, 1878, the destruction of the American nets by the local fishermen occurred. A careful perusal of the depositions seems to make it apparent that the only reason which influenced the Newfoundland fishermen to pursue the course they took was the fact that the Americans were fishing on a Sunday.

No objection seems to have been made by the British fishermen to the Americans fishing from the land, or to the use of the seine during the prohibited time, or to the mode in which the nets were used. Captain Sulivan (p. 24, par. 7, 3851) says: "It does not appear that the native fishermen were aware of the illegality of hauling a seine in the month of January; it is therefore to be presumed that the Americans were also ignorant of that law."

It will be observed that the real cause for the destruction of property complained of was the breach of a local law passed after the coming into operation of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty.

We therefore think that, in considering the course which should be pursued, whilst there is no reason to abandon the contention that the rights of the American fishermen are controlled by local legislation which came into operation before the acceptance of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty, that to rely upon breaches of such regulations as a justification in theory of the conduct of the British fishermen, who did not proceed upon, and were not influenced, in fact, by any such breaches of the local law, would be inexpedient and inequitable. It may also be observed that, even if Her Majesty's Government found in the facts connected with the occurrence ground for relying upon the breaches of local law existing prior to the acceptance of the Fishery Articles, it would be difficult to justify the conduct of the British fishermen in taking the law into their own hands. It must be conceded that, as early as 1873, there was a clear notice given on the part of the United States' Government that the application of local laws limiting the enjoyment of the fishing was objected to, and such contention cannot justly be met by a violent destruction of property.

If this view be correct, the only ground on which Her Majesty's Government can seek to justify the acts of the British fishermen must be the breach by the American fishermen of the Newfoundland Statute of 1876, prohibiting fishing on Sundays.

We are of opinion that the restrictions created by local legislation subsequent to March 1874 cannot be insisted upon by the British Government.

We would observe that the late Law Officers of the Crown, in their Report dated the 11th February, 1880, express a similar opinion.

Conduct of the British fishermen was unjustifiable.
Her Majesty's Government should satisfy United States' claims for compensation for losses actually sustained, and accept offer as to framing future regulations.

We therefore think that the Government of the United States can find a justification for their contention that the action of the British fishermen was unjustifiable.

For these reasons we submit that, whilst Her Majesty's Government need not abandon the contention that they still regard American fishermen bound by the local laws existing prior to March 1874, they may take into consideration the real cause of the destruction of property in this case, and may admit that both in relation to the manner and the extent of that destruction it cannot be entirely excused, and that therefore your Lordship will be justified in considering the propriety of satisfying the claim of the United States' Government to the extent of the losses which can be shown to have been really sustained by the American fishermen, and to accept the offer of the United States' Government to co-operate with Her Majesty's Government in framing such regulations for future observance by the fishermen of both nations as are suggested in the concluding paragraph of Mr. Evarts' letter.

Opinion of Dr. Deane.

I regret that, in this case, I am unable to agree entirely with the Attorney- and Solicitor-General.

United States' fishermen have acted contrary to the Treaty, and therefore are not entitled to compensation. Their claims may, however, be entertained as a matter of policy, subject to withdrawal of Mr. Loring's Bill.

In my opinion, the United States' fishermen are bound by the local laws existing at the time of the Treaty of Washington, 1871.

The liberty to fish "in common" with the British gave the United States' fishermen the same and no greater rights than those enjoyed by the British fishermen.

At the date of the Treaty of Washington strand fishing and herring fishing in close time were forbidden to the British, and were not allowed under the Treaty, either expressly or by implication, to the United States' fishermen.

Two infractions of the Treaty were, therefore, committed in Fortune Bay by the United States' fishermen, and they are, I conceive, not entitled to compensation for any injury or loss sustained on that occasion.

But the permanent settlement of the North American Fisheries question, independently of the provisions of the Treaty of Washington, is, at the present time, so important that, in accepting the offer of the United States' Government to co-operate in making regulations for the fisheries in future, Her Majesty's Government may take the opportunity for waiving the strict rights of this country under the Treaty, and entertaining the subject of compensation as expedient.

Your Lordship, however, I would respectfully suggest, may properly make the withdrawal of the Bill introduced by Mr. Loring a condition preliminary to the consideration of the amount of compensation to be paid to the United States' fishermen.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.

*Fortune Bay.

Fortune Bay Fisheries question.

I FIND it difficult to express my opinion in terms of simple assent to the Report of the Law Officers, and I cannot without much qualification agree with Lord Northbrook's Memorandum.†

Three points to be considered.

There are three distinct questions which ought, I think, to be separately considered :—

1. The question of the conduct of the Newfoundland fishermen on the occasion out of which the complaints of the United States' Government arose.

2. That of policy, as to the course which it is for the interest of this country to take, having regard to its relations with the United States on the one hand, and to the rights and interests of the Colony of Newfoundland on the other.

3. The question of law, as to the true construction and effect of the Treaty of Washington.

It is on the latter mainly that I propose to state my opinion.

Construction and effect of the Treaty of Washington with regard to the provisions of local legislation.

1. I agree with the opinion given in 1873 by Lord Coleridge, Sir G. Jessel, and Dr. Deane that the clause in the Treaty of Washington, which provides that the citizens of the United States shall be entitled, in common with British subjects, to fish in Newfoundland waters within the limits of British sovereignty, means that the American and the British fishermen shall fish in these waters upon terms of equality, not that there shall be an exemption of American fishermen from any reasonable regulations to which British fishermen are subject. There is nothing to waive any part of the territorial sovereignty of Great Britain in those waters, or to give the citizens of the United States any privilege or advantage in them above British subjects. Mr. Marcy's Circular of the 28th March, 1856, seems to me to be altogether right, and its principle is as much applicable to the fishery provisions of the Treaty of Washington as to those of the Treaty which Mr. Marcy had in view.

2. I cannot regard the correspondence, &c., which took place in 1873-74 as to the terms of the Act passed on the 5th May, 1873, by the Newfoundland Legislature, and the subsequent repeal of that Act, and the substitution of that passed on the 28th March, 1874, as involving any waiver or relinquishment of the right of the British Government to regulate the use of Newfoundland waters for fishing purposes. The United States' Government objected (as it was entitled to object) to the form of the Act of the 5th May, 1873, because it was not a simple adoption of the Treaty, but was a conditional adoption, subject to all local laws, &c., "relating to the time and manner of prosecuting the fisheries;" which laws, if consistent with the Treaty rights of the United States, did not require any such saving; and, if not consistent with those rights, could not properly be so saved. The British Government, and the Newfoundland Legislature, rightly yielded to this objection; but the only effect of this was, that any question as to the force and validity of the local regulations was left to be determined according to general principles of international law, and the true construction and effect of the Treaty. And I think there is sufficient proof that this was the understanding, at the time, of the United States' Government. Sir Edward Thornton's Confidential telegram to the Foreign Office on the 26th June, 1873, is in these terms: "Mr. Fish states, confidentially, that he presumes that in the waters of each country the fishermen of the other would have to comply with reasonable police regulations; but that his Government could not accept restrictions inserted in the Newfoundland Act with reference to the Treaty." In a previous conversation with Sir E. Thornton (reported 23rd June, 1873) Mr. Fish had said "that, in both cases, the fishermen of the two countries would have to observe the laws of the country within whose jurisdiction they might be fishing; but that such restrictions had not formed part of the Treaty."

3. This is a principle of much too considerable and general importance to be waived or relinquished, even to get out of a temporary difficulty with the United States. And I do not agree with what seems to have been the view of the late Law Officers (adopted, apparently, by the present) that there is any difference in this respect between territorial laws and regulations which were in existence at the time of the Treaty and those made afterwards. Both, if reasonable, and of impartial incidence on British and American fishermen, are, in my judgment, equally binding and equally consistent with the Treaty; neither would it be so if they gave to British fishermen, in the exercise of those rights of sea-fishing in which citizens of the United States were by the Treaty admitted to participate, any preference or other unfair advantage over American fishermen.

4. The two Coast Fisheries Acts of Newfoundland (Appendix (A) and (E) to "Correspondence, &c., in January 1878") must be read together, the second, which was later than the Treaty of Washington (39 Vict., cap. 6, 26th April, 1876), being a mere amending Act, and referring to the first for the penalties by which it is to be enforced. The concluding section of the first Act is in these words: "Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects of any State or Power at amity with Her Majesty." These local regulations, therefore, are, on the face of them, limited by any Treaty rights belonging to the United States or to any other Power. But so far as they are reasonable, and not protective of British as against American fishermen, it appears to me that they are consistent with the Treaty rights of the United States, and that American, as well as British fishermen, ought to be held bound by them. Any other view would involve one or other of three impossible alternatives: (1) that there can be no law or regulation at all as to the fishing in these waters; (2) that Great Britain has admitted the United States to participation in her own rights of sovereignty in Newfoundland waters, and can now only legislate as to them (so far as fishing is concerned) with the concurrence of that foreign Government; or (3) that the Treaty has a protective operation in favour of American against British fishermen in British waters.

5. With respect to the three provisions of these Newfoundland Acts, which are said to have been violated by the American fishermen in Fortune Bay in January 1878, two only, as I understand them, are applicable to those rights of fishing, in which the citizens of the United States are by the Treaty permitted to participate, viz.: (1) the regulation prohibiting certain modes of capture between the 20th December and the 12th April (extended by the amending Act of 1876 to the 25th April); and (2) the regulation of 1876 as to Sundays. It is not obvious to me that either of these regulations is unreasonable in itself, or unfair and unequal in its operation against United States' fishermen in their competition with British subjects while in British waters. I do not think it is a sound argument that, because United States' fishermen may have come to those waters from a distance, and may stay there only for a limited time, it is therefore an encroachment upon their Treaty rights to place them, equally with the British fishermen who live on the spot, under restrictions in themselves reasonable, though such restrictions may prevent them from fishing continuously during the whole of that time or with nets of a certain sort or size. Nor do I think that any such inference can fairly be drawn from the arguments which preceded the Halifax Award, or from that Award itself. It would, however, be right for Her Majesty's Government to give a friendly and equitable consideration to all arguments which the United States' Government may be able to bring forward, in order to show (if such is their opinion) that these regulations are unfair or unreasonable, and if any such arguments should appear to Her Majesty's Government to be of substantial weight, it may be proper that those regulations should be repealed. With respect to the four months' "close time" (as it is called), I suppose that herrings may be caught with other kinds of nets besides those which are forbidden, and I do not perceive that "seines" are by name prohibited. But if the use of seines during those months is (as seems to be assumed in Captain Sulivan's Report of the 21st June, 1878) prohibited in effect, and if the native fishermen at Fortune Bay were ignorant of the existence of any such prohibition, and habitually disregarded it, I agree with Lord Northbrook that would be wrong to ascribe importance in the present controversy to the violation by the American fishermen of that particular law, which the Colonial Government did not practically enforce, and which British fishermen were permitted habitually to disregard.

6. The third provision of the local Statutes, that against barring herrings (an operation performed from the shore, and by the use of the shore) stands on quite different ground. Not only does this provision appear to me to have been in itself very proper and reasonable, but it is no restriction upon any right of fishing conceded by the Treaty of Washington to the United States. The right of strand fishing, or of using the shore for the purpose of catching fish by nets thrown out from the shore and carried back to it, is not one of those in which, under the Treaty, the citizens of the United States have any right to participate. This is (to my mind) made perfectly clear by the facts and reasons stated in the opinion of the late Law Officers, dated the 11th February, 1880,* and in Lord Salisbury's despatch of the 3rd April, 1880, and also by the decision of the Halifax Commission mentioned in Mr. Bergne's Memorandum of the 5th March, 1880. Nor do I perceive that any reply has been offered by the United States' Government to Lord Salisbury's despatch upon this point. The operation of barring (which I understand to be the inclosure or impounding for an indefinite time of a certain water-space between the shore and a seine carried out from and brought back to the shore, for the purpose of accumulating and keeping alive in it, as long as may be convenient, large quantities of captured herrings) would, if legal, be in excess of any Treaty rights which can be claimed by the United States, and could (in that case) only be practised by sufferance, or under arrangements with native Newfoundland fishermen entitled to make such a use of the shore. It is, in fact, illegal, and it appears to me to be prohibited for very good reasons. Being so prohibited to British fishermen (a prohibition which, though it may have been more or less frequently violated, is not alleged to have been either unknown or misunderstood), no connivance on their part, and no assistance by some of them, could make it lawful to Americans; and when the Americans practised it on a Sunday, against a further special prohibition by law applicable to all fishing on that day (which appears to have been strictly obeyed by the British fishermen, and which, whatever might be its efficacy as to fishing by Americans in the open water, was unquestionably binding upon them when they fished from the shore in a manner not within their Treaty rights), they were acting, not illegally only, but so as to take (as it seems to me) an unfair and unreasonable advantage of the British fishermen. Although, therefore, the resistance of the British fishermen was caused by the violation of the Sunday rule, and not by any zeal on their part for the observance of any other local laws, still it was caused by the violation of the Sunday rule in that manner, under those circumstances, and with that effect, and I cannot agree with Lord Northbrook that the double illegality of "barring" from the shore, and of doing this on Sunday, can be excused by considerations which might possibly have been more to the purpose if the United States' fishermen had confined themselves to open water fishing on Sundays, and had merely disputed their obligation to observe in that respect the local law.

Compensation for losses caused by British fishermen ought to be paid, but not on grounds put forward by United States' Government.

7. That the Newfoundland fishermen were not entitled to take the law into their own hands, and forcibly to remove or destroy one or more of the seines used by the Americans, is a point which Her Majesty's Government ought certainly, without hesitation, to admit; and there might be no objection to a grant of reasonable compensation (if fairly assessed) on that principle. But the actual claim made by the American Government is for compensation upon the hypothesis that the United States' fishermen ought to have been allowed to continue, without interruption, their illegal and unauthorized mode of strand fishing, by "barring" the fish throughout that Sunday, and that, as (if they had done so) they might possibly have caught all the herrings then in the bay, they ought to be compensated for the loss of such a catch. Such a claim seems to me to be altogether inadmissible. Whatever concessions Her Majesty's Government may be disposed to make, out of friendliness towards the United States, and whatever understanding they may find it convenient to establish for the future, I cannot think that it would be either wise or right to abandon the ground taken up in Lord Salisbury's despatch as to those questions of law, on which I consider Lord Salisbury to have been rightly advised.

Lord Salisbury's despatch right as to questions of law, and ground thus taken up ought not to be abandoned.

H. Cheers, a deserter from the American ship "R. Robinson."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th July last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying communication* which had been received from the United States' Chargé d'Affaires at this Court relative to the case of Henry Cheers, a British subject, who, having deserted from the American merchant-ship "R. Robinson," at Yokohama, went on board Her Majesty's ship "Hornet" and gave himself up as a deserter from the Royal Navy. That the United States' Consul-General at Yokohama, however, acting under the instructions of the United States' Minister at Yedo, demanded the surrender of the man to be dealt with as a deserter from the American vessel, but Commander Eaton declined to accede to this request on the ground that Cheers being a deserter from the Royal Navy, his case came within the provisions of the Naval Discipline Act† and of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, copies of which Sir Julian annexed. That he was to refer us to section 19 of the Act, and to section 368 of the Admiralty Regulations (p. 126), and he observed that although the jurisdiction of the United States' Consul over Henry Cheers as a deserter from an American vessel was not contested (see inclosed printed correspondence, August 1875, No. 2631),‡ it would seem that, the prisoner being in the legal custody of the Commander of the British man-of-war charged with an offence against the Naval Discipline Act, the latter was justified in refusing to surrender him to the United States' Consul.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Hoppin's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Hornet" justified in refusing to surrender him to United States' Consul-General on ground of his having previously deserted from the Royal Navy.

That the United States' Chargé d'Affaires may, we consider, be properly informed:—

That if no other right intervened effect would naturally be given to his claim, and acknowledgment would be made that it would be the duty of the British Captain to give up the seaman to the American authorities.

But, on the other hand, the claim of the British Captain to deal with a British subject in relation to desertion or any other crime committed against our law must be maintained, and that therefore, if it had been ascertained that the seaman was a deserter from the British service, the Captain would have been fully justified in detaining him for the purposes of punishment.

It may be that in this case it was not established by proof that the seaman was a deserter, but if the Captain had reasonable grounds for believing him to be so, it was right that the seaman should be detained in order to obtain such proof; and such right of detention would intervene and prevent effect being given to the claim made on the part of the United States' Consul-General at Yokohama, and that under these circumstances the British Government is not prepared to disavow the acts of Captain Eaton.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we concur generally with the proposed draft, but we desire to submit the following observations with reference to the reasoning contained in p. 2 of the draft, with which we are not able entirely to concur.

We quite agree that there is nothing in the Treaty to waive any part of the territorial sovereignty of Great Britain in the Newfoundland waters, or to give the citizens of the United States any privilege or advantage in them over British subjects. But it does not appear to us to follow that the Treaty may not, as a matter of international obligation, have limited the extent to which the territorial sovereignty could properly be exercised in legislation restricting the rights of fishing.

We think the United States' Government might well concede that Great Britain has not admitted the United States to participation in her right of sovereignty in Newfoundland waters, and that the Treaty has no protective operation in favour of American against British fishermen, and yet contend that it would be a violation of the rights acquired by the United States under the Treaty, if by legislation the right of fishing in Newfoundland waters was substantially restricted or limited.

We fully agree that it would be quite consistent with the Treaty to enact any reasonable police regulations, and also to pass any reasonable laws, having for their object the more convenient and beneficial enjoyment of the fishery; but we are not satisfied that legislation going beyond what was necessary for these purposes could be justified, even though it could be shown to affect British and American fishermen impartially.

Annex.

Sir, Foreign Office, August , 1880.

Her Majesty's Government have carefully considered the correspondence which has taken place between their predecessors and the Government of the United States respecting the disturbance which occurred at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and they have approached this subject with the most earnest desire to arrive at an amicable solution of the differences which have unfortunately arisen between the two Governments on the construction of the provisions of the Treaties which regulate the rights of United States' fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland.

In the first place, I desire that there should be no possibility of misconception as to the views entertained by Her Majesty's Government respecting the conduct of the Newfoundland fishermen in violently interfering with the United States' fishermen, and destroying or damaging some of their nets. Her Majesty's Government have no hesitation in admitting that this proceeding was quite indefensible, and is much to be regretted. No sense of injury to their rights, however well founded, could, under the circumstances, justify the British fishermen in taking the law into their own hands, and committing acts of violence; but I will revert by and by to this feature in the case, and will now proceed to the important question raised in this controversy, whether, under the Treaty of Washington, the United States' fishermen are bound to observe the Fishery Regulations of Newfoundland in common with British subjects.

Without entering into any lengthy discussion on this point, I feel bound to state that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the clause in the Treaty of Washington which provides that the citizens of the United States shall be entitled, "in common with British subjects," to fish in Newfoundland waters within the limits of British sovereignty, means that the American and the British fishermen shall fish in these waters upon terms of equality; and not that there shall be an exemption of American fishermen from any reasonable regulations to which British fishermen are subject.

Her Majesty's Government entirely concur in Mr. Marcy's Circular of the 28th March, 1856. The principle therein laid down appears to them perfectly sound, and as applicable to the fishery provisions of the Treaty of Washington as to those of the Treaty which Mr. Marcy had in view. They cannot, therefore, admit the accuracy of the opinion expressed in Mr. Evarts' letter to Mr. Welsh of the 28th September, 1878, "that the fishery rights of the United States conceded by the Treaty of Washington are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland," if, by that opinion, anything inconsistent with Mr. Marcy's principle is really intended. Her Majesty's Government, however, fully admit that, if any such local Statutes could be shown to be inconsistent with the express stipulations, or even with the spirit, of the Treaty, they would not be within the category of those reasonable regulations, by which American (in common with British) fishermen ought to be bound; and they observe, on the other hand, with much satisfaction, that Mr. Evarts, at the close of his letter to Mr. Welsh of the 1st August, 1879, after expressing regret at "the conflict of interests which the exercise of the Treaty privileges enjoyed by the United States appears to have developed," expressed himself as follows:—

"There is no intention on the part of this [the United States'] Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the colonial fishermen.

"While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet if the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States' Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits."

Her Majesty's Government do not interpret these expressions in any sense derogatory to the sovereign authority of Great Britain in the territorial waters of Newfoundland, by which only regulations having the force of law within those waters can be made. So regarding the proposal, they are pleased not only to recognize in it an indication that the desire of Her Majesty's Government to arrive at a friendly and speedy settlement of this question is fully reciprocated by the Government of the United States, but also to discern in it the basis of a practical settlement of the difficulty; and I have the honour to request that you will inform Mr. Evarts that Her Majesty's Government, with a view to avoiding further discussion and future misunderstandings, are quite willing to confer with the Government of the United States respecting the establishment of regulations under which the subjects of both parties to the Treaty of Washington shall have the full and equal enjoyment of any fishery which, under that Treaty, is to be used in common. The duty of enacting and enforcing such regulations, when agreed upon, would, of course, rest with the Power having the sovereignty of the shore and waters in each case.

As regards the claim of the United States' fishermen to compensation for the injuries and losses which they are alleged to have sustained in consequence of the violent obstruction which they encountered from British fishermen at Fortune Bay on the occasion referred to, I have to state that Her Majesty's Government are quite willing that they should be indemnified for any injuries and losses which, upon a joint inquiry, may be found to have been sustained by them, and in respect of which they are reasonably entitled to compensation; but on this point I have to observe that a claim is put forward by them for the loss of fish which had been caught, or which, but for the interference of the British fishermen, might have been caught, by means of strand fishing, a mode of fishing to which, under the Treaty of Washington, they were not entitled to resort.

The prosecution by them of the strand fishery being clearly in excess of their Treaty privileges, Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that, on further consideration, the United States' Government will not be disposed to support a claim in respect of the loss of the fish which they had caught, or might have caught, by that process.

Fortune Bay. Agree with Law Officers' Report of September 27 as to draft reply to United States' Minister.

I DO not perceive the difference between the present view of the Law Officers* and my own, except that they think there may be some expressions in the draft despatch capable of being so construed as to seem inconsistent with the principle (in which I entirely agree, and which I have myself laid down) that any local regulations, not substantially consistent with the enjoyment of the rights of fishing conceded to the United States by the Treaty of Washington, would be unreasonable, and would not be binding under that Treaty on the United States.

And approve alterations in draft.

Although I do not myself see that there was in the draft despatch anything fairly open to a misconstruction of that kind, I think it will nevertheless be improved by the omission of the parts proposed to be left out by Sir Julian Pauncefote, provided it is also in other respects altered, as suggested by myself in red ink, in the copy returned herewith.

Blockade of Orinoco. Venezuelan Decree abolishing Custom-house at Ciudad Bolivar; prohibiting trade, and proposal to treat foreign vessels fitted out for war by insurgents as pirates.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Carácas (No. 12)† enclosing a Decree issued on the 10th February last by the President of Venezuela, in consequence of the outbreak of disturbances in the State of Guyana.

That that Decree abolished the custom-house at Ciudad Bolivar, prohibited all trade after certain dates with the Orinoco, directed the capture and trial as smugglers of all vessels entering the Orinoco after the dates fixed by the Decree; and ordained that all vessels fitted out for warfare by the insurgents in the Orinoco or in its vicinity should be considered as pirates.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would be so good as to favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the terms of that Decree, and as to the steps that Her Majesty's Government should take in regard to it.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 6th instant, transmitting two further despatches (Nos. 13 and 17)‡ from Her Majesty's Minister at Carácas, relative to the Decree of the Venezuelan Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That in our opinion a strong protest should be made against that part of the Decree which provides that "foreign vessels found fitted out for warfare by the insurgents in the Orinoco or in the vicinities shall be considered as pirates."

Subject to the above observation we see no objection to the Decree.

The Decree may, we think, be properly published in the "Gazette."

A sufficient force should be sent for the protection of British interests from any high handed acts which Her Majesty's Minister at Carácas anticipates as probable, and also for the purpose of warning British ships and perhaps ships of other countries from entering the Orinoco.

We think the Decree establishing the blockade should also be published in the "Gazette."

Island of Patos, or Goose Island. Venezuelan claim to right of Sovereignty over.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th February last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us papers* relative to a claim put forward by the Government of Venezuela to the Island of Patos, or Goose Island, a small islet situated in the channel between the Venezuelan coast and the British Colony of Trinidad.

That we should see from those papers that Her Majesty's Government contended that the Islet of Patos was a dependency of Trinidad; and that in support of that contention they relied upon a grant of that and two other islets by Don J. M. Chacon, Governor of Trinidad, to the municipality of Port of Spain, the chief town of that island, in the year 1791; the territory now belonging to Venezuela and the Island of Trinidad being, at that date, possessions of the Spanish Crown.

That the Island of Trinidad having been captured by the British forces in 1797, was formally ceded to the British Crown by Article IV of the Treaty of Amiens of the 27th March, 1802, and that Her Majesty's Government maintained that the cession included, as a matter of course, all the small adjacent islets, which had, up to that time, been considered as dependencies of Trinidad. (See Grant of Patos and other islets to Municipal Corporation of Trinidad. Print, p. 3. Copy of Capitulation of 18th February, 1797. Treaty of Amiens.)

That the Venezuelan Government, on the other hand, dispute the validity of the grant made in 1791, on the ground that it was not ratified by the King of Spain.

That they further contended that the Island of Trinidad was the only one of those adjoining the territory now belonging to Venezuela which was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of 1802, and they therefore claimed that all the other islands so situated passed to Venezuela under the Treaty with Spain of the 30th March, 1845.

That Her Majesty's Government did not admit the contentions of the Venezuelan Government, but that, apart from the question of the original validity of the British claim, they relied upon the fact that the Islet of Patos had been held and treated as a dependency of the British Colony of Trinidad, ever since the occupation of that island in 1797—that no question as to the right of Great Britain to sovereignty over that islet was raised until the year 1859, and that thus uninterrupted and undisputed possession for a period of sixty-two years conferred upon Great Britain a prescriptive right which could not now be called in question.

That on that point Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer to the authorities on the subject of usucaption and prescription, as applicable to the title to national property, cited in Creasy on International Law (sections 250-255, pp. 249-255).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to observe that Sir Arthur Gordon (then Governor of Trinidad) in his despatch of the 8th July, 1867 (Print, p. 11) pointed out that if the principle contended for by Venezuela be correct, that the Act of Cession applied to Trinidad alone, the Islands of Morros, Huevos, and Chaccuchacaro would, equally with Patos, be excluded from its operation, and their loss, giving as it would the entire control of all the northern entrances to the Gulf of Paria to Venezuela, would be a serious injury to Trinidad.

That the arguments of the Venezuelan Government in support of their claim to the Island of Patos were contained in the note from Señor Seijos to Mr. Fagan of the 15th February, 1867 (Print, p. 6).

That the answer of Her Majesty's Government to the note was contained in Lord Stanley's despatch No. 31 of the 27th August, 1867 (Print, p. 15), and Mr. Joel's communication thereof to Señor Gutierrez on the 9th November following (Print, p. 16).

That the question was again raised by Señor Calcano, in his letter to the Earl of Derby of the 14th November, 1876 (Print, p. 22), and by Señor de Royas in his letter to the Earl of Derby of the 15th February, 1877 (Print, p. 24), and in his letter to your Lordship of the 18th May, 1879 (annexed).

That to that last communication your Lordship, with the concurrence of the Colonial Office, replied in the terms of the concluding paragraphs of your Lordship's letter to Señor de Royas of the 10th January, 1880.

That on the 12th January Señor de Royas called at the Foreign Office and verbally intimated his dissent from the views therein expressed. That he argued that Her Majesty's Government could not set up a title to the Islet of Patos by usucaption or prescription; that the cession under which they claimed was invalid ab initio, and that their claim had been protested against by Venezuela from the earliest moment. That he urged that the question be referred to arbitration.

That under these circumstances Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there was any substantial doubt in regard to the title of Great Britain over the Island of Patos.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Require further evidence as to Islet of Patos being a dependency of Trinidad.

That, before advising your Lordship more fully upon the conflicting claims of Great Britain and Venezuela to the Island of Patos, we desire to be informed what evidence can be produced to establish the fact stated in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote, "that the Islet of Patos has been held and treated as a Dependency of the British Colony of Trinidad ever since the occupation of that island in 1797."

Succession duties. Proposed Declaration between British and Würtemberg Governments.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence relating to a duty of 10 per cent. levied on all property in Würtemberg inherited by British subjects.†

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to transmit to us, for our consideration, the draft of a Declaration between the British and Würtemberg Governments, the object of which was to place the subjects of one country, in all that related to succession to property in the other country, on precisely the same footing as native subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the Declaration, so far as this country is concerned, is not needed, since, in this country, subjects of Würtemberg are, in matters of succession and similar duties, exactly under the same laws as British subjects.

The Declaration, on the part of the Government, may lead to some observations on the power of the Crown in matters of taxation, and we should suggest that your Lordship should not allow the Declaration, but, if possible, obtain the concession for Würtemberg, upon informing that Government of the state of the English law.

Draft Declaration between British and Würtemberg Governments respecting Succession Duties.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of His Majesty the King of Würtemberg, being desirous of placing on a satisfactory footing the question of succession duties on property inherited by British subjects in Würtemberg, and by Würtemburg subjects in the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, the Undersigned, duly authorized to this effect, have agreed as follows:—

In all that relates to succession to property by British subjects in the dominions of His Majesty the King of Würtemberg, and by Würtemberg subjects in the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, the subjects of the one country shall be placed in the other on precisely the same footing as native subjects.

No deduction shall be made on account of the transfer of property from one State to the other, and all deductions from property which have hitherto taken place on that account, under any designation whatsoever, shall be abrogated by virtue of the present Declaration, without any distinction, whether such transfer of property result from authorized emigration, purchase, barter, donation, inheritance, or any other legitimate cause.

The present Declaration shall come into force immediately on the signature thereof, and shall apply to all future succession to property as well as to all transfers of property of any kind, the exportation of which has not as yet been effected.

In witness whereof the Undersigned have signed the present Declaration, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

Succession duties. Proposed unilateral Declaration by Würtemberg Government.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th January last, on the subject of a Declaration between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Würtemberg, with regard to succession duties, and in which we suggested, for reasons given in that Report, that it would be inexpedient for Her Majesty's Government to agree to a Declaration between the two Governments, but that they should, if possible, obtain from Würtemberg the desired concession in favour of British subjects, upon informing the Würtemberg Government of the state of the English law in that respect, Sir Julian Pauncefote was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, the draft of a unilateral Declaration which your Lordship proposed to submit to the Würtemberg Government for their approval, stipulating that British subjects should henceforward be placed in all that relates to duties on succession to property in Würtemberg on precisely the same footing as

Würtemberg subjects; and Sir Julian was to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make on the draft Declaration, or on the accompanying draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Stuttgart on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the proposed draft provides for duties other than those on succession to property; and the enumeration of those subjects of duties may perhaps lead to some difficulty from confusion or omission.

We suggest, for your Lordship's consideration, either that the Würtemberg Government should itself draw up and submit for consideration a draft Declaration, or that the draft transmitted to us should be altered by omitting paragraphs 2 and 3, and that paragraph 1 should be as follows:—

British subjects shall henceforth, in all that relates to duties on deductions on the transfer of property, or the exportation of property in Würtemberg, be placed on precisely the same footing as Würtemberg subjects.

2. No deduction shall therefore be made on account of the transfer of property from the dominions of His Majesty the King of Würtemberg to the dominions of Her Britannic Majesty, and all deductions from property which have hitherto taken place on that account, under any designation whatsoever, shall be abrogated by virtue of the present Declaration, without any distinction, whether such transfer of property results from authorized emigration, purchase, barter, donation, inheritance, or any other legitimate cause.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received April 14.)

Temple, April 13, 1881.

My Lord,

Criminal jurisdiction on the West Coast of Africa. Proposed Order in Council.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft which had been prepared by Mr. Reilly of an Order in Council providing for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction over Her Majesty's subjects resident in or resorting to the western parts of Africa.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that it was found that in the development of trade on the West African Coast British subjects, both European and coloured, were in the habit of ascending the African rivers, and in some cases, as in the Niger, establishing themselves several hundred miles in the interior, where they carried on trade far beyond the reach of any existing controlling authority.

That at some of those establishments great irregularities prevailed. Slave Trade was carried on, and that even murders took place, and that no provision at present existed for dealing adequately with the offences committed, and we were referred to the Report of Law Officers of the 9th August, 1877.

That in order to provide a remedy for that state of things, which should not be allowed to continue, the draft of the proposed Order in Council had been prepared, giving power to such of Her Majesty's Consular Officers on the West African Coast as might be authorized for the purpose, to hold Consular Courts anywhere within their Consular districts, to exercise a limited criminal jurisdiction over British subjects, and to arrest and send offending parties for trial, or to undergo their sentence, to the nearest, or most convenient, British Colony.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose the papers noted in the margin* bearing upon the subject, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the provisions of the proposed Order were such as might properly be submitted to the Queen for Her Majesty's approval.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive our Report upon the matter at our early convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

My Lord, Temple, August 11, 1881.

Murder of a slave-girl at Onitsha by W. F. John.

Williams and his wife implicated.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our attention to the two accompanying Reports of our predecessors, dated respectively the 27th March and 10th May, 1878, and to the notes of the evidence taken before Consul Hewett, and he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether a Commission, as proposed in the Colonial Office letter of the 1st July, should be issued under the Acts 46 Geo. III, cap. 54, and 57 Geo. III, cap. 53, for the purpose of bringing the man Williams and his wife to trial at Sierra Leone.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Williams and his wife may be tried by a Commission under 57 Geo. III, cap. 53, sec. 1.

That we entertain some doubt whether a Commission can be issued in this case. The question turns upon the construction of 57 Geo. III, cap. 53, sec. 1. That section, after dealing with murder and manslaughter committed in Honduras, proceeds to treat with like offences committed in other places "by the master or crew of any British ship or vessel, or by any person sailing in or belonging thereto, or that shall have sailed in or belonged to and have quitted any British ship or vessel to live in any of the said places, or that shall be there living." It has to be considered whether the latter words refer only to persons who have arrived in British vessels and quitted them to live in the places referred to, or include all persons (limited necessarily to British subjects) living in those places.

We do not enter upon the arguments which may be employed in support of either construction, but say that, upon the whole, we incline to the opinion that the words are broad enough to include the latter view, and that, therefore, Williams and his wife may be tried by a Commission under the Statute referred to.

We have, &c.

AFRICA.

No. 1 b. [Colonial Office.]

[May 6, 1881.]

Note by the Lord Chancellor.

Power of Crown to grant self-government to the Transvaal.

1. BY the Sand River Convention (16th January, 1853) the Commissioners representing the Queen "guaranteed in the fullest manner, on the part of the British Government, to the emigrant farmers beyond the Vaal River the right to manage their own affairs, and to govern themselves without any interference on the part of Her Majesty the Queen's Government in the territory beyond to the north of the Vaal River." (Orange River correspondence, printed the 10th April, 1854, p. 86.)

2. In 1877 Sir Theophilus Shepstone, acting under powers conferred by a Commission from Her Majesty, took possession of the territory of the Transvaal Republic, and declared it to be annexed to, and to have become part of, Her Majesty's dominions. This step was "taken without, on the one hand, any act of cession by the President or the Volksraad (the Legislature of the Republic), though at the instance of a large number of the inhabitants; and without, on the other hand, any exertion of force; though a corps of British soldiers had been encamped on the frontier of the Republic," and (after the Proclamation) marched into it. The late Law Officers (Sir John Holker and Sir H. Giffard) advised—quite correctly in my opinion—that the territory lately under the Government of the Transvaal Republic was to be regarded as conquered or ceded territory, and that Her Majesty had the same power, by Order in Council, of legislating for the inhabitants of the territory as she possessed in cases of conquered or ceded Colonies. (See their Report of the 12th May, 1877.)

3. Whatever legislation has since taken place for the territory in question has been by Order in Council, revocable at the pleasure of the Crown. The Transvaal territory is not mentioned in, or in any way directly, expressly, or necessarily legislated for by, "The South Africa Act, 1877." The events which (if they had happened) might have brought it within the scope of that Act never happened in fact.

4. It is, in my opinion, within the legislative power of the Crown, by Order in Council and Proclamation, to give to the inhabitants of this territory a free constitution, with complete powers of self-government (including the power to elect their own Governor), under the "suzerainty of the Crown; and, by such a constitution, fully to carry out the terms of peace agreed upon between Sir Evelyn Wood and the Boer leaders. The term "suzerainty" denotes not the total relinquishment and abdication, but only some restriction of the powers of sovereignty; and, as long as there is "suzerainty" there must be subjection, though in a qualified sense.

5. This case, therefore, falls far short of what was done with respect to the Orange River territory in 1853, and the relinquishment of British sovereignty which then took place, and which has since been acquiesced in without objection by Parliament (and must now be assumed to have been valid and effectual), is a precedent, à fortiori, for whatever may now be done by the Crown. That relinquishment was carried into effect by Order in Council and Proclamation, without any Act of Parliament; it was done with the full knowledge of Parliament, and, notwithstanding protests and remonstrances (by those who did not wish their subjection to the British Crown to cease) as loud and vehement as those which we now hear. Considering the local, historical, and other relations between the inhabitants of the Orange Free State and those of the Transvaal territory, it appears to me to be impossible to dispute the power of the Crown to carry into effect, by Order in Council and Proclamation, the arrangements intended without also disputing the title of the Orange Free State to its present autonomy and independence.

6. With respect to the opinions which were expressed at the time of the relinquishment of the Orange territory, those of the then Law Officers, adopted and acted upon by the Crown with the acquiescence of Parliament and of the nation, must now be taken to have been correct, whoever else may have then dissented from them. It is true that an opinion (in writing) adverse to the relinquishment was given at that time by the late Mr. Justice Wills and myself—not on the ground that the Crown could not, under any circumstances, cede any British territory without an Act of Parliament, nor (as far as I now remember) on the ground of a distinction between a cession in time of war, and one in time of peace, but because this was not a cession to any foreign Power, but was a mere renunciation of sovereignty. We thought that, as it was a principle of law that no man could divest himself of his allegiance, so he could not be absolved from it, or lose his recognized right to the protection of British law by the mere will of the Sovereign—that, having been once a British subject, he could not become homo nullius, a citizen of no country, and a subject of no Government. I do not stop to consider what force there may have been in this view, because (as I have said) it was practically overruled, and Great Britain is now bound, as a nation, by the transactions which overruled it.

7. The Act to enable George III to make peace with the revolted American Colonies (22 Geo. III, cap. 46) was rendered necessary by a wholly different state of circumstances. Many Acts of Parliament relating directly and expressly to those Colonies had been passed, and not a few (of which 16 Geo. III, cap. 5, may be taken as a sample) were passed during the war of Independence, and expressly with reference to it. No peace could be made with the revolted Colonies (still less a peace recognizing their independence) while these Acts of Parliament continued in force. Therefore it was that the Statute in question enabled the King to conclude a peace or truce, "any law, Act, or Acts of Parliament, &c., to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding;" and not only so, but also by Letters Patent "to repeal, annul, and make void, or to suspend the operation and effect of any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to the said Colonies."

8. I do not think it necessary to enter into the question of the power of the Crown, in time of peace, to cede British territory to a foreign State without the consent of Parliament. There are several precedents (chiefly Indian and African) of the exercise of this power. The question was very fully discussed (though there was, in the result, no occasion to decide it) before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1875 in an Indian case (Danodharfordhar v. Deeram Kanji), which will be found reported in the Law Reports (Appeal cases, vol. 1, pp. 333–383). The Court in India had decided adversely to the right of cession; but the Judicial Committee (on which both Lord Cairns and I sat) was by no means disposed to concur in that view. In the report of the arguments of Sir W. Harcourt and Sir James Fitzjames Stephen for the Appeal (pp. 349–363), a concise account of the instances of cession on which they relied to establish the general power of the Crown will be found, and will repay perusal.

As to who are British subjects in the Transvaal.

1. WHO shall be defined to be British subjects within the meaning of this Convention?

2. What shall be the condition of—

(c.) British subjects (and their children) who became domiciled in the Transvaal after the annexation?

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.

It appears to me that it is necessary to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon these very important questions.

I know of no way in which those who are once British subjects can cease to be so, except (1) the cession or abandonment of all territorial rights of the British Crown, in a particular territory, in favour of some foreign or other Independent State or Power, or (2) expatriation, under the terms of the Naturalization Acts.

But for the Orange River precedent I might have doubted whether the mere renunciation of sovereign rights by the Crown over a territory not ceded to, or conquered by, any Independent State or Power having a political existence apart from such renunciation, would come within the first of these two categories. But I think this point must be regarded as now practically settled by the Orange River precedent; not, indeed, as to the status, after such renunciation, of those who were previously natural-born British subjects by (what may be described as) any extra-territorial title, but as to the status of those whose title to be regarded as British subjects depended only on their domicil or inhabitancy within the borders of the abandoned territory.

In the present case I cannot perceive that any absolute renunciation of British sovereignty, similar to that which took place when the Orange River territory was abandoned, has taken place, or is intended to take place, in the Transvaal. The reservation of (what it has been thought convenient to call) "Suzerain" rights, has always appeared to me to make the two cases quite different. There is, indeed, to be a limitation of the former plenum dominium of the British Crown, which will secure to the Transvaal people, under certain conditions, rights of self-government, in most respects equal to those which they would have if they were entirely independent. But (as I have before said) these are rights, which, in theory of law, will be granted by virtue of, and will be derived from, the plenum dominium of Her Majesty; and which, to give them unquestionable legality in this country, must be granted (in the absence of Imperial legislation) by an Order in Council, and Proclamation consequent thereon, of the British Crown.

My impression is, that (in the absence of Imperial legislation) all the three classes (a), (b), and (c), mentioned in the second question now proposed by Lord Kimberley, will continue to be British subjects, in the view of British law.

To the first question, "Who shall be defined to be British subjects, within the meaning of this Convention," I find it difficult to give any satisfactory answer, because (if the view which I have above expressed is correct) I do not see how any authority less than that of the Imperial Parliament can give effect to any such definition, so as to deprive any of the classes referred to of any legal rights which may properly belong to British subjects as such.

The intention of the telegram of the 9th July seems to be that all the persons belonging to any of the classes (a), (b), and (c), should be entitled to retain the status of British subjects, after the Convention, in the Transvaal if they elect to do so, and register their names (as having made such election) within twelve months, with the British Resident. But what privileges or other advantages they would gain by reason of such election within the Transvaal territory (except the exemption from all compulsory military service mentioned in the telegram of the 1*st July*) is not (to me) apparent. And, if there is to be any law of compulsory military service under the Local Government to be established in the Transvaal territory, it seems to be scarcely possible that an option to become exempt from it, by registering themselves within twelve months, can be reasonably claimed for all the present inhabitants of that territory.

was to request that we would take the papers then submitted into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to whether Williams and his wife could be arrested and sent to Sierra Leone for trial with John, as proposed in the last-mentioned letter of the 1st July. That, in the event of our being of opinion that there was no legal power to arrest them, then your Lordship would wish to be advised whether they should nevertheless be taken and brought to trial at the risk of any consequences.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it is not perfectly clear what power exists for arresting offenders whose offences are committed, not on the high seas, but in countries where no civilized Government exists. But, having regard to the provisions of the Acts of the 46th and 57th Geo. III, and of the 11th Wm. III, which is recited in the former of those Acts, we think that Williams and his wife may lawfully be apprehended under a warrant issued under the hands of the Commissioners appointed to try the case. We think it well to call attention to the fact that the jurisdiction of the Commissioners appointed under the 57th Geo. III only extends to the trial of murders and manslaughters, as we observe that it has been suggested that charges of offences against the Slave Trade should be added.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd January, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit the papers relating to a Law of Naturalization, which was promulgated in Hungary on the 24th December, 1879,* and inclosing a form of notice which had been issued by Her Majesty's Consul-General in that country, calling the attention of British subjects resident in Hungary to its provisions, and that he (Sir J. Pauncefote) was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the provision of the law in question imposing the status of Hungarian subjects on foreigners by reason of residence in the country for five years was open to objection in an international point of view, and, if not, whether the notice contained in Mr. Gosling's despatch No. 27 of the 8th December, 1880, might be approved or required amendment.

That a French translation of the Law in question would be found in Mr. Gosling's despatch to Sir H. Elliot No. 54 of the 19th December, 1879, and a copy of the Treaty between Great Britain and Austria of the 5th December, 1876, was transmitted therewith. That a copy of the notice published by Mr. Gosling was inclosed in his despatch No. 27 of the 8th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Law not open to objection in an international point of view.

That, in our opinion, the provision of the law in question, imposing the status of Hungarian subjects upon foreigners by reason of a certain number of years' consecutive residence, is not open to objection in an international point of view. We would observe that in the printed copy of the law, which is before us, and which purports to be a print of the copy sent by Mr. Gosling, section 48 (the section referred to by him), provides that foreigners shall become naturalized after twenty, and not after five years continuous residence. We presume that this is either a mistranslation, or that the law was altered between the 19th December, when Mr. Gosling sent the copy, and the 24th of that month, when it was promulgated. Although it seems very doubtful whether the registration required to preserve nationality should not be by the Hungarian authorities and not at the British Consulate, yet, as the year within which the foreigner, desirous of retaining his nationality, was required by the law to prove that he had preserved it, expired on the 24th December, 1880, it does not seem necessary to consider how far Mr. Gosling's notice was susceptible of amendment, or what amendments should be made.

Not now necessary to consider Mr. Gosling's notice.

Notice to British Subjects.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General for Hungary, desires to draw the attention of British subjects resident in Hungary and the territories belonging thereto to paragraph 48 of Law L of the 24th December, 1879, which prescribes that:—

"Whosoever shall have resided in Hungary, or the territories belonging thereto, at the time the present Law came into force (namely, the 24th December, 1879), for a period of at least five consecutive years, although at different places, and whose name has been entered in the Register of Tax-payers in any parish within the said dominions, shall be deemed to be a Hungarian subject, unless he shall prove, within one year from the date above referred to (the 24th December, 1879), to the Magistrate of the place in which he resides, that he has retained his foreign nationality."

Under these circumstances, and in order to obviate difficulties which might arise to subjects of Her Britannic Majesty in establishing their nationality, the Undersigned suggests the advisability of British subjects resident in Hungary having their names entered in a Register kept for that purpose at Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate-General at Buda-Pesth.

Arrest and imprisonment of Mr. P. Musgrave at St. Hubert for vagabondage.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 14th January instant, stating that he transmitted to us, by direction of your Lordship, the correspondence noted in the margin,* and relating to the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Philip Musgrave (a British subject and a retired Naval Officer) by the police authorities at St. Hubert, in Belgium, on a charge of vagabondage.

That the case was brought to the notice of your Lordship by Mr. Musgrave's solicitors, Messrs. Hadden, Woodward, and McLeod, in their letter of the 8th November last, which contained a statement of his complaint against the Belgian authorities and also against Her Majesty's Legation.

That on receipt of that letter your Lordship requested Her Majesty's Minister at Brussels to furnish a Report on the case, and you were to refer us to Sir Savile Lumley's despatch No. 174 of the 12th November transmitting the same.

That your Lordship being of opinion that the case still called for further inquiry, Her Majesty's Minister was instructed to bring it to the notice of the Belgian Government, and Sir Savile Lumley, in his despatch No. 195 of the 10th December, transmitted a letter on the subject from the Belgian Minister of Justice, and offers further explanation vindicating the course pursued in that case by Her Majesty's Legation.

That the substance of the explanations furnished by the Belgian Minister was communicated to Messrs. Hadden, Woodward, and McLeod in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 31st December, and they were informed that, while it was to be regretted that Mr. Musgrave should have been arrested as a vagabond, your Lordship considered that the circumstances of the case were not such as to warrant further diplomatic action, at all events, pending the result of the legal proceedings which Mr. Musgrave proposed to institute against the Belgian officials concerned.

That Lord Tenterden was to invite our attention to the reply of Messrs. Hadden, Woodward, and McLeod to the above communication, which was dated the 6th instant, and in which they denied the accuracy of the statements contained in the letter of the Belgian Minister of Justice, and requested to be informed whether your Lordship would take any further steps in the matter, or whether Mr. Musgrave was to be remitted to such remedy (if any) as the law of Belgium might afford him. Your Lordship had no reason to doubt that the law of Belgium did afford a remedy against arbitrary and malicious acts on the part of police officers, and your Lordship was disposed to think that, under all the circumstances, and especially in view of the conflict which existed as to the facts, the case was one which should be left, in the first instance, to the decision of the local Tribunals. That, on that point, Lord Tenterden was to refer to the last paragraph of the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 26th August, 1879, at p. 30 of the collection for that year.

That your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion as to whether any further diplomatic action was called for and with such observations as we might have to offer on the case generally.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Further diplomatic action not necessary.

That we think that Mr. Musgrave's solicitors may be informed that inasmuch as a representation has already been made to the Belgian Minister of Justice, and the Commissioner of Police has been reprimanded, Mr. Musgrave's case, as it now stands, does not demand any further diplomatic action, and that gentleman should, if so advised, prosecute his threatened proceedings against the Belgian police authorities.

We agree with the opinion of the Law Officers of the 20th August, 1879, on the point referred to in Lord Tenterden's letter.

It is singular that the circumstance that Mr. Musgrave was shooting with two Belgian landowners by their invitation was not stated till January of the present year, either in Mr. Musgrave's letters or those of Messrs. Hadden. Either of these landowners would apparently have been a better reference than M. Verrou or Vezzon to disprove the charge of "vagabondage."

Grant of Charter to North British Borneo Company.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th ultimo stating that, with reference to our Report of the 17th September last* on the application of Mr. Alfred Dent, of the firm of Dent, Brothers, and Company, of London, for the grant of a Royal Charter of Incorporation to an Association in course of formation for the development of the northern part of the Island of Borneo, under certain concessions of territory and grant of sovereign rights thereover from the Sultans of Brunei and Sulu, and that he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) was directed by your Lordship to state that in a letter from your Lordship's Department, dated the 16th December last,† Mr. Dent was informed that, after a careful consideration of the printed statement presented by him to the Foreign Office in December 1878, Her Majesty's Government were disposed, under the special circumstances of the case, to recommend to the favourable consideration of the Queen his application for a Royal Charter on the conditions set out in his statement, and subject to such other conditions as Her Majesty's Government might be advised to have inserted therein, when the draft should be submitted for their approval.

That in a letter of the same date from your Lordship's Department to the Privy Council Office,† the Lord President was informed of the decision arrived at, and his Lordship was requested to give the necessary directions on the petition for a Charter when presented by Mr. Dent, and to cause the draft of the Charter to be submitted to your Lordship's Department with a view to the insertion therein of such clauses as your Lordship, after consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, might deem expedient.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote had now the honour to lay before us, by the direction of your Lordship, a letter from the Privy Council Office,‡ transmitting a copy of the draft of a Charter which had been applied for by Mr. Dent, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it might be approved by your Lordship in its present form, or whether it required any modification or addition.

That Sir Julian was at the same time to transmit to you a letter from the Colonial Office,§ containing observations on the draft, together with the reply‖ which had been returned thereto by your Lordship's Department; and he was further to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the questions raised by the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Effect with reference to sovereignty over territory,

That in our opinion the granting of the Charter will not have the effect of vesting in Her Majesty the sovereignty over the territory in question, and the Sultans of Brunei and Sulu will be Suzerains, notwithstanding the delegation of their authority to a private Association incorporated under Her Majesty's Charter.

and suing of Company in Colonial Courts.

The clauses empowering the Company to sue and be sued in the Courts of the Colonies and to hold land in the Colonies are, as is pointed out in the letter of the 13th January, 1881, to the Colonial Office, usual provisions in Charters similar to that now under consideration, and great inconvenience, if not injustice, would probably be occasioned if such clauses were omitted.

Approve Charter with modification.

With reference to the terms of the proposed Charter, and apart from the questions raised by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and above referred to, the Charter may, in our opinion, be approved in its present form, except that we would suggest the insertion at the end of clause 5 of the words "if he is willing to undertake the same."

Chilean excesses during their advance on Lima.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches, as marked in the margin,* from Her Majesty's Minister in Peru, reporting the occurrences which took place on the occasion of the advance of the Chilean troops on Lima, and the battles fought on the 13th and 15th January last which resulted in the surrender of the city.

That the excesses committed by the Chilean troops on that occasion were of a still graver character than those which occurred at Mollendo and Pisagua, and which formed the subject of the Report of our predecessors of the 25th September, 1879 (vol. 1879, p. 9).

Plunder of Mr. St. John's house and murder of Dr. Maclean.

Sir Julian Pauncefote inclosed the draft instructions which on receipt of Mr. St. John's despatch No. 9 your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Santiago, desiring him to enter a protest against the acts of the Chilean troops in connection with the plunder and destruction of Mr. St. John's house at Chorillos, and the murder of Dr. Maclean, the Legation Physician, residing therein.

That Sir Julian was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government should take any further action at present respecting the outrages on the lives and property of neutrals, reported in both the accompanying despatches, or whether it would be better to await more precise particulars.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Need not await further information before taking action.

That, in our opinion, it is not necessary for Her Majesty's Government to await more precise particulars before taking action in consequence of the reported outrages on the lives and property of neutrals.

Her Majesty's Government may now, we consider, properly communicate to the Chilean Government the information received respecting those outrages, and ask what steps the Chilean Government propose to take for the purpose of inquiring into those outrages, and for making compensation to the persons and families of the persons who may have suffered.

Should act with other Governments.

We, however, suggest, for your Lordship's consideration, whether it would not in this case be advisable to act in concert with the French and Italian and other Governments whose subjects may have suffered.

Mr. St. John's attention should, we consider, be directed to the conduct of the mob as described by him, so that no charge be made against the Chileans on account of acts committed by the populace or Peruvians.

Registration of mortgages, bills of sale, and co-partnerships. Regulations of 1866 invalid.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 23rd October last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan,* inclosing a copy of a Report from Her Majesty's Crown Advocate at Shanghae, respecting the validity of certain Regulations issued by Sir H. Parkes in 1866, under sections 85 and 90 of the China and Japan Order in Council, 1865, for the registration of mortgages, bills of sale, and co-partnerships.

That those Regulations were approved at the time by the Secretary of State, and were identical with those issued for China by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, and printed at page 213 of Hertslet's "Treaties on Trade (China)," which had also been approved by the Secretary of State, with the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, as conveyed in their Reports of the 16th February and the 30th October, 1866.

That Mr. Hannen was of opinion that the Regulations in question were not binding on British subjects, being "beyond the powers of Her Majesty's Minister granted by the Order in Council."

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take Mr. Hannen's Report into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the Regulations in question were invalid on the grounds therein stated or on any other grounds.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we agree substantially with the Report of Mr. Hannen, and think the Regulations in question are invalid. It appears to us that the power to make such Regulations is not within the authority conferred by section 85 of the Order in Council. And when the subsequent paragraphs of that Order are examined, especially sections 86 and 91, it seems clear that such Regulations as those in question were not in contemplation by the framers of the Order in Council.

The third Regulation, viz., that relating to co-partnerships, might probably well have been made by the Judge of the Supreme Court under the powers conferred by section 127; but this will not give validity to the Regulations made by Her Majesty's Minister in China.

If we had thought that the Law Officers, who were parties to the Reports of the 16th February and the 30th October, 1866, had considered the question now submitted to us, we should have arrived at the conclusion we have expressed with great doubt and hesitation. But it appears to us that the only considerations entertained by them were in themselves of such a nature, and so worded, that it was proper to approve of them. And their attention does not seem to have been directed to the question whether they were within the powers conferred on Her Majesty's Minister in China by the Order in Council.

As to jurisdiction of Supreme Court of Hong Kong in suit against Consul Hewlett of Canton.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us a paraphrase of a telegram from Her Majesty's Consul at Canton* asking to be furnished with the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown as to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong to entertain a suit instituted against him in that Colony for the recovery of damages in consequence of a Judgment given by him in his judicial capacity at Canton.

That your Lordship doubted whether his (Mr. Hewlett's) request ought to be complied with, as the suit was actually before the Supreme Court of the Colony for decision.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe, however, that the section 157 of Her Majesty's Order in Council for China and Japan,† cited in the telegram, would seem to be repealed by paragraph 8 (3) of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (4), and 42 Vict., cap. 67, and that under paragraph 160 of the Order in Council, the former jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong over British subjects in China, save as therein excepted, absolutely ceased.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to the reply which should be sent to Consul Hewlett's telegram.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Secretary of State cannot interfere.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Consul Hewlett may be informed that your Lordship cannot properly interfere on his behalf in a case which is before the Supreme Court at Hong Kong. All objection to the jurisdiction of the Court can be taken before it.

Legal Practitioners in Provincial Courts.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from the Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan, submitting, for your Lordship's approval, two Rules which he had framed under the 2nd clause of section 41 of the China and Japan Order in Council, 1865, for the admission of legal practitioners to practise in Her Majesty's provincial Courts in China, and that he was to request that we would take those Rules into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether they should be approved.

That he was at the same time to inquire whether we considered that Rule 2 should provide that only members of the legal profession should be admitted to practise in the provincial Courts, and that they should produce certificates of their status as such in the country to which they belong.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approving proposed Rules.

That, in our opinion, the proposed Rules may properly be approved by your Lordship.

There may be a difficulty sometimes in finding a sufficient number of members of the legal profession in a provincial Court, and the suitors in such Court might consequently be put to inconvenience and delay, if they were obliged to conduct their own cases in person, or were compelled to wait for a member of the legal profession.

We, therefore, think it undesirable that Rule 2 should provide that only members of the legal profession should be admitted to practise in the provincial Courts.

As to validity of marriages between British subjects in English Cathedral at Shanghae.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 7th December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Mr. Allen, the Acting British Consul at Shanghae,* asking for an authoritative statement as to the validity of marriages between British subjects, celebrated in the English Cathedral at Shanghae, with a view to its publication.

That Lord Tenterden was to inclose the Report of our predecessors of the 22nd March, 1878, which was referred to in that despatch. That though your Lordship presumed that such marriages, celebrated by a clergyman either of the English or American Episcopal Churches, would be held valid, your Lordship was of opinion, for the reasons stated in the Foreign Office despatch No. 21 of the 28th March, 1878, to Sir Harry Parkes, that it was not desirable to encourage the solemnization of marriages in China or Japan otherwise than under the Acts of Parliament referred to in the Law Officers' Report above cited, and that Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghae should not be authorized to issue any notification on the subject.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concur in the above views, and that we would favour your Lordship with our advice as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Allen's despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Such a marriage, if solemnized by an English or an American clergyman, would be valid.

That a marriage between British subjects at Shanghae, celebrated there by a clergyman in holy orders, whether American or English, is a valid marriage.

Difficulties as to registration.

One object, however, of the Consular Marriage Act was to provide and secure evidence of the marriage by registration.

The notification which Mr. Allen applies for permission to issue would probably induce British subjects to marry in the Cathedral at Shanghae, rather than under the Consular Marriage Act, and thus lose the advantage of having the marriage entered in the Consular books.

No notification on the subject to be issued.

Mr. Allen may, therefore, we think, properly be answered that, in your Lordship's opinion, the issue of the proposed notification is inexpedient, and that he is not authorized to issue any notification on the subject.

Registration of public Companies in China.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to lay before us the papers in relation to the proposed issue of an Order in Council for the registration of public Companies in China.*

That that question had occupied the attention of Her Majesty's Government at various times for several years, and that in 1879 Mr. F. S. Reilly was instructed to prepare, for consideration, the draft of an Order in Council to carry out the object in view.

That Mr. Reilly accordingly submitted to the Secretary of State the draft marked (A), together with a memorandum therein marked (B).

That, before taking any steps in the matter, it was decided to transmit the draft and memorandum to Her Majesty's Minister at Peking for his observations, and those of the Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan.

That Sir T. Wade's reply (C), dated the 16th April, 1880 (Foreign Office, Confidential 4263) was referred to Mr. Reilly, who forwarded a Report thereon (D), dated the 22nd August, 1880, to which Sir J. Pauncefote was to invite our special attention, as it sets out the particular points upon which your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion.

That those points which related to the difficulties which had been suggested in dealing with non-British shareholders were discussed in Mr. Reilly's Report, and also paragraphs 3 and 6 of his memorandum of the 29th May, 1879 (B), and that we should perceive that, in his opinion, there were no difficulties of law or procedure sufficient to interfere with the system proposed to be established under the Order in Council.

That if we should concur in that view, your Lordship considered that, as a matter of legislative expediency, the passing of such a measure was desirable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Objections to proposed Order in Council on account of the contemplated membership of foreigners.

That we have carefully considered the difficulties suggested with respect to the system proposed to be established under the Order in Council. If the membership of the Companies to be formed were limited to British subjects, we think, apart from questions of expediency, that there would be no objections to the proposed Order. But, inasmuch as it is contemplated that the membership shall not be so limited, we are unable to concur in the view taken by Mr. Reilly, that there are no difficulties of law or procedure sufficient to interfere seriously with the system proposed to be established.

As regards non-British members, it appears to us that difficulties might arise beyond those existing in the case of Companies registered in England which comprises foreigners among their members. Such Associations are created and have their domicile within British territory, and all members of such Associations are subject therefore to British law.

But it is now proposed to make a law which is to operate in a foreign country to control the rights and liabilities of persons resident there, whether such persons be or be not British subjects, whilst it is of course clear that our extra-territorial jurisdiction in China only enables us to legislate for British subjects. It is possible that the difficulty of enforcing the obligations of the foreign shareholders of the Company might be met in the manner suggested by Mr. Reilly. But we do not see how the provisions of the law which are for the protection of the shareholders are to be enforced in the case of those who are not British subjects.

How, for example, is their liability to be limited to the amount of unpaid calls in the liquidation of a limited Company, or, if the Company be unlimited, to the amount of calls made pari passu on all the shareholders?

We do not know what the law of China is; but supposing that the members of a trading Association are liable, without limit, to the debts incurred by the Association, and that a Chinese subject were proceeded against by a Chinese or foreign creditor of the Company, we do not think the Chinese Tribunals could be expected, or would be bound, to recognize the fact that, by the terms of the British law, under which the Company purported to be formed and registered, the liability of every member was limited.

And, if a foreign member were sued in his own Consular Court, it seems to us that the same difficulty would arise. It is suggested by Mr. Reilly that the incorporation would be held good by all Courts by the comity of nations, and that it would have a special claim to be held good by a foreign Court in China, which Court could only exist by virtue of the like extra-territoriality as that on which the incorporation would rest. But we are unable to concur in this view.

The creation into a corporation under the Companies Act of persons who associate themselves together for trading purposes is only another way of declaring what their rights and liabilities shall be towards each other, and also as between them and third parties. And, in our opinion, the British law is incompetent to declare this in any binding manner in China, except for the purpose of affecting British subjects. The extra-territorial jurisdiction of any Consular Court is limited to the subjects of its country, and we do not think it is bound to regard any foreign law made in China as competent to prescribe the rights and liabilities of those subjects. Any other view would lead to the conclusion that if an Association existed consisting of Chinese or foreigners only (for all the British subjects might have transferred their shares), its rights and liabilities would have to be determined wholly by British law, because the Association was registered under the British Order in Council, no matter what the rights and liabilities of the shareholders might be under the law to whose jurisdiction they were in general subject.

It may be said that the considerations to which we have called attention are, rather, reasons which should restrain Chinese or foreigners from becoming members of such Companies, than objections to the Order in Council itself. But we think it would be greatly to be deprecated that a Company should be formed by British subjects, under the apparent sanction and authority of British law, and that Chinese and foreigners should be led to become members of it, under the belief that they were protected by the limitation of the liability which the law provided, and afterwards find that, whilst British subjects were freed from liability, on the payment, perhaps, of a trifling amount, the other shareholders were not protected by the law, and were left to bear the entire liabilities of the concern.

Action against Acting Consul Giles of Amoy, in the case of the "Chiang Hock Kiang," a passenger-ship.

My Lord,
Temple, October 18, 1881.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th September, 1880, respecting the case of the British steamer "Chiang Hock Kiang," and the action brought against Mr. Giles, Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Amoy, in China, he had then the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a letter from Messrs. Lloyd, Kow Teing, Poh, and Co., the Agents for the above-named steamer at the port of Amoy, submitting various complaints against Mr. Giles.

That two actions, which had been commenced against Mr. Giles, by the owners of the steamer, for alleged illegal proceedings on his part, were ultimately settled.

Refusal of Mr. Giles to accept sureties or deposit.

That it appeared, however, that since that time the firm of Lloyd, Kow, Teing, Poh, and Co., had experienced great difficulty in clearing their passenger ships, owing, as they suggested, to the intrigues of rival firms and to the animosity of Mr. Giles, who had refused to accept the members of their firm as "sufficient" sureties to the bond of 1,000*l.* required of a master of a Chinese passenger steamer under section 4 of "The Chinese Passenger Act, 1855." That, on one occasion in September 1880, Mr. Giles agreed to accept certain persons, whom he named, as sureties, or a deposit of 1,000*l.* in lieu of sureties. That the firm paid the deposit in order to avoid the heavy commission demanded by the sureties. That since that time, however, Mr. Giles had refused to accept a deposit in lieu of sureties, and the firm had been compelled to procure sureties at great expense.

That they then asked that the members of the firm be accepted as sureties, or that they might be permitted to deposit in the hands of the emigration officer, that was, in the Consulate, the sum of 1,000*l.* in lieu of the master's bond and sureties required by the Act.

That it appeared to your Lordship that the bond and sureties could not be dispensed with, but that Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. Forrest, who had returned to his post at Amoy, might be instructed that if he should have any doubt as to the sufficiency of the members of the firm or of any persons whom they might propose as sureties, he was at liberty, nevertheless, to accept them, on a deposit of 1,000*l.* being made in the Consulate.

That before sending out instructions in the above sense, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether they were right and proper under the circumstances.

That Lord Tenterden was to inclose, in addition to the letter of Messrs. Lloyd, Kow, Teing, Poh, and Co., copies of "The Chinese Passenger Act, 1855," and of our Report of the 29th September, 1880.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approval of instructions to Consul Forrest.

That, in our opinion, the instructions proposed to be sent by your Lordship are right and proper, under the circumstances.

Panamá Ship-canal.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 27th June last, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he transmitted to us the correspondence and documents noted in the accompanying list,* and relating to the proposed establishment by the United States' Government of coaling depôts and naval stations "at proper points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Central America and of the American isthmus," with a view to the exercise of a certain control over the projected interoceanic canal.

That Lord Tenterden was to invite our attention to the inclosed Memorandum on that correspondence, showing the present position of the question, and to the Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet of the 6th May and the documents annexed thereto, among which we should find (C) a copy of the Convention between Great Britain and the United States of America of the 19th April, 1850, "relative to the establishment of a communication by ship-canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans," commonly known as "the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty."

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take all the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the question raised at p. 9 of Sir E. Hertslet's printed Memorandum of the 20th May, 1880 (marked "A"), on the proposed abrogation by the United States of the "Clayton-Bulwer Treaty," namely, whether the establishment by the United States' Government of naval stations and depôts of coal for the supply of steam-ships of war at the Isthmus of Panamá would be in violation of the Ist Article of that Treaty.

That we would perceive from Sir E. Thornton's despatch No. 71 of the 7th March last that a Bill authorizing the expenditure of 200,000 dollars for the above purpose was passed by the Legislature of the United States.

We were also honoured with Lord Tenterden's communication of the 15th ultimo, transmitting further correspondence bearing upon the same question.

And we were also honoured with Lord Tenterden's further letter of the 16th ultimo, transmitting further despatches and a printed volume of diplomatic correspondence of the United States, containing a correspondence which passed between the United States' and Colombian Governments in 1865-66 bearing upon the interpretation to be put upon the Guaranteeing Clause of the Treaty of 1846 between those two States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

As to right of United States, under Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, to establish naval stations in Central America.

That, in our opinion, there is some doubt whether the mere securing by the United States' Government of adequate harbours and depôts of coal for their steam-ships of war at the Isthmus of Panamá would be an infraction of the Ist Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, since they might conceivably be requisite for the convenience and safety of the United States' navy. But it seems to us impossible to read the papers transmitted to us without coming to the conclusion that much more than this is intended, and that, in fact, an absolute control by the United States' Government over the approaches to the canal is meditated by means of the erection of forts and fortified harbours commanding those approaches, and that the exercise, to some extent, of dominion over the use and navigation of the canal and the territory through which the canal is to pass is contemplated. This would, in our opinion, be clearly a violation of the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

Thornton, No. 53, February 21; No. 71, March 7; No. 89, March 21; No. 95, March 28; No. 116, April 16; Memorandum (E. H.), May 6, eight Annexes, marked (A) to (H); Sir E. Thornton, No. 136, April 30; Mr. O'Leary, No. 17, April 5; Lord Lyons, No. 502, May 22; Mr. O'Leary, No. 26, May 4; Sir E. Thornton, No. 167, May 30; No. 171, June 6, 1881.

The reports of speeches and the comments on the subject in the United States' newspapers show that even in that country the proposed action of the Government is regarded as inconsistent with the Treaty.

The Bogotá Protocol is contrary to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

If any such arrangement were concluded by the United States' Government as is provided for by the Bogotá Protocol, giving as it does to the United States territorial possession in the neighbourhood of the canal and a control over its use, and conferring upon the vessels of war of that country privileges in the use of the canal which are denied to the navy of Great Britain, it would, we think, be a direct violation of the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

Reply to Mr. Blaine's despatch.

The despatch of Mr. Blaine of the 24th June, 1881, raises somewhat different questions. It insists upon the right and duty imposed on the United States' Government, under their Treaty of 1846 with Colombia, to guarantee the neutrality of the canal, and points out the special interest which the United States have in the preservation of this neutrality and in preventing the use of the canal in a manner detrimental to themselves in case they should at any time be at war. But it is chiefly directed against any concerted action of the European Powers for the purpose of guaranteeing the neutrality of the canal or determining the conditions of its use. It is manifest that the United States' Government are resolved to resist any such action on the part of the European Powers, and it is impossible not to feel the force of many of the arguments urged by Mr. Blaine. It is not within our province to enter into the question of policy thus raised. But we would point out that Great Britain stands as regards this matter in a different position to any other of the European Powers, not only by reason of the magnitude of her commercial relations with countries to and from which the proposed canal will form the highway, but more especially by reason of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, which gives to Great Britain as between her and the United States a special right to be placed upon the same footing as the latter country in relation to the canal. It would not be inconsistent with the objection taken to the apprehended interference of the European Powers that the United States should recognize and hold itself bound by the provisions of a Treaty solemnly entered into for regulating the respective rights of Great Britain and the United States. Whatever reply Her Majesty's Government may determine upon making to the despatch of Mr. Blaine, and the broad and important questions raised in it, we would suggest that their reply should call attention to the fact that the position of the two Governments with reference to the canal is determined by the engagements entered into by them respectively in the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and that Her Majesty's Government rely upon the observance of the engagements thus entered into by the United States.

Her Majesty's Government should state that they rely on observance of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, which determines the position of the two Governments.

Jurisdiction of Courts over Consular officers and servants. Egyptian proposals.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that by your Lordship's direction he inclosed the accompanying despatch from Mr. Cookson, Acting British Agent at Cairo, forwarding three proposals drawn up by the Egyptian Government in modification of the present state of the law as to the liability of Consular officers and servants to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Law in Egypt, and he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion both upon the proposals themselves and upon the questions raised by Moustapha Pasha Fehmy and commented upon by Mr. Cookson as to whether they should form the subject of separate Conventions with the different foreign Governments, or be embodied in the amended Charter for the regulation of the Mixed Courts which had been submitted by the Egyptian Government to the International Commission then sitting at Cairo for the purpose of revising the Code hitherto administered by those Tribunals.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

(a) and (b) may be accepted; but (c) requires further consideration.

That proposals (a) and (b) are in our opinion right, and may properly be accepted.

We should have been inclined to consider proposal (c) as reasonable, but Mr. Cookson's knowledge of the practise of the different Consulates in Egypt, and the habits of the Consular servants referred to, makes him far more capable of forming a sound opinion upon the subject than ourselves.

And we therefore concur with his suggestion that any further arguments and facts which the Egyptian Government may be able to adduce in the International Commission should be weighed by Her Majesty's Government before coming to a definite decision for or against this proposal.

One system should be adopted by all Governments.

It is probably very desirable that one system should be accepted by the different foreign Governments, and in one and the same regulation, and we are therefore of opinion that the proposals when acceded to by those Governments should be embodied in the amended Charter and not made the subject of separate Conventions.

Mr. Cookson to Earl Granville.—(Received October 28.)

(No. 322. Political.)

My Lord, Cairo, October 20, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a draft given to me by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of proposals which the Egyptian Government wish to make to the foreign Powers modifying the present state of the law as to the liability of Consular officers and servants to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Law in Egypt.

The proposals relate to the position of three different classes of Consular officers:—

(a.) As to those who belong professionally to the Diplomatic and Consular services, it is proposed formally to sanction their right to maintain suits as plaintiffs in the Mixed Tribunals, without prejudice to their immunity from being sued as defendants.

(b.) As to such members of the Consular service who are engaged in commerce, hold land in Egypt, it is proposed to subject them to the jurisdiction of the Mixed Courts in all commercial and real property cases which have nothing to do with their official position.

(c.) As to such native subjects as enjoy temporary foreign protection from their being Consular officers or servants, it is proposed to subject them to the jurisdiction of the Mixed Courts in all cases whatever which have nothing to do with their official functions.

Some of these points have already formed the subject of discussion between the Egyptian and foreign Governments, and the proposals now made are intended finally to settle the points in dispute.

(a.) The right of Consular officers to sue in the Mixed Courts has been expressly asserted by Her Majesty's Government, on the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, that the Agreement of the 31st July, 1875, had not altered the position of Consular officers in this respect, and Her Majesty's Government have refused to accept the decision of the Mixed Court of Appeal, interpreting the Conventions of the 10th November, 1874, between the French and Egyptian Governments, and of the 5th May, 1875, between the German and Egyptian Governments, as depriving Consular officers of their right of suing in the Mixed Courts.

This view was opposed by the Egyptian Government in a note verbale of Moustapha Pasha Fehmy, communicated to Mr. Malet in April last, but the Proposal (a) now made by the Egyptian Government formally adopts the conclusions of Her Majesty's Government and sets aside the decision of the Court of Appeal. I may point out that Proposal (a) only gives Consular officers the right of suing as plaintiffs in the Mixed Courts, and not of submitting themselves as defendants to their jurisdiction, as claimed by Her Majesty's Government.

This view of their rights, as appears from a communication made by the Italian Consul-General, has been taken by the Italian Government, and, if adopted, would obviate the objection urged in Moustapha Pasha Fehmy's note verbale of the 18th April, against the anomaly of leaving to one party in a suit the right of choosing his own forum.

(b.) As regards the liability of trading Consuls to the jurisdiction of the Mixed Courts in cases not relating to their official position, there exists at present a considerable conflict of opinion and even of legal decisions. The question was brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government by a suit brought in the Mixed Court at Mansourah in 1879, by a local subject, Ameen Bey, against Mr. Felice, British Consular Agent and merchant at Zagazig, relative to purely commercial transactions in which Mr. Felice was engaged. Instructions were at first given by Lord Salisbury that Mr. Felice should plead the incompetency of the Court, the establishment of the Mixed Tribunals not having affected immunities of British Consular officers. This view had already been taken by the French Government in 1877, in opposition to that of the Court of Appeal at Alexandria, which had declared himself competent in an action against M. d'Aubonne, a French Consular Agent, precisely similar to that brought against Mr. Felice. In consequence of a declaration by the French Consular authorities of their intention to resist it, the execution of this sentence of the Mixed Court has never been enforced. But following the decision of the Court of Appeal, the Court at Mansourah declared itself competent in the suit against Mr. Felice. Further instructions were thereupon asked from Her Majesty's Government, and on the 15th April last Mr. Felice was ordered to defend the action under protest, and pay the amount of the Judgment into this Agency, pending any diplomatic action which it might be possible to take in the matter. The reason for these fresh instructions was stated to be that "it is doubtful whether Mr. Felice is entitled to invoke the privileges of exemption from the jurisdiction of the Courts accorded to Consular officers in the Levant in order to enable him to escape from his legal liabilities in respect of his commercial transactions;" and on the 21st April last a further instruction, based on the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, was given to Mr. Felice to defend the action on its merits, the Law Officers not considering "that he is entitled in the present instance, in which no official right or duty is involved, to insist upon any immunity from the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of the Reform, notwithstanding the fact of his appointment by the Secretary of State."

On this point, also, therefore, the Proposal (b) of the Egyptian Government is in substance only an embodiment of the decision finally arrived at by Her Majesty's Government. It is, I believe, in itself deserving of support as a natural consequence of the success of the Mixed Courts; and it would undoubtedly relieve the Egyptian Government of serious difficulties with some foreign Consulates. But I would observe, on the terms in which this Article is drawn up, that they appear to me to be unsatisfactorily vague, for "s'occupant de commerce et d'industrie," I would propose to substitute Article 9 of the Egyptian Commercial Code, giving the definition of "commerçants," i.e., "ceux qui exercent des actes de commerce et en font leur profession habituelle," otherwise the Mixed Courts will be able to claim jurisdiction in a case (for example) in which a "Consul de Carrière" paid for goods furnished from abroad by a bill due at three months, as is not an unusual practice.

I think also the jurisdiction of the Mixed Courts over Consuls possessing real property in Egypt should be clearly restricted to cases arising out of the possession of that property.

This might be effected by throwing this part of the Article into a distinct paragraph. The whole Article, as amended, would then run something like this:—"Tout fonctionnaire ou employé Consulaire exerçant des actes de commerce ou d'industrie et en faisant leur profession habituelle sera soumis à la juridiction de ces Tribunaux pour toutes les affaires commerciales et industrielles où leur qualité officielle n'est pas en cause. Tout fonctionnaire ou employé Consulaire possédant des biens-fonds en Egypte sera soumis à la même juridiction pour toutes les affaires immobilières où leur qualité officielle n'est pas en cause."

(c.) The question raised by the third proposal of the Egyptian Government, to give the Mixed Courts exclusive jurisdiction over all natives in Consular employ in all cases where their official functions are not involved, is, as far as I know, now brought forward for the first time. It arises from a very natural desire to bring again under the local jurisdiction the whole class of native Dragomans and servants in Consular employ; but I do not think it is so much of practical as of theoretical importance to the Egyptian Government. The cases in which it would be required are, I believe, rare, even with those Consulates which are least scrupulous in extending their protection to their native subordinates in cases where they are not fairly entitled to it. It is directly opposed to the Capitulations, which form the present basis of international law in the Levant, and it would have the effect of diminishing the authority of Consuls over the natives in their employment. At present, when a British Consular servant is likely to be sued in the Consular Court, he takes care to arrange with his adversary if he has not a good case, rather than expose himself to the animadversions of his superior. No doubt this is the case also in other Consulates of the same high character. But it is different in some others, where the old bad traditions of the paramount duty of a Consul to defend the acts and interests of his countrymen still unfortunately survive; and this Article is intended to meet these exceptional cases. I venture to submit that any further arguments and facts which the Egyptian Government may be able to adduce in the International Commission might be weighed by Her Majesty's Government before coming to a definite decision for or against this proposal.

Moustapha Pasha Fehmy, in giving me these draft Proposals, asked my opinion as to whether I thought it necessary that they should form the subject of separate Conventions with the different foreign Governments, similar to those of the 31st July, 1875, with Great Britain; of the 10th November, 1874, with France; and of the 5th May, 1875, with Germany; or whether they might properly be inserted in the amended "Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire" of the Mixed Courts, and submitted to the Commission.

I told him that I thought the latter would be much the simpler plan, and that I did not see any objection to it in point of principle. They might properly be inserted under the head of "Compétence," in tit. iii, cap. 1, sect. 2, of the amended Règlement. Indeed, I would venture to suggest that this would be the proper place also for the whole subject matter of the Conventions above cited. The "Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire" and Codes of the Egyptian Mixed Courts form, both in theory and fact, an international Agreement formally concluded between Egypt and the foreign Powers. The reason why the Agreements of the 10th November, 1874, the 5th May, 1875, and the 31st July, 1875, were concluded separately and not embodied in the Code, was that France insisted on these modifications as a condition of her adhering to the Judicial Reform after the bases of the "Règlement d'Organisation Judiciaire" had been settled by the International Commission. The present seems the proper occasion for throwing the whole charter of the Mixed Courts into one instrument. This will have the additional advantage of putting all foreigners in Egypt on the same footing, and of excluding separate agreements with individual Powers.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Death at Cairo of Mr L. D. Kirby. Inquiry by Vice-Consul and Assessor

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 12th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relative to the death at Cairo of Mr. Lawrence D. Kirby, an English barrister lately practising in Egypt.

That it appeared that on the 28th October last Mr. Kirby had an altercation in a public billiard-room at Cairo with a Mr. Waller, in the course of which he received from the latter a violent blow at the back of the head, inflicted with a billiard-cue.

That Mr. Kirby died on the 2nd November, and on the 8th November an inquiry into the causes of his death was held by Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Cairo, Mr. Borg, assisted by Mr. Rowsell as Assessor.

That the Report of that inquiry would be found in Mr. Malet's No. 23, Inclosure 5.

That medical evidence was given to the effect that the deceased had been suffering from delirium tremens, and that his death was not caused by the blow he had received from Mr. Waller. That at the close of the inquiry the following finding was recorded:—"Death from natural causes." That Sir Julian Pauncefote was then to refer us to a letter addressed by the widow of the deceased to Mr. Cookson, Her Majesty's Consul and Judge of the Court for Egypt, and to Mr. Cookson's reply thereto (which formed Inclosures 1 and 2 in the above-mentioned despatch), and to correspondence between Mrs. Kirby and Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, contained in the same despatch and in Mr. Malet's No. 32 of the 26th January. Also to a letter addressed to your Lordship, on the 20th ultimo, by Mr. E. Kirby, a brother of the deceased.

That we would perceive from the above correspondence that the relatives of the deceased were not satisfied with the finding at the inquiry of the 8th November, and asked that it should be reopened, and that the widow should have an opportunity of being represented by counsel.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote inclosed a copy of Her Majesty's Order in Council for the Levant of the 12th December, 1873, and he was to refer to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 12th April, 1879 (Collection for that year, No. 77, p. 73), in which they advised that the Judge of Her Majesty's Consular Court at Constantinople, under section 34 and the general provisions of that Order, could discharge the duties of Coroner.

It would seem, therefore, that in the present case an ordinary inquest might have been held at Cairo on the body of the deceased (see Part VI, sections 31 and 37), but there did not appear to be any provision in the Order in Council authorizing the judicial proceeding and finding of the Vice-Consul and Assessor reported in Mr. Malet's despatch No. 23.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all the papers in the case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there was any legal warrant in the provisions of the Order in Council for the judicial inquiry held by the Vice-Consul at Cairo, with the assistance of an Assessor, and for the finding recorded by them; and as to the reply which should be returned to the application of the widow and relatives of the deceased, and the instructions, if any, which should be sent to Mr. Malet on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Proceedings were unauthorized; but further inquiries ought to be made of Consul.

That, in our opinion, the Order in Council contains no provision which authorized the proceedings of the Vice-Consul and the Assessor, as reported by Mr. Malet, and we think that if this be so, the supposed finding of the Court should be declared a nullity. But before this is done it would, we think, be proper to call the attention of the Consul to the matter, and to inquire by what authority the inquiry was held before a Tribunal constituted as this one was. In the meantime, the relatives of the deceased may be informed that inquiries are being made with reference to the competency of Death of Mr. L. D. Kirby at Cairo.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 6th April instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 26th February, regarding the inquiry which was held at Cairo into the circumstances attending the death of Mr. Kirby, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt,* containing a Report by Mr. Cookson, the Judge of Her Majesty's Consular Court, giving his reasons for instructing Mr. Vice-Consul Borg to hold the inquiry in question. That Mr. Lister was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent with reference to that inquiry, and as to the reply which should now be returned to the application of the widow and relatives of the late Mr. Kirby, which formed the subject of our previous Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Proceedings of Vice-Consul and Assessor were unwarranted by law, and finding should be declared a nullity. Relatives should be informed as above, and be told that it is open to them to take proceedings.

That we have considered the explanations given by Mr. Cookson with reference to the proceedings of the Vice-Consul and the Assessor.

It appears to us that the proceeding was unwarranted in point of law, and can have no legal effect.

If the inquiry were for the purpose of ascertaining whether criminal proceedings should be taken by the Crown, it ought, in our opinion, to have been made by the judicial officer alone and in private, and there should have been no formal finding published as to the cause of death.

But if the inquiry was intended to have the same effect as an inquest, it should, in our opinion, have been held by the Consul himself, and the facilities usual in such cases should have been afforded to the person implicated and to the representatives of the deceased to take part in the proceedings.

We think that, as suggested in our former Report, the supposed finding of the Court should be declared a nullity.

The relatives of Mr. Kirby may also properly be informed that your Lordship is advised that the Court as constituted was not competent to entertain the inquiry in any judicial capacity, and that its finding has been declared a nullity.

They may further be informed that it is open to them to take such proceedings (if any) as they may be advised in respect of the transaction which led, in their opinion, to the death of Mr. Kirby.

Fresh water canal from Ismaïlia to Port Saïd. M. de Lesseps' proposal for its construction, and for appropriation of land.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 4th ultimo, stating that in the month of April last M. de Lesseps applied to the Khedive of Egypt for authority to form a Company for the construction of a canal from Ismaïlia to Port Saïd for the purpose of keeping the latter town adequately supplied with fresh water. That Lord Tenterden transmitted therewith a copy of the despatch* from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, which inclosed the text of the application.

That the construction of such a canal was included in the original scheme of the Suez Canal Company, as set forth in the Concession of 1856. That out of that Concession arose various claims, which after much discussion and diplomatic correspondence were finally adjudicated upon by the Emperor of the French; and His Majesty's conclusions were embodied in the Conventions between the Viceroy of Egypt and the Suez Maritime Canal Company of the 30th January and 22nd February, 1866. That those documents, as well as the Emperor's award, and other Concessions, Conventions, and Statutes relating to the Suez Canal, were contained in the accompanying Parliamentary Paper.†

That, in his Memorandum of the 7th April last (Inclosure 2 in Mr. Malet's No. 127), M. de Lesseps quotes the Concession of 1856 in support of his application, makes no mention of the Emperor's Award and the Conventions based thereon, states that, as the Egyptian Government, on whom the duty should devolve, was not in a position to carry out the undertaking, a Company should be formed for the purpose, and be recouped for its outlay by the lands brought into cultivation through irrigation from the waters of the canal, as stipulated in the Concession of 1856.

That that proposal, involving as it did considerable concessions of land, appeared to be very objectionable, and likely to raise again questions which it was hoped had been finally set at rest by the Award of the Emperor Napoleon. That your Lordship accordingly sought the advice of the British Directors of the Suez Canal Company as to the means of averting the difficulty, and their views as to the pretensions of M. de Lesseps were very fully stated in their Reports‡ of the 23rd May, which Lord Tenterden inclosed, and to which he was directed to call our particular attention.

That M. de Lesseps had in the meanwhile (May 12) issued a notice to the promoters of the scheme which was forwarded to your Lordship in the inclosed despatch§ from the British Acting Agent and Consul-General in Egypt. That it quoted certain Articles of the 1856 Concession, interpreted the Award of the Emperor Napoleon as not having related to the projected canal between Ismaïlia and Port Saïd, and referred to Article V of the Convention of the 22nd February, 1866, in support of that interpretation. That Her Majesty's Government, however, adopted the view taken of the matter by the British Directors, and in the despatch,‖ of which a copy was annexed, your Lordship resumed the arguments in support of that view, and instructed the Directors, in the event of the question being discussed at a meeting of the Council of the Company at Paris, to represent that under the Award of the Emperor Napoleon in 1864, and the Convention of the 22nd February, 1866, the Suez Canal Company resumed¶ the power of constructing irrigation canals, having attached to them rights over fertilized lands, but at the same time to express the readiness of Her Majesty's Government to concur in any proposals having for their object simply the supply of water to Port Saïd, which the Company were entitled to provide for at their own expense, either by an extension of the present pumping apparatus and conduits, or by a small open canal if that method should be considered preferable, and if it should be made clear that a canal was one of the "moyens d'alimentation" contemplated by Article VII of the Convention of 1866, or was accepted as such by the Government of Egypt.

That the Egyptian Government had, on the 15th May, in reply to M. de Lesseps' notice of the 12th of that month, declared that it could not accept the interpretation sought to be placed on the Conventions of 1854 and 1856, and the answer which M. de Lesseps proposed to make to the note from the Egyptian Government was confidentially communicated by him to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris. That the first of those documents was inclosed in the despatch from Mr. Cookson, of which Lord Tenterden transmitted a copy therewith. The second accompanied a despatch†† from the British Directors of the 16th ultimo, which was also annexed. That M. de Lesseps' proposed note endeavoured to prove the correctness of his interpretation of the Emperor's Award, called attention to the obligation under which the Egyptian Government lies of keeping up a certain head of water in the navigable canal between Cairo and Ismaïlia, a condition which he said had never been fulfilled, and threatened legal proceedings in the event of the Egyptian Government opposing the formation of the Company. He also maintained that though the Egyptian Government might claim to carry out the work itself, it must be according to the plans and under the control of the Suez Canal Company after repayment of the sums expended on surveys.

That Lord Tenterden was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the papers sent therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the legal merits of M. de Lesseps' pretensions, whether the Award of the Emperor covered the case of the canal between Ismaïlia and Port Saïd, or only referred to the canal between Cairo and Ismaïlia and between the latter place and Suez, or whether the view taken by Her Majesty's Government, as set forth in the despatch to the Directors of the 30th May, was correct, and was one which was likely to be upheld if the matter were made the subject of public litigation in the International Law Courts of Egypt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

M. de Lesseps' pretensions not well founded.

That, in our opinion, the pretensions put forward by M. de Lesseps with reference to the rights alleged to exist under the Concessions of 1854 and 1856 are not well founded.

The claim to be entitled to the lands which may be brought into cultivation by the proposed canal between Ismaïlia and Port Saïd must rest upon Articles 10, 11, and 12 of the Concession of 1856. But the Award of the Emperor Napoleon appears clearly to extend to these provisions, and the Articles are expressly abrogated by the Convention of February 1866.

It is impossible to say with certainty what view the International Tribunals in Egypt may take, but we should certainly expect them to come to the same conclusion.

We would point out that the question of the right to make the canal is totally distinct from the question whether those making it would be entitled to the lands thereby brought into cultivation. But unless these rights follow, there will probably be no sufficient inducement for the suggested Company to make the canal.

Case of Mr. Pedley, a British subject, owner of an oak forest in Algeria, destroyed by fire.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatch,* with its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, asking instructions in the matter of a request for intervention with the French Government which had been preferred by a M. The facts of the case were set forth in the letter from M. Delonpy of which a copy was inclosed in the Ambassador's despatch; and Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the circumstances were such as to warrant diplomatic intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

He is only entitled to same treatment as French proprietors. No reason for diplomatic intervention.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Pedley is entitled to receive the same treatment from the French Government as French proprietors in Algeria who have suffered loss from the same alleged cause, and at present we see no reason for diplomatic interference on his behalf.

Mr. Westlake to Sir J. Pauncefote.—(Received January 28.)

Wills, personal succession, and domicile abroad. Draft Bill with clause 7 modified.

Dear Sir, 2, New Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., January 28, 1881.

I HAVE the pleasure of inclosing a copy of the draft Bill on Wills, Personal Succession, and Domicile, in which Clause 7 is modified so as to meet the two suggestions made by you in our conversation yesterday.

First, it is now proposed that the residence required shall be for the year pending the deposit of the declaration mentioned in the Clause, instead of for the year preceding the date for which the domicile is to be determined. I had myself thought of this—see my pamphlet on "Domicile or Nationality," p. 8—as securing due time for reflection before the deposit of the declaration, but had not ventured in the draft Bill to depart from the lines on which the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., c. 121, was drawn, the year there being that preceding the death of the testator or intestate. And there is great weight in your observation that if the stress of proof had to bear on the year preceding the death there would be a strong inducement to contend that an absence from England not intended to be otherwise than temporary, but extending over a large part or perhaps the whole of that year, precluded the domicile from being British at the death, notwithstanding the deposit of the declaration and a previous British residence.

Secondly, a proviso is added in order to make it clear that a British domicile, acquired by residence and the deposit of the declaration, may again be lost, just as a domicile acquired under the present law may be lost. It does not seem advisable to hamper the above document by any necessity of withdrawing the declaration, since that formality might easily be omitted from inadvertence, where there was no substantial ground for contending that the British domicile continued, and our law might then be brought into conflict with that of the country in which the new domicile was acquired.

Inclosure in No. 22.

Modified Clause.

7. NO person sui juris, whether a British subject or an alien, shall, after the passing of this Act, be deemed to have acquired for any purpose a domicile in any of Her Majesty's dominions mentioned in the schedule hereto, unless he shall

(1.) Have signed a declaration in writing of his desire to become domiciled in the country or place in question, and deposited the same in the public office mentioned in the said schedule for such country or place; and

(2.) Have resided in such country or place during one year immediately preceding the deposit of such declaration.

Provided that nothing herein contained shall prejudice any domicile acquired before the passing of this Act, nor shall anything done in pursuance hereof be construed to confer a domicile which would not have been acquired if this Act had not been passed; also that any domicile acquired under this Act shall be subject to abandonment in the same manner as any domicile heretofore acquired.

My Lord, Temple, April 16, 1881.

Rule of domicile as applied to movable succession and to case of wills abroad.

Paper, Memorandum, and draft Bill drawn up by Mr. Westlake, Q.C.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Principal Secretary to the Lord Chancellor,* referring to the subject of the rule of domicile as applied to movable succession, and to the case of wills of real and personal estate made out of the United Kingdom, and inclosing a paper drawn by Mr. Westlake, Q.C., and a draft Bill and Memorandum, also prepared by him at the Lord Chancellor's request, dealing with that subject.

That it appeared to your Lordship from a perusal of the draft Bill that it might be expedient to insert a power of revocation of a declaration made under section 7, and that the condition of one year's residence immediately preceding death might prove inconvenient in some cases.

That Mr. Westlake, having been consulted on those points, had returned, with observations in a letter therewith inclosed, a further copy of the draft Bill,† containing modifications intended to meet the objections above referred to.

That, in accordance with the suggestion of the Lord Chancellor, Sir J. Pauncefote was directed by your Lordship to transmit the papers to us, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the draft Bill at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we approve generally the objects of the Bill, but we desire to submit for consideration the following observations:—

Observations on draft Bill.

We doubt whether the enactments proposed in the 4th and 6th sub-sections of section 2 rest upon a sound basis. Where a person has purported to make a will which has no validity either according to the law of the place where it was made or of the place of the testator's allegiance or domicile, it seems of questionable expediency

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Wingfield's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Gibraltar, inclosing a Memorial from Mr. Lewes Culatto, praying that his sister, Mrs. Levrero, who was a native of Gibraltar, but was married to an Italian resident in Gibraltar on a special temporary permit, might not be included in the permit granted to her husband, and that the memorialist might be reimbursed the amount of a fine inflicted upon him, as the person on whose application Mr. Levrero was permitted to be in Gibraltar, by reason of Mrs. Levrero having been delivered of a child in that city.

Memorial from Mr. L. Culatto contending that Mrs. Levrero, his sister, the wife of an Italian resident in Gibraltar, is not an alien, and asking for remission of fine inflicted upon him.

2. That according to the statement in the Memorial, Mrs. Levrero had been allowed to reside in Gibraltar without a permit from the time of her marriage in 1859 until June last, when her husband having applied for a restoration of his permit, which had been withdrawn in consequence of her having been delivered of a child, the Governor made it a condition of such restoration that Mrs. Levrero should be included in the permit as the wife of an alien, and herself a "statutory alien."

Aliens Order in Council, Gibraltar, 1873.

3. That the Aliens Order in Council, Gibraltar, 1873, a copy of which was inclosed for reference, prohibited aliens from remaining in Gibraltar without a permit, and by the 2nd clause the word "alien" is to be construed as including a statutory alien. That Schedule (B), which by the 57th clause is made part of the Order, specified among the persons to whom a permit might be granted "the wife of an alien in the garrison," and that a note was added to the effect that such wife was to be included in her husband's permit.

Attorney (General), Gibraltar, of opinion that Mrs. Levrero became a statutory alien by "Naturalization Act, 1870."

4. That it would be seen that the Attorney (General), Gibraltar, was of opinion that by the effect of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," section 10, Mrs. Levrero, although married before the passing of that Act, ceased to be a British subject, and became a statutory alien.

5. That the memorialist, on the other hand, contended (1) that section 10 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," did not apply to a woman married before the passing of the Act; and (2) that the Act did not apply to the Colonies, and that Mrs. Levrero was therefore not an alien, and was entitled to reside in Gibraltar without a permit.

6. That Mr. Wingfield was to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following questions:—

(2.) Whether the Act is in force in Gibraltar.

(3.) Whether a woman, being by birth a British subject and married to an alien before the passing of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," is an alien within the meaning of the Aliens Order in Council, Gibraltar, 1873.

(4.) Whether such a woman as described in question 3 is entitled to reside in Gibraltar without a permit.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that section 10 (1) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," applies to a woman married before the passing of the Act. It seems clear from section 3 of the 35 & 36 Vict., c. 39, that this is the case.

Are of opinion that Mrs. Levrero is an alien within meaning of O. in C., Gibraltar, 1873.

2. We think the Act is in force in Gibraltar.*

* (Note by Mr. Davidson, January 1891): "I think this must be read with reference particularly to section 10 (1) of the Act, and not to the whole Act, some of the machinery of which is only applicable to the United Kingdom, e.g., section 7, section 10 (5), &c.

that such an instrument should be made valid by a subsequent change of domicile or allegiance adopted altogether alio intuitu, and where the testator may well have known that the instrument was invalid, and have had no intention of validating it.

The drafting of section 3 appears to need alteration.

We presume the change of domicile or allegiance referred to is a change subsequent to the making of the will or other testamentary instrument.

In section 6, we think that the word "adherent" requires some definition.

Although we think it would be of importance to enable a person to secure unequivocal proof of his acquisition of a domicile in the manner provided in section 7, we think it open to grave question whether it is expedient to enact that no person shall be deemed to have acquired a domicile unless he has signed and deposited the required declaration.

A person may have resided for years in a part of Her Majesty's dominions, intending to acquire a domicile there, and yet, either in ignorance or forgetfulness, have failed to make a declaration of his desire to do so. And if section 7 were to become law, the consequences, in such a case, might be most serious, affecting, it may be, the validity of marriage or divorce or the legitimacy of offspring.

In the Indian Act 10 of 1865, section 11, it is provided that "any person may acquire a domicile in British India by making and depositing in some office in British India (to be fixed by the Local Government) a declaration in writing under his hand of his desire to acquire such domicile, provided that he shall have been resident in India for one year immediately preceding the time of his making such declaration." We think a permissive provision of this description would be preferable to that contained in section 7.

Ressman, asking, on behalf of your Government, for certain information with respect to the state of the law in this country as regards mortgages and loans on real property for the purposes of improvement, and I have now the honour to state to your Excellency, in reply, that no general law has been passed in this country giving special guarantees in the case of money advanced by private individuals on mortgage of real estate for purposes of improvement; but the improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict., cap. 114), makes provision for promoting the advance of private money for certain purposes connected with the improvement of land through the intervention of Public Commissioners, and various other Statutes provide for the advance of public moneys for similar purposes.

I beg further to inform your Excellency that all these Statutes will be found cited in the Chronological Table and Index to the Statutes published by authority of the Government under the direction of the Statute Law Committee, under the heading of "Improvement of Land Drainage," and other titles.

Temple, June 3, 1881.

My Lord,

Death of J. Pearce on Her Majesty's ship "Inflexible" at Naples. Proceedings of Pretore at San Ferdinando.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome,* inclosing copies of correspondence between his Excellency and Her Majesty's Consul at Naples describing the proceedings of the Pretore of the district of San Ferdinando in Italy, respecting an inquest held by that official on the body of a seaman (John Pearce), accidentally killed by falling from aloft on board Her Majesty's ship "Invincible," in the port of Naples.

That it was stated in the Pretore's letter to Her Majesty's Consul (Inclosure 3) that the object of the inquiry was "to establish whether there was the least foul play or fault on any one's part," and that it concerned the penal Administration to know the particulars of the case.

That it appeared that for the purposes of the inquest the body of the deceased, which had been buried in the English cemetery, was disinterred, notwithstanding the certificate of the doctor of the "Invincible" respecting the accident.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proceedings of the Pretore afforded grounds for official remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Inquest on body, when within his jurisdiction, not contrary to international law; but an inquiry as to cause of death on British ship of war not justifiable.

That we do not think that the Pretore committed any violation of international right in the mere holding of the inquest. The body of the deceased was brought on shore and within the jurisdiction of the Pretore, and we think he was entitled to hold an inquest, even if the death took place outside his jurisdiction, for the purpose of ascertaining and obtaining proofs of that fact.

But the Pretore appears to have proceeded far beyond this, and though the fact was established that the deceased was a seaman serving in a British ship of war, and had met with his death on board that ship, he appears to have claimed and exercised the right to inquire whether the death resulted from foul play or fault on any one's part.

We think that if the death of a British seaman on board a British ship of war was occasioned by any fault or crime, that was a matter cognizable only by the British authorities, and that the Pretore exceeded his authority, and was not justified according to international law in entering upon such an inquiry.

Should remonstrate.

We think, therefore, that the proceedings of the Pretore in this respect afford grounds for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.

with a Report respecting the proceedings of the Pretore of the district of San Ferdinando, in Italy, in regard to an inquest held by that official on the body of John Pearce, a seaman, accidentally killed by falling from aloft on board Her Majesty's ship "Invincible," in the port of Naples.

That Lord Tenterden was to transmit to us the draft of instruction[*] to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome, founded upon our Report, directing his Excellency to remonstrate against the proceedings of the Italian authorities in that matter, together with a despatch from Sir A. Paget,[†] containing the reply of the Italian Government, in which it was sought to justify the proceedings complained of, whilst it was denied that any certificate of death from the medical officer of the "Invincible" was produced.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would be good enough to take that further correspondence into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with any observation which we might have to make thereupon, and with our opinion whether any, and, if so, what steps Her Majesty's Government should take in the matter.

That the previous papers[‡] were annexed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the Report of the Procureur-Général at the Court of Appeal of Naples materially alters the aspect of this case.

All intention to extend the jurisdiction of the Italian authorities over events that have taken place in foreign territory is disowned; and it appears to be admitted that a British man-of-war is to be considered as British territory.

The only claim put forward is, that a dead body, being within the territorial jurisdiction of the Pretore, he had a right to satisfy himself, before permitting the burial, that there was no ground for believing that a crime had been committed within the city.

It is stated that a certificate of the doctor of the ship certifying the cause of death was not shown to him before he held the inquiry.

This is in conflict with the statement contained in the despatch of Consul Grant, and the notice given by the Pretore to the Consul on the 2nd May, 1881, certainly seemed to claim a right to inquire into "the particulars of the case for the purpose of establishing whether there were the least foul play or fault on any one's part," even though the occurrence had taken place on a British man-of-war.

Report of the Procureur-Général renders further action unnecessary, but note should be taken of the disavowal of jurisdiction.

We think, however, that in view of the explanations furnished by the Report of the Procureur-Général, which accompanied the despatch of Signor Mancini of the 15th October, 1881, it is not necessary for Her Majesty's Government to take further action in the matter. But it would be well, in acknowledging that despatch, to take note of the fact that any claim of jurisdiction to inquire whether a death which has been caused by occurrences on board a British man-of-war is due to criminal conduct, has been distinctly disavowed.

Temple, April 8, 1881.

My Lord,

Alleged infringement of diplomatic privilege by Local Act, which renders their landlords liable for rates not recoverable from foreign Ministers. Complaint of Japanese Minister.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 17th March last, stating that he had to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the accompanying papers, which were noted in the margin,[*] relating to a complaint by the Japanese Minister at this Court, that his diplomatic privileges were infringed by the operation of section 190 of the Local Act, 35 Geo. III, cap. 73, whereby rates and assessments imposed under that Act in the parish of St. Marylebone, in respect of houses inhabited by foreign Ambassadors, Ministers and others, not liable by law to pay the same, shall be recoverable from the landlord.

That the Japanese Minister's letter of the 12th January last, stating his complaint, was referred to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whose reply was contained in the Home Office letter of the 21st January, and the substance of that reply was communicated to Mr. Mori in the Foreign Office letter of the 27th January.

That thereupon he addressed a further letter to your Lordship, dated the 8th February, expressing the hope that the decision arrived at would be reconsidered, as the effect of the enactment in question was indirectly to charge him with the payments of the rates from which he claimed immunity by international law, and, if not, that further information should be supplied to him to enable him to make an exhaustive Report to his Government on the subject.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that a similar question arose in 1875 with respect to premises occupied in the same parish by Colonel Cheseborough, a Secretary to the United States' Legation, and he was to refer us to the views of the Home Office in that case, expressed in their letter of the 9th June, 1875.

That a similar question also arose in 1876 under the Chelsea Local Act, 4 Vict., cap 17, sec. 15, with respect to a coach-house and stables, occupied in that parish by the Spanish Minister, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the Home Office letter of the 18th March, 1876, on that case.

That it was not improbable that similar complaints would from time to time be made by the Representatives of other Governments similarly situated, and as it appeared important to your Lordship that no doubt should exist as to whether Her Majesty's Government were justified in declining to indemnify landlords on account of the payment of rates exacted from them under the enactments in question, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Japanese Minister's letter of the 8th February.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th March last, transmitting further papers.[†]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

This Act is not a breach of diplomatic privilege.

That the rule of international law is, we apprehend, correctly stated in Twiss' "Law of Nations: Rights and Duties in time of Peace," p. 308, that the house of an Ambassador is not exempt from local rates which are levied for the local benefit of the district. The practical difficulty of enforcing the liability to such rates, noticed in the note to that page of Sir Travers Twiss' work, has led, in all probability, to the introduction of the clauses in the Chelsea and St. Marylebone Acts.

If a foreign Minister takes on lease any premises at a rent higher than would be required of an ordinary tenant, in order to cover the expense of rates to which the premises are subject, and which the landlord will have to pay, we do not consider that any diplomatic immunity is broken in upon.

The impost is on the premises, not on the occupier, who is by privilege personally exempt, and the landlord, in such a case as the present, is made by Statute liable. The Foreign Minister has no power to protect his landlord from this Statutory liability, nor, in our opinion, can your Lordship properly interfere in any way with the terms of the lease, under which Mr. Mori holds his house from Lord Gainsborough.

The Oriental Bank as guarantors of the whole rent are, in our opinion, responsible for the payment of any part unpaid.

We suggest that Mr. Mori may properly be answered that no breach of diplomatic privilege has been committed so far as the demand for rates has been made upon Mr. Mori's landlord, who is clearly liable to pay those rates.

Also, that the landlord has no right to claim the amount so paid from Mr. Mori unless Mr. Mori has voluntarily bound himself by the covenants in his lease to pay any taxes rightfully imposed upon the landlord, and that the question of diplomatic privilege does not affect any private contract that an Ambassador or Foreign Minister may voluntarily make.

Mr. Mori should also be told that he personally and his property, and the property in the house occupied by him, are exempt from all legal process.

Her Majesty's Government justified in declining to indemnify the landlord.

Lastly, we think Her Majesty's Government are justified in declining, in any case, to indemnify landlords on account of the payment of rates, when their houses are let to privileged persons.

Trial and conviction of J. M. Ross, British subject, before United States' Consul at Yokohama for murder of second mate of the "Bullion," an American vessel.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 7th September last (a copy of which was inclosed), on the subject of the trial and conviction before the United States' Consul-General at Yokohama, Japan, of John Martin Ross, a British subject, on the articles of the American merchant-vessel "Bullion," on a charge of having murdered Robert Kelley, the second mate of the "Bullion," on board that vessel while lying in the port of Yokohama.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatches as marked in the margin,* which had been received from Sir E. Thornton, from the latter of which it would be seen that Ross (whose capital sentence had been commuted) was reported to have arrived at San Francisco in custody, to be conveyed from thence to Albany, in the State of New York, to serve a term of imprisonment.

That he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) was also to transmit, for convenience of reference, the papers forwarded to us in his (Sir Julian Pauncefote's) letter of the 23rd August last, together with a despatch of a later date which had been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under those circumstances, the United States' Government should be pressed to take the steps suggested in Mr. Evarts' note, inclosed in Sir E. Thornton's No. 72, for bringing the case of Ross before the United States' Courts, in order to try the question of the legality of his trial and conviction, and in case of their declining to do so, whether any steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government for the same purpose.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 7th instant, stating that, with reference to his (Sir Julian Pauncefote's) letter of the 19th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch* from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, together with its inclosures, from which it appeared that the friends of J. M. Ross, the British subject convicted of murder before the United States' Consular Court in Japan, had applied for a writ of habeas corpus, in order to raise the question of the legality of his trial and conviction. We were also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 10th instant, inclosing a further despatch,† contradicting report that a writ of habeas corpus had been moved for by the friends of J. M. Ross.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Instructions for Sir E. Thornton.

That, in the absence of any application for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of the prisoner (J. M. Ross) personally, we think Sir Edward Thornton should be directed to take steps to cause such application to be made, in such manner and to such Court as he may be advised will raise in the most satisfactory manner the question of the legality of Ross' trial and detention.

We think Sir E. Thornton should be directed to inform the United States' Government that Her Majesty's Government are taking the step of obtaining a judicial determination upon the question involved by the Courts of the United States, partly as an act of justice to the prisoner, and also because advantage will be derived from the discussion and consideration of the different views of that question.

But we suggest that it would be advisable also to communicate to the United States' Government that, whilst concurring in the suggestion contained in Mr. Evarts' letter of the 7th March (No. 72), that "a judicial interpretation might be a valuable aid in the discussion," Her Majesty's Government is not prepared to accept any judicial decision arrived at as being binding or conclusive for diplomatic purposes.

J. M. Ross, condemned for murder on the American ship "Bullion."

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th October on the case of John Martin Ross (a copy of which was inclosed), Lord Tenterden transmitted to us, by your Lordship's direction, a draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, informing him that Her Majesty's Government did not intend, for the reasons therein explained, to take proceedings by habeas corpus to test the validity of the judgment and sentence pronounced in the Courts of the United States against the prisoner, but that he should intimate to the Government of the United States that they maintained the opinion which Mr. Drummond was instructed in your Lordship's despatch No. 164 of the 18th September, 1880, to convey to the Cabinet of Washington, that Ross was not amenable to the jurisdiction of the United States' Consular Court in Japan for his crime.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take that draft, together with the papers noted in the margin of his letter,[*] into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it sufficiently met the object in view.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. West.

(No. .)
Sir, Foreign Office, , 1881.

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered Mr. Drummond's despatch No. 210 of the 20th July last, and the previous correspondence connected with the question which has arisen as to the jurisdiction of the United States' Consular Court at Yokohama in the case of John Martin Ross, who, being a British subject, has been tried and condemned for murder while serving on board the American vessel "Bullion," in Yokohama Harbour, on the 9th May, 1880.

In a letter to Sir Edward Thornton, dated the 7th March last,[†] Mr. Evarts expressed the opinion that, while the final decision upon this question should be reserved for the Administration shortly about to assume the reins of Government, it might be serviceable in the discussion then diplomatically pending between this country and the United States that a judicial interpretation should be obtained as to the meaning of the American Treaty with Japan, and it has been suggested that proceedings might be taken by Her Majesty's Government by habeas corpus, in order to test the validity of the judgment and sentence in the Courts of the United States.

There can be no doubt from the reports of the case that have been received, and with which Her Majesty's Legation at Washington has been furnished, that Ross was guilty of an outrageous murder, and that the only ground for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government rests on the disputed question of jurisdiction.

The capital sentence passed on Ross has been commuted to imprisonment for life.[*] If he should be liberated on a writ of habeas corpus, the difficulty of bringing him to trial in a British Court would be very considerable, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and it would be deplorable that the perpetrator of such a crime should escape adequate punishment.

For these reasons Her Majesty's Government consider it advisable to refrain from instituting proceedings by writ of habeas corpus to test the validity of the judgment and sentence passed on Ross, though they are still of opinion that he was not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court of the United States in Japan for his crime.

I have to request that you will inform the Government of the United States of the decision arrived at, and of the grounds on which it is founded, while maintaining and renewing the protest of Her Majesty's Government against the exercise of jurisdiction in the case by the United States' Consular Court in Japan, which Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires was instructed to address to the Government of the United States in my despatch No. 164 of the 18th September, 1880.

Protection of Mr. Pakenham against threats of Thomas Wilkinson. Powers of Her Majesty's Government by Treaty as to appointment of an officer to take proceedings.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch received from Her Majesty's Consul at Madagascar,[†] together with its inclosures, from which we should perceive that Mr. Pakenham was apprehensive of some outrage on the part of a British subject named Thomas Wilkinson, a resident in that island, who had addressed a threatening letter to him, and was apparently labouring under some delusion.

That Mr. Pakenham applied for advice as to how he should act under the circumstances.

That there was no other British Consul in that country possessing criminal jurisdiction, and that Mr. Lister was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Pakenham's inquiry. That copies of the Treaty of Peace, Friendship, and Commerce between this country and Madagascar of the 27th June, 1865, and of the Order in Council of the 4th February, 1869, were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it would not be possible for Mr. Pakenham to try Wilkinson for an offence in respect of which Mr. Pakenham would be himself the prosecutor.

If it should be necessary to take criminal proceedings against Wilkinson, the only course open would appear to be to give some other person authority to try such an offence.

By Article XI of the Treaty with the Queen of Madagascar jurisdiction may be conferred upon the British Consul "or other officer duly appointed for that purpose by Her Britannic Majesty."

We would suggest that Mr. Pakenham should be informed that whilst the power we have referred to rests in the Crown, Her Majesty's Government would be unwilling to exercise it unless a real necessity for doing so exists, and that it may be hoped that the precautionary measures taken for Mr. Pakenham's protection will, in his judgment, be deemed sufficient. My Lord, Thornton v. Scott. Mortgage on landed property.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in a letter from the Foreign Office, under date of the 5th December, transmitting to us the correspondence that was marked in the margin,* respecting a mortgage held by the Messrs. Thornton on certain landed property in Morocco, of which Mr. Scott was the owner and mortgagor.

That from the inclosed papers it would be seen that the Messrs. Thornton filed a petition in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Tangier for the foreclosure of the mortgage, but Mr. White, then Acting Consul-General, declined to exercise jurisdiction in the case, on the ground that the defendant was a naturalized subject of the United States, and further, that as the question related to landed property, he was of opinion that it should be determined by the competent Moorish Tribunal, and not by Her Majesty's Consular Court.

That Sir J. H. D. Hay, Her Majesty's Minister at Tangier, in his despatches Nos. 29 and 30 of the 3rd and 18th ultimo, expressed concurrence in Mr. White's decision, and transmitted the opinions of several of the foreign Representatives in Morocco whom he had consulted on the subject, and who considered that the Consular Courts had no jurisdiction in cases involving title to land in Morocco.

That the Messrs. Thornton, however, on the receipt of Mr. White's answer, forwarded a petition to the Foreign Office, stating that they were advised that the British Consular Court at Tangier was the only Court in which they could enforce their rights against Mr. Scott, in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty of 1856 with Morocco, and of Article XI of the Madrid Convention of the 3rd July, 1880, and praying that Her Majesty's Consul at Tangier might be instructed to adjudicate on the case.

That the grounds in support of their contention in favour of the jurisdiction and the arguments against it would be found fully set out in the inclosed papers, and we were requested to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Consular Court in Morocco could properly exercise jurisdiction in the present case, or whether Messrs. Thornton should have recourse to the native Tribunals.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consular Court has no jurisdiction in cases relating to land.

That we agree with the reasons and opinions of Mr. White and Sir J. H. D. Hay, that the Consular Courts have no jurisdiction in cases involving title to land in Morocco.

And, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Consular Court in that country cannot properly exercise jurisdiction in Messrs. Thornton's case.

The Treaty of 1856 no doubt gives exclusive jurisdiction to the British Consular Court as regards all causes of litigation between British subjects. But it must be remembered that, at the time this Treaty was negotiated, the right of foreigners to hold land in Morocco had not been recognized. The practice has been to deal specially in Treaties of this nature with litigation in respect to real property, where the Consular Courts are not in a position, in ordinary course, to give effect to their judgment. And when the language of the Treaty of Madrid, which first recognized the right of foreigners to hold land in Morocco, is examined, it appears to us that the terms of Article XI show that it was not intended that questions arising respecting such rights should be determined by the Consular Courts.

My Lord,

Case of "Rokeby." Jurisdiction of Consular Court at Muscat; as to condemnation of vessels and seizure of slaves beyond limits of Muscat; and legality of seizure by British officers of slaves on British vessels in waters of a foreign State without consent of such State.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 1st ultimo, stating that on the 2nd January, 1880, he had the honour to refer to our predecessors, by direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, certain questions on which the Government of India desired to have the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.*

That those questions were stated in their despatch of the 6th November, 1879, to Viscount Cranbrook, which formed one of the inclosures in the letter of the India Office to that Department of the 18th December, 1879. That the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown thereon was transmitted therewith.

That Sir J. Pauncefote had then the honour to lay before us, by direction of your Lordship, a letter from the India Office, dated the 25th November last, with its inclosures, from which it appeared that the Government of India, to whom the Report of our predecessors was transmitted, desired a further reference to the Law Officers of the Crown on two points which they considered were left in uncertainty by that Report, viz., whether the Consular Court at Muscat had jurisdiction to condemn slaves properly seized beyond the limits of Muscat; and, further, whether, under section 3 of 36 and 37 Vict., cap. 88, a British officer was justified in seizing slaves on board a British vessel lying within the waters of a foreign State without the consent of such State, in cases where the vessel is "engaged in or fitted out for the Slave Trade."

Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, a British officer is not, under 36 and 37 Vict., cap. 88, sec. 3, justified in seizing slaves on board a British vessel within the waters of a foreign State without the consent by Treaty or otherwise of such State in cases where the vessel is "engaged in, or fitted out for, the Slave Trade."

The question raised by the Indian Government, whether the Consular Court at Muscat has jurisdiction as a Court of Admiralty to condemn vessels or slaves when brought within its jurisdiction, without regard to the place where they are captured, or whether the jurisdiction of that Court is limited to vessels and slaves suspected of being used and detained for the purpose of the Slave Trade within the dominions of Muscat, is one of considerable difficulty. If it rested only on the construction of the Slave Trade (East African Courts) Act, 1873, we think it would be held that the Consul at Muscat was entitled to exercise only the more limited jurisdiction. We think the definition of "East African Courts" contained in that Act, when read with section 3, limited the jurisdiction of the Consul to cases where he was acting within the powers conferred upon him by Order in Council.

But an Act has since been passed (the Slave Trade (East African Courts) Act, 1879), to which the attention of the Government of India does not appear to have been called, which materially alters the Act of 1873. By the late Act a new definition is substituted for the term "East African Court." And when this new definition is read with section 3 of the Act of 1873, we think, though the point is not free from doubt, that the jurisdiction of the Consul is no longer limited as it was before.

We write this on the assumption that this extended jurisdiction is consistent with the terms of the Treaty between this country and the Imaum of Muscat, which is not before us.

Fine on Consul Annesley for neglect to appear as witness in Court.

My Lord, Temple, June 22, 1881.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Paucefote's letter of the 11th instant, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he transmitted to us the correspondence noted in the margin† which had taken place between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Consul at Surinam, relating to a fine of 60 guilders imposed by the local Tribunal upon Mr. Annesley, on account of his neglecting to appear as a witness in obedience to a summons of the Court. protest the fine in question, amounting to about 5*l.*, asked that Her Majesty's Government should take steps to carry on an appeal to a higher Court in Holland.

That Mr. Annesley was informed, in your Lordship's despatch No. 1 of the 12th March, that Consuls enjoyed no immunity from the process of the Courts of the country in which they exercised their functions, and that, if the summons was not duly served, that was a ground for showing cause against the infliction of the fine.

That, if that view be correct, it appeared to your Lordship that the case was not one in which Mr. Annesley could properly claim the assistance of Her Majesty's Government. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would be good enough to inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the terms of your Lordship's despatch above referred to, and in the view taken by your Lordship of the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Course he should have pursued.

That the proper course for Mr. Consul Annesley to have adopted (assuming the summons to have been informal or informally served) would have been to attend the Court and object to the summons on that ground, or, if he had been unable to attend, to have sought for a remission of the fine.

Consuls are liable to process of Court.

His position as Consul gave Mr. Annesley no immunity from the process of the Court; and we concur in the terms of your Lordship's despatch No. 1 of the 12th March, and in the view taken by your Lordship of Mr. Annesley's case.

Mr. Davies' claim against Hawaiian Government for return of differential duties levied on British goods.

My Lord, Temple, November 10, 1881.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence* respecting the claim of Mr. T. H. Davies against the Government of Hawaii, for the return of duties levied by them on certain goods of British growth and manufacture, while similar goods, the growth or manufacture of the United States of America, were, at the time, exempted from duty under the Reciprocity Treaty between the United States and Hawaii of January 1855.

That the claim of Mr. Davies was based on the most-favoured-nation clause of the Anglo-Hawaiian Treaty of 1851 (Article IV).† That copies of both Treaties were inclosed for reference.

That we should observe that Article IV of the British Treaty granted in general terms most-favoured-nation rights, but that by Article III which preceded it, it was agreed that any favour, privilege, or immunity whatever in matters of commerce or navigation which either Contracting Party had actually granted, or might hereafter grant to the subjects or citizens of any other State, should be extended to the subjects or citizens of the other Contracting Party gratuitously, if the concession in favour of that other State should have been gratuitous, or in return for a compensation as nearly as possible of proportionate value and effect, to be adjusted by mutual agreement if the concession should have been conditional.

That Article IV of the British Treaty was denounced by the Hawaiian Government, but that before the stipulated notice had expired, Mr. Davies was compelled to pay, and did pay, under protest, the duties in question.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to refer us to the letter of Hawaiian Minister to Major Wodehouse, of the 2nd June, 1881 (Inclosure 9 in Major Wodehouse's No. 7) which contained a full statement of the facts, and of the arguments on which the Hawaiian Government based their refusal to entertain the claim of Mr. Davies.

That they contended that as the duty was taken off American goods in return for particular concessions, Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to claim a similar exemption in that particular case.

That Lord Clarendon in 1856 concurred in that view (see Hawaiian Treaty Papers, Printed Correspondence,* p. 10, Mr. Carter's Memorandum), but that Mr. Davies' claim had since been supported by Her Majesty's Government.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, in view of the considerations urged by the Hawaiian Foreign Secretary in his letter of the 2nd June, Mr. Davies' claim was entitled to further support at the hands of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, whether the Hawaiian Government were justified in their contention that Mr. Davies must prefer his claim before the local Tribunals.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government ought not, on account of previous policy of Great Britain, to support this claim.

That the terms of Article IV of the Treaty of 1851 are general and absolute, and, if they are to be read without qualification, the act of the Hawaiian Government in levying the duties upon Mr. Davies' goods was clearly a violation of the Treaty. But the question arises whether the terms of this Article are controlled by the provisions of Article III. Two constructions of these Articles are possible: the one that Article III must be read with, and as qualifying in the cases to which it applies, the general terms of Article IV; the other, that Article III applies only to cases in which the privilege granted would not involve the imposition of differential duties. Each of these views is well open to argument. Upon the whole, our opinion inclines somewhat to the latter.

It appears, however, that in 1855, when a Reciprocity Treaty with the United States similar to that recently entered into was in course of negotiation, Her Majesty's Representative in the Hawaiian Islands, under the instructions of Lord Clarendon, addressed to the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs a note, in which it was expressly admitted that if such a Treaty of Commerce were concluded by which concessions of Tariff were made in consideration of reciprocal advantages, Great Britain could not, as a matter of right, claim the same advantages for her trade under the strict letter of the Treaty of 1851. And it is manifest that this was the position then maintained by the Hawaiian Minister. We have therefore both the persons who negotiated the Treaty putting this construction upon it—a construction which, as we have said, it is well capable of bearing, and which, in view of the facts to which we have referred, there can be little doubt that it was intended to bear.

Under these circumstances it would seem hardly equitable that Her Majesty's Government should now insist upon another construction of the Treaty and require the Hawaiian Government to satisfy the claim of Mr. Davies, the more so as Article IV of the Treaty has been since 1858 open to denunciation at any time upon twelve months' notice; and it is possible that it would have been denounced at an earlier period than it was, had not Lord Clarendon acquiesced in the construction put upon the Treaty by the Hawaiian Government.

We are, therefore, of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot further support the claim of Mr. Davies.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Earl Granville.—(Received January 13.)

January 13, 1881.

My Lord,

Suspected vessel fitting out at Newcastle-on-Tyne for Chilean Government.

THE Solicitor-General and I have received Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of to-day's date, in which he requests us to advise your Lordship whether a vessel, suspected of being about to be dispatched from the Tyne, contrary to the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Acts, should be seized and detained.

The urgency of the case has prevented us from affording more than a brief consideration to the question presented to us.

It appears to us that the information* before your Lordship leads to an almost certain conclusion that the vessel in question is intended to be used for the purposes of warfare; but the evidence to establish the fact that the vessel is to enter the service of Chile is at present very slight.

Should be detained, and steps taken to obtain further information.

We are, however, of opinion that there is sufficient evidence to justify action being taken, and that "the Local Authority" should be advised to seize and detain the vessel.

We suggest that immediate application should be made to the Peruvian Minister to furnish your Lordship with particulars of the information he refers to in his letter of the 8th instant. It will be well also to direct the Custom Officers at Newcastle to place before your Lordship any information they may possess as to the destination of the vessel.

When such information has been obtained, the release or further detention of the ship can be determined upon.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 14th instant, having reference to our Report of the 13th, and stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court,† containing further information of the grounds upon which he had reason to suspect that the vessel then fitting out in the Tyne was intended for the use of the Chilean Government.

That Lord Tenterden was also to transmit to us copies of a letter received through the Treasury that afternoon, and of its inclosure, from the Board of Customs.‡

That your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with any observations we might have to offer on those papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Steps to be taken.

That, in our opinion, efforts should be continued to obtain further information in relation to the destination of the vessel.

It would be important if the Peruvian Minister could furnish proof that Admiral Simpson or Captain Lynch were, when in this country, in communication with the ship-builders.

We are unaware whether the vessel is now under the control of Messrs. Mitchell or Messrs. Armstrong, but we see no objection to addressing, to whomsoever has that control, a communication to the effect that the vessel is being detained on the ground that the Government has reason to believe that she is intended to be employed in the service of Chile, and asking whether the person to whom the communication is addressed have any observations to make. No direct question should be put, as it may be said that the answer might lead to criminate the persons addressed.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 17, 1881.

Detention of suspected vessel fitting out at Newcastle-on-Tyne for Chileans.

WITH reference to your Reports on the subject of the vessel of war suspected of being equipped in the Tyne for the naval service of Chile, and detained by the Collector of Customs at Newcastle under the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, I am directed by Lord Granville to lay before you the further papers noted in the margin,* and to request that you will take the same into consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether Messrs. Armstrong should be invited to avail themselves of the provisions of section 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and to give security to Her Majesty's Government for insuring that the vessel in question, or any other vessel of war under their control, which is being built or equipped for the Chilean Government, shall not be dispatched, delivered, or removed without the licence of Her Majesty's Government before the termination of the war; and, if so, as to the amount of the security to be demanded.

I am to state that this was the course followed in the case of the Turkish ironclad referred to in the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 2nd May, 1877 (see collection for 1877, No. 69, p. 63).†

If you should think the above course inexpedient, I am to request that you will be good enough to advise Lord Granville what other steps should be taken under the circumstances, and also whether the vessel in question may be allowed to leave the slipway without prejudice to her safe custody in order not to interfere with the progress of her construction or equipments pending the further measures to be decided on.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

Report.‡

My Lord, January 17, 1881.§

Messrs. Armstrong should give security.

In reply to the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote received late this evening, and which appears to require an immediate answer, we have to say that we are of opinion that Messrs. Armstrong should be invited to avail themselves of the provisions of section 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and to give security to the effect mentioned in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter.

The amount of security to be given depends upon considerations in relation to which we require further information.

Vessel may leave slipway.

In accordance with the opinion already expressed by us, that nothing should be done to prevent the completion of the vessel, we think she should be allowed to leave the slipway without prejudice to her safe custody pending the further measures to be decided on.

My Lord,

We were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 13th instant respecting the vessel lying in the Tyne, and suspected of being equipped for the naval service of Chile, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury dated the 15th instant, with its inclosures, from which we would perceive that the vessel in question was detained by the Collector of Customs at Wallsend, half-way between Newcastle and the sea, where she had been hauled into a slipway. An officer of Customs had been placed on board, and your Lordship had requested the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to take at once such measures as might be necessary to support the action of the Collector of Customs at Newcastle, and to prevent the possibility of the vessel escaping from his custody.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Steps to be taken.

That we think your Lordship has acted wisely in asking the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to support the action of the Collector of Customs at Newcastle.

The Report of the Inspector of the Water-guard confirms us in the opinion expressed in our Report of the 15th that an opportunity should at once be afforded to the builders, or those in charge of the vessel, to state for what service she is destined.

My Lord,

Suspected vessel fitting out at Newcastle-on-Tyne for Chilean Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 17th instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 13th and 15th instant upon the subject of the vessel in the Tyne suspected of being intended for the naval service of Chile, Lord Tenterden was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Secretary to the Peruvian Legation,* making further statements in regard to the vessel in question, and contending that, under the Foreign Enlistment Act, Her Majesty's Government ought to have been fully informed of the proceedings in connection with her.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer that should be returned to Colonel Almonte.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Answer to be returned to Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires.

That we think your Lordship may, in reply to the letter of the Peruvian Minister, state that the builders have not given any notice under section 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and that no burthen of disproof is cast upon them under section 9 until it has been shown that a vessel has been built for the service of a foreign State at war with a friendly Power. It will also be desirable to inform the Peruvian Minister that he is entirely in error in stating that, "according to section 25, the Secretary of State must have been perfectly acquainted with all particulars of such vessels from the Admiralty Inspector." That section only empowers the Secretary of State to authorize a person to enter upon private ship-yards and inquire as to the destination of vessels, if he has information that they are to be employed in the naval service of a State at war with a friendly Power. No such authority was given in this case, as the vessel was in the river before any information reached the Secretary of State which would justify such interference, and no report of any kind was made by the Admiralty Inspectors. At the same time Colonel Almonte may be informed that

My Lord, Temple, March 30, 1881.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury* upon the subject of the Chilean vessel lately detained in the Tyne under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

† Admiralty, January 18; Messrs. Armstrong, January 18; Mr. Campbell, January 19; Messrs. Armstrong, January 22, 1881.

That we would see from that letter and its inclosures that Messrs. Armstrong and Co. had executed a bond for 10,000*l.* as security that the vessel in question should not, without the license of Her Majesty, be delivered to the Government of Chile, nor be permitted to leave the Tyne until the termination of the war between Chile and Peru, without prejudice to any measures which Her Majesty's Government might think proper to take to prevent the vessel being so delivered or dispatched. That Messrs. Armstrong and Co. had also given a written assurance that during the continuance of that war notice should be given to Her Majesty's Government of the intended departure from the Tyne, or transference from their control, of any war vessel under construction by them.

That there seemed to be, therefore, no reason now to fear an infraction of the Foreign Enlistment Act in regard to the vessel in question, but that we would observe that in the Treasury letter, the question was raised with reference to future action, how far the Foreign Enlistment Act imposed an obligation upon Her Majesty's Government to originate surveillance over vessels of war building in this country, without waiting to be set in motion by the Representatives of the Powers against whom such vessels might be intended to act.

That your Lordship apprehended that such an obligation, apart from the prescriptions of the Act, devolved upon Her Majesty's Government by international law, and that if we should concur your Lordship proposed to reply to the Treasury to that effect, and to recommend that the proper officers be instructed to exercise due diligence in watching all vessels of war under construction in private building yards in this country, and to report at once every case in which they had reasonable cause to believe that any vessel was being built, equipped, or about to be dispatched in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, adding, that on receiving such intelligence the Secretary of State would at once request an explanation from the Representative of the belligerent State, for whose service it was believed the vessel was being built or equipped or intended to be dispatched.

That with regard to the fear implied in the concluding passage of the Treasury letter that the consequence of unnecessarily interfering with an important branch of private trade might be to drive that trade to other countries, Sir Julian was to inclose a copy of the Report of the Neutrality Laws Commissioners from which we would perceive that the apprehensions expressed in the Treasury letter were fully discussed by Sir William Vernon Harcourt in the observations appended by him to the Report of the Commission, in which he deprecated any interference by law with the mere building of ships of war as distinguished from their being armed or dispatched for the service of a belligerent State. That, nevertheless, the resolutions contained in the Report of the Commission on that point were adopted by Legislature.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration and inform your Lordship whether we concur in the answer which your Lordship proposed to return to the Treasury, and, if so, that we would favour your Lordship with any suggestions that might occur to us as to any further precautions that might properly be taken to prevent infraction of sections 8 and 10 of the Foreign Enlistment Act without undue interference with legitimate trade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Opinion as to obligations imposed by international law with regard to building and fitting out of vessels of war, and course to be pursued to carry out such obligation.

That in our opinion by international law Her Majesty's Government is under the obligation to take precaution that no ship be within Her Majesty's dominions built or equipped with the intent that it shall be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign Power against any foreign belligerent Power with whom Her Majesty shall not then be at war.

This obligation can be fulfilled only by a watch being kept over vessels of war building in this country, and the proper officers may be instructed to exercise this duty of watching and reporting upon the construction of all vessels of war in private yards within Her Majesty's dominions which there is any reason to suspect may be in course of building or equipment for any foreign Power which is at war.

No doubt the exercise of this obligation and duty might be vexatious, and possibly to some extent, and in a sense mischievous, to the trade of the country, and therefore directions should be given to the officers employed that they are not in any way to interfere with the building of ships, but to confine themselves to the making their reports to the proper quarter from time to time.

Reply to Treasury letter.

We therefore see no objection to your Lordship's informing the Treasury of the course which you propose to take, and adding, that on receiving any intelligence of an intended or suspected violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act you will request an explanation from the Representative of the belligerent State for whose service the vessel is believed to be in course of construction or equipment, or to be intended to be dispatched.

Temple, April 8, 1881.

My Lord,

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th February last, stating that on the 14th June, 1880, he had the honour to lay before us, by direction of your Lordship, a printed correspondence on the subject of the four suits instituted in Lisbon against the owners of the British steamer "City of Mecca," and arising out of her collision with the Portuguese steamer "Insulano" on the high seas in January 1875,* and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether a note addressed by Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to the Portuguese Minister on the 30th January, 1880, protesting against the final Judgment on appeal of the Supreme Court of Justice of Portugal in the first suit, should receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

That in our Report on that reference, dated the 8th July, 1880 (which was printed at page 4 of the "Further Correspondence," Part II), while doubting the advisability of approving Mr. Morier's note in its entirety, we advised that the objection to the jurisdiction of the Portuguese Court might be maintained, and that an early answer from the Portuguese Government should be urged.

That that answer had now been received. That it was dated the 21st September, 1880, but owing to the time which had been occupied in translating so lengthy a document and in correcting the print, it had not been found possible to lay it before us at an earlier date.

That the Portuguese answer formed an inclosure in Mr. Morier's despatch No. 76, Commercial, of the 8th November, 1880 ("Further Correspondence," No. 31, p. 34).

That a detached copy of that despatch was now transmitted with Mr. Morier's notes thereon printed in the margin.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to state that the late Law Officers of the Crown, in their Report of the 4th December, 1879 ("Correspondence," No. 69, p. 118), advised that the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in the case was justified both on the point of jurisdiction and that of the meaning and application of the Sailing Rules, and that in view of the difference of opinion between our predecessors and ourselves as to the right of Her Majesty's Government to protest against the Judgment on the ground that it proceeded in disregard of the International Sailing Rules, the papers were laid before the Lord Chancellor ("Further Correspondence," No. 13, p. 12), who was requested to favour your Lordship with his views on the case, and especially on the point above mentioned.

That the findings of the jury in the first suit were contained in their answers to the forty-five queries put to them ("Correspondence," p. 99).

That the Portuguese text of the Sailing Rules referred to, with a translation, and the corresponding English and French Rules, had been printed in parallel columns, for convenience of reference, in a separate paper, which was transmitted.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to a Memorandum on the case by the Lord Chancellor, dated the 25th July, 1880, and printed at page 13 of the "Further Correspondence," No. 15.

That he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) would have the honour to address us in a separate letter of the same date on the subject of the second suit, arising out of the same collision (that instituted by the French underwriters), and also to lay before us, in connection therewith, a further Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor, dated the 30th November, 1880 ("Further Correspondence," No. 30, p. 32), to which he was to invite our attention in connection with the present reference.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the reply of the Portuguese Government to Mr. Morier's note of the 3th January, 1880, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what further action, if any, Her Majesty's Government could properly take in relation to the Judgment of the Supreme Court of Justice in the first suit (Lloyd v. the "City of Mecca"), which became final on the 11th June, 1880, by the rejection of the "Embargos" or counter-allegations filed by the Counsel for the "City of Mecca" against the decision of that Court pronounced on the 21st June, 1879 (Mr. Vansittart's No. 53 of the 6th July, 1880: "Further Correspondence," No. 11, p. 6).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Objection as to jurisdiction cannot be maintained.

That the further information now before us we think shows that the objection taken that the Portuguese Courts had assumed a jurisdiction not justified by law (and which appeared to us well founded when we made our Report of the 8th July, 1880), cannot be maintained.

The opinion we then expressed was given upon the assumption that the Judgment of the Supreme Court was the decision of the Court of Final Jurisdiction, and that the reasons upon which that Judgment proceeded must be taken as laying down finally and conclusively the legal grounds upon which the jurisdiction claimed by the Portuguese Court rested.

It now appears, however, that the Court of Relação is really the Court of Last Instance for the trial of the cause, and that the Supreme Court of Justice "is a Court of Revision, the sole duty of which is to examine whether the Courts of First and Second Instance have complied with the laws of procedure, and have adhered to the provisions of the law;" and that the reasons given only express the opinion of the reporting Judge, and are not to be taken as a binding exposition of the law.

When the Judgments of the Courts of First Instance and of the Courts of Relação are examined, it appears that they do not base their claim of jurisdiction upon the extraordinary proposition put forward in the "consideranda" of the Supreme Court, but upon the construction they place upon certain provisions of the municipal law of Portugal, which they were clearly competent to interpret, and which, if correctly interpreted by them, establish their jurisdiction upon grounds which do not infringe any principle of international law.

Although the Portuguese Minister relies upon these facts as an answer to that part of Mr. Morier's despatch of the 30th January, 1880, which dealt with the question of jurisdiction, he does not distinctly repudiate the view which finds expression in the "consideranda" of the Supreme Court. On the contrary, he states that distinguished authorities on international law have expressed the same opinion as that adopted by the reporting Judge, and he proceeds to support their contention by various references.

Portuguese doctrine as to territorial waters ought to be disclaimed.

Under these circumstances, we think Her Majesty's Government will be justified in calling upon the Portuguese Government to disclaim in an authoritative manner the doctrine that the territorial waters of Portugal extend as far as sight can reach from her shores. The more so as this is distinctly made one of the grounds of the decision of the Commercial Court of First Instance in the suit brought by the owners of the "Insulano."

We have again carefully examined the Judgments delivered by the various Courts, and we are still of opinion that they are not based exclusively upon any misinterpretation or misapplication of the International Sailing Rules.

We have no doubt that the interpretation of some of those Rules which the Courts were disposed to adopt, or did adopt, was erroneous, but the decision seems to us to have proceeded alternatively, at all events, on grounds independent of such error. The reasoning of the Courts we take to be this: Conceding that the construction of Rule 14 (English) contended for on behalf of the "Insulano" was wrong, and that she pursued her course on the occasion in question in violation of that Rule, yet the "City of Mecca" might, by the exercise of due care and by a compliance on her part when the danger was imminent with the provisions of the subsequent Rules, have avoided the collision, and so prevented the original breach of Rule by the "Insulano" resulting in any mischief.

We do not say that in our opinion this view was well founded in point of fact. But it is a view of the evidence which might conceivably be taken, and it may well be that according to the law of Portugal the "City of Mecca" would in such circumstances properly be held liable for the damage done. Indeed, we incline to think that it would be in accord, in that case, with the rule of the common law in England, though such a case as the present has in this country been dwelt with by special legislation, it being provided that any vessel violating the Sailing Rules shall be deemed to be in fault.

We think the case is one for strong diplomatic remonstrance for the purpose of securing that the translation of all the Rules which have, owing to mistranslation, been misinterpreted, should be set right, and the corrections made in such a public and authoritative manner as will prevent any question for the future.

We find it difficult to advise that Her Majesty's Government should go beyond remonstrance, and claim an indemnity for the owners of the "City of Mecca."

We quite feel that the false interpretation of the Sailing Rules may have influenced and very likely did bias the Judgments of the Courts. But apart from the consideration that our own Government is not altogether free from blame in relation to the mistranslation of the Rules, we are pressed by the fact that the Judgments appear to have a substantial basis independent of the misinterpretation of the Rules. And as our claim would necessarily be based upon this latter ground alone, we feel that our position even in demanding an arbitration would be a precarious one.

Temple, April 8, 1881.

My Lord,

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th February last, stating that in continuation of his separate letter of that date respecting the case of the "City of Mecca," he was directed to lay before us, for our consideration and advice, the papers noted in the margin,* with reference to the second suit instituted at Lisbon against the owners of the "City of Mecca," namely, that of the French Insurers.

That at the date of our last Report in relation to the "City of Mecca" (8th July, 1880), the only one of the four suits instituted against her which had occupied our attention was the first one, namely, that of Lloyd's.

That the second suit, that of the French Insurers, was originally decided by the Court of First Instance in favour of the "City of Mecca" on the point of jurisdiction ("Correspondence," p. 101). That that decision was reversed by the Court of Relação, and the "City of Mecca" was held solely to blame, and condemned in all the damages and costs ("Correspondence," p. 40). That that last Judgment was confirmed by the Supreme Court of Justice on the 15th June, 1880 (Mr. Vansittart's No. 55 of the 9th July, 1880; "Further Correspondence," No. 12, p. 7).

That that suit, therefore, like the first, had then reached its final stage (with the exception of the formality of lodging "Embargos"), and Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon had addressed a despatch to your Lordship (No. 67 of the 5th October, 1880; "Further Correspondence," No. 25, p. 20), containing an elaborate Memorandum on the three Judgments pronounced therein. That Mr. Morier in that despatch abandoned the point of jurisdiction, but contended that the Judgments in question called for diplomatic intervention, on the ground that they proceeded on a misconstruction of the International Sailing Rules, and by reason of their non-application or misapplication to the admitted facts of the case.

That in Sir Julian Pauncefote's separate letter of that date he referred us to a Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor of the 25th July, 1880 ("Further Correspondence," No. 15, p. 13), in which that point was dealt with by his Lordship in relation to the first suit in paragraphs 4 and 5.

* Correspondence, No. 4243; Further Correspondence, No. 4633.

That on receipt of Mr. Morier's despatch No. 67 of the 5th October ("Further Correspondence," No. 25, p. 20), it was laid before the Lord Chancellor, with a request that he would favour your Lordship with his opinion whether, having regard to paragraphs 4 and 5 of his Memorandum of the 25th July, the Judgment in the second suit then under consideration would justify diplomatic representation on the grounds urged by Mr. Morier.

That the findings of the jury in the second suit would be found in their answers to the thirty-four counts placed before them ("Correspondence," p. 38).

That the Portuguese text of the Sailing Rules referred to in the case with a translation and the corresponding English and French Rules, had been printed in parallel columns for convenience of reference in a separate paper transmitted therewith.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote then referred us to the Lord Chancellor's further Memorandum of the 30th November, 1880, in reply to the question submitted by your Lordship ("Further Correspondence," No. 30*, p. 32*).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to refer us to the answer of the Portuguese Government to the protest of Her Majesty's Government against the Judgment in the first suit, which formed the subject of the separate reference to us in his letter No 1 of that date, and he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what action, if any, Her Majesty's Government could properly take in relation to the Judgment of the Supreme Court of Justice in the second suit.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Referring to Report on first suit, and repeating opinion given therein.

That we have, in answer to Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, to refer your Lordship to our Report upon the first suit against the "City of Mecca," and to repeat the opinion there given as to the course which, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government can now take.

Note by the Lord Chancellor.

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano. Approving Law Officers of the 8th April.

THE opinion of the Law Officers of the 8th April is, in my judgment, sound and correct as to all the questions of international law with which it deals, and also in its appreciation of the Portuguese Judgments in the several cases.

Ten-mile limit theory. Portuguese assurances.

I observe that the Portuguese Law Officers, though reasoning rather loosely as to the power of different nations to define for themselves the extent of their own territorial waters, give up, as untenable, the ten-mile theory. (Inclosure 2 in Mr. Morier's No. 76, Commercial, of 8th November, 1880, No. 31, pp. 74 and 75.)* On this point, therefore, I should expect that the Portuguese Government will give the assurances, which we are entitled to ask for, without any difficulty.

Revision of Portuguese version of Sailing Rules necessary.

But I see, with much surprise, in the same opinion of the Portuguese Law Officers, that they state the "City of Mecca" to have been condemned "on the ground of her non-compliance with Articles 17, 18, 20, and 21 (of the Decree embodying the Sailing Rules) as to the meaning of which Articles no doubts have arisen." This makes it doubly necessary that we should require such a complete revision of the Portuguese translation of the Rules as will bring their sense for the future into conformity with the true intention of the international compact.

Opinion as to demand for compensation.

I continue to believe that, but for the misinterpretation of the Rules, the "City of Mecca" could never have been held solely to blame; and, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government would be justified (if they thought it expedient) in endeavouring to obtain some compensation for the owners of the "City of Mecca" upon that ground alone. But I agree with the Law Officers, that, as the matter stands upon the face of the Judgments, it cannot be so clearly demonstrated that they are necessarily founded upon any misinterpretation of the Rules as to make such a claim to compensation one which could be pressed to extremity; and I am not prepared to differ from their view, that "our position, even in demanding an arbitration, would be a precarious one." The case, nevertheless, leaves on my mind a very disagreeable impression of a substantial failure of justice.

It would be desirable (I think) that Her Majesty's Government should ascertain what have been the results (if any) of the actions founded on these Portuguese Judgments which have been brought against the owners of the "City of Mecca" in this country. My impression is, that some such actions are still pending.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received September 10.)

Collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano." Approve proposed draft to Mr. Morier on subject of arbitration.

My Lord, Temple, September 10, 1881.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the case of the "City of Mecca," and to our two Reports thereon of the 8th April last, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the documents noted in the margin and comprising a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 76, Commercial), which, although dated the 21st December, 1880, was not received until the 23rd April last, and, consequently, after the date of our Reports above mentioned.

That in that despatch Mr. Morier strongly urged that an effort should be made to induce the Portuguese Government to submit the case to international arbitration, on the ground that the "City of Mecca" was held solely to blame and was mulcted in the whole of the damages and costs, whereas the evidence in the case and the findings of the jury showed that the master of the "Insulano," in the course he followed, proceeded on a misconstruction of Article 14 of the Sailing Rules, the true meaning of which was explained in an official notification issued by the Portuguese Government at the time of the litigation, on the representation of Mr. Morier.

That your Lordship had not failed to note that, in our opinion, the position of Her Majesty's Government, in demanding an arbitration, would be a precarious one. That, nevertheless, your Lordship could not divest yourself of the impression that a substantial failure of justice had occurred, and that the reasons advanced by Mr. Morier for pressing the Portuguese Government to refer the case to arbitration were of considerable weight. That they went beyond the mere question between the owners and underwriters of the "Insulano," and that your Lordship was disposed to think that Her Majesty's Government should do what was in their power to obtain redress for them, whatever might be the event. That your Lordship had accordingly caused the draft of a despatch to Mr. Morier to be prepared for our consideration, setting out the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government would invite the Portuguese Government to refer the case to international arbitration, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it was open to any objection in point of law, or might properly be communicated as proposed to the Portuguese Government by Mr. Morier.

That, in conclusion, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to draw our attention to the Report from the "Times" of the 5th May last (a copy of which was inclosed), from which we would perceive that the writ issued by the English underwriters in the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, with a view to enforcing against the "City of Mecca" in this country the Judgment of the Portuguese Tribunal in their favour, had been set aside on appeal, it having been ascertained that the Portuguese Judgment was in personam and not in rem.

And that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our Report at our earliest convenience.

In compliance with the request contained in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

That we think the accompanying draft of a despatch to Mr. Morier is not open to any objection in point of law, and may properly be communicated as proposed to the Portuguese Government.

Annex.

Sir, Foreign Office, September , 1881.

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered the reply of the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs to the note which you addressed to his Excellency on the 30th January, 1880, on the subject of the Judgment pronounced by the Supreme Court of Justice of Portugal, in a suit instituted in Lisbon against the owners of the British steamer "City of Mecca," and arising out of a collision between that vessel with the Portuguese steamer "Insulano" on the high seas in January 1875.

The reply of the Portuguese Minister to your note is dated the 21st September, 1880, and was transmitted by you in your despatch No. 76, Commercial, of the 8th November, 1880; but owing to the time which has been occupied in the translation of documents, in the examination of the voluminous correspondence relating to the case, and in references to the Law Officers of the Crown, Her Majesty's Government have been unable until now to furnish you with further instructions on the subject.

There were two grounds on which Her Majesty's Government based their right of diplomatic intervention—the excess of jurisdiction by the Portuguese Tribunals, and their failure to give effect to the International Sailing Rules.

The first cause of complaint was the assumption of jurisdiction by the Portuguese Courts to deal with a suit in personam beyond the limit which could properly appertain to them, and the doctrine laid down by the Court of Final Appeal, that the territorial jurisdiction and the authority of the Civil and Criminal Laws of Portugal extend as against British subjects over ten miles or more of the sea visible from the Portuguese coast.

It now appears, however, from the note of Senhor Braamcamp, that the reasons upon which the Judgment of the Supreme Court proceeded must not be taken as laying down the legal grounds on which the jurisdiction claimed by the Portuguese Court rested. It is explained that the Supreme Court is a Court of Revision, the sole duty of which is to examine whether the Courts of First and Second Instance have complied with the Laws of Procedure, and have adhered to the provisions of the law; and that the reasons given only express the opinion of the reporting Judge, and are not to be taken as a binding exposition of the law.

When the Judgments of the Courts of First Instance and of Relação are examined, it appears that those Courts do not base their claim of jurisdiction upon the proposition put forward in the "consideranda" of the Supreme Court, but upon the construction they place upon certain provisions of the municipal law of Portugal, which they were clearly competent to interpret, and which, if correctly interpreted by them, establish their jurisdiction upon grounds which do not infringe any principle of international law.

But, although the Portuguese Minister relies upon these facts as an answer to that part of your note of the 30th January, 1880, which deals with the question of jurisdiction, he does not distinctly repudiate the view which finds expression in the "consideranda" of the Supreme Court. On the contrary, his Excellency states that distinguished authorities on international law have expressed the same opinion as that adopted by the reporting Judge, and he proceeds to support their contention by various references.

Under these circumstances, Her Majesty's Government feel justified in calling upon the Portuguese Government to disclaim in an authoritative manner the doctrine that the territorial waters of Portugal extend as far as sight can reach from her shores; the more so, as this is distinctly made one of the grounds of the decision of the Commercial Court of First Instance in the suit brought by the owners of the "Insulano."

note abandon that doctrine as untenable, and I conclude therefore that the Portuguese Government will have no difficulty in giving the assurances which Her Majesty's Government consider themselves entitled to ask on this point.

The second ground of remonstrance was that, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, a serious miscarriage of justice had taken place by reason of the misinterpretation and misapplication of the International Sailing Rules by the Portuguese Courts.

I regret to state that on this part of the case the arguments of the Portuguese Minister have entirely failed to dispose of the complaint of Her Majesty's Government.

According to the Report of the Portuguese Law Officers, the "City of Mecca" was condemned on the ground of her non-compliance with Articles 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the Sailing Rules (as numbered in the Portuguese Decree of the 12th March, 1863), and they state that no doubts have arisen as to the meaning of those Articles.

It is unnecessary for the present purpose to discuss the meaning of those Articles (which are numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20 in the British Rules), or to enter into an exposition of the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government consider that, owing to imperfect translation and for other reasons, those Articles have been misapprehended or misapplied by the Court; as, for example, in the case of Article 18 (17 British), which the Court applied to the present case of vessels crossing, whereas it has reference only to the case of one vessel overtaking another.

The fact which I am anxious that you should again bring prominently to the attention of the Portuguese Government is that, even conceding, for the sake of the argument, that the above Articles had been violated by the officer in command of the "City of Mecca," the Judgment takes no account of the fact that the primary cause of the collision was the violation by the Captain of the "Insulano" of Article 14 (15 Portuguese), which is as follows:—

"If two ships under steam are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the ship which has the other on her starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other."

The two steamers had been in sight of each other for more than an hour, on a bright day, with a perfectly smooth sea, and they were "crossing" within the meaning of that Article. All doubt as to the proper construction of the Article was set at rest by the Royal Decree of the 3rd July, 1877, and it is admitted that it was the duty of the "Insulano" to keep out of the way of the "City of Mecca." It was abundantly proved by the evidence, and it is recorded in the findings of the jury, that the Captain of the "Insulano," instead of keeping out of the way, kept the same course until (as he himself admits) the collision was imminent; and that he might have avoided the collision if he had, at a proper distance, either stopped or gone astern, or had so steered as to pass astern of the "City of Mecca." (Answers of the jury, 30 and 31.)

This fatal error on the part of the Captain of the "Insulano" is explained by his admission that he was, at the time, under the mistaken impression that on the proper construction of Article 14 it was the duty of the "City of Mecca," and not of his own vessel, to keep out of the way.

Senhor Braamcamp in his note endeavours to exculpate him, on the ground that he conscientiously thought that it was his duty to keep his course until there was immediate or imminent danger. But the question is not whether he acted conscientiously, but whether he obeyed or violated Article 14.

As regards the officer in command of the "City of Mecca," he was clearly entitled to keep his course, and to expect that the Captain of the "Insulano" would obey Article 14. It may be that, when the peril occasioned by the faulty navigation of the "Insulano" became imminent, the catastrophe which ensued might have been avoided by some timely manœuvre on the part of the "City of Mecca," such as stopping and going astern. But any blame which may attach to that officer for his alleged want of skill or presence of mind at the moment of peril cannot exonerate the Captain of the "Insulano," whose violation of the sailing rule as to crossing steamers occasioned the peril, and was, as before stated, the primary cause of the collision.

Whatever blame, therefore, may attach to the officer in command of the "City of Mecca," the facts as found by the jury establish a case of contributory negligence on the part of the Captain of the "Insulano," who had first infringed Article 14, and it follows that each ought to bear his own loss, as laid down in Article 1568 of the Portuguese Commercial Code, which enacts that, "If a collision takes place through the fault of both captains or of both crews, each ship shall bear her own damage."

Nevertheless, the Supreme Court have mulcted the owners of the "City of Mecca" in the whole of the damages and costs.

It is with great regret that Her Majesty's Government find themselves compelled to adopt conclusions in relation to this case at variance with those arrived at by the eminent Judges who preside over that Tribunal, and whose decision they would not feel justified in questioning were it not that it involves international rights of the highest importance. But Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that in this case the Supreme Court has failed to give effect to the International Compact relating to Navigation, and that the responsibility for the miscarriage of justice resulting therefrom rests with the Portuguese Government.

The International Sailing Rules are binding on the Tribunals of every nation which has subscribed to them; and, in the present case, the highest Tribunal in Portugal has deliberately relieved the Captain of a Portuguese vessel from all responsibility for the violation by him of one of the most important of those rules to the serious detriment of British ship-owners, and to the prejudice of navigation in general. This constitutes, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, a clear miscarriage of justice, not only affecting Treaty rights, but, as you have already pointed out, calculated to increase the dangers of navigation, which it was the object of the International Sailing Rules to diminish.

Her Majesty's Government feel compelled, therefore, to exhaust all the means in their power, by way of friendly discussion and expostulation, to obtain the redress to which they consider themselves entitled; and, as the subject is one of international interest and importance, they are willing, in view of the grave differences of opinion which, unfortunately, prevail between the two Governments on some of the points involved, to refer the case to International Arbitration.

I have to instruct you, therefore, to hand a copy of this despatch to the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs, and to request his Excellency to submit this friendly proposal to his Government for their favourable consideration.

British Consular jurisdiction in Roumania.
Levant Order in Council no longer applicable.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he transmitted to us the printed Correspondence and documents, noted in the margin,* and relating to British Consular jurisdiction in Roumania.

That, before the date of the Treaty of Berlin, and until the 20th February last, when the independence of Roumania was formally recognized by Her Majesty's Government, in pursuance of Article XLIII of the Treaty, the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in that Principality was regulated by the general Order in Council for the Ottoman Dominions of the 12th December, 1873.

That the extent of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Roumania was not precisely defined, and we would perceive from the printed Correspondence that the powers hitherto exercised there by Her Majesty's Consular officers under the Order in Council had been confined to the levying of certain fees and the trial of cases in which no Roumanian interest was involved. That, on that point, Sir Julian Paucefote was to refer us to the printed Correspondence, Nos. 1, 3, 6, and 9.

That Article XLIX of the Treaty of Berlin declared that "existing rights shall remain in force so long as they shall not have been modified by mutual consent of the Principality and the parties concerned."

That, in the meanwhile, Roumania having ceased to form part of the Ottoman dominions, the general Order in Council for the Levant had no longer any application in Roumania, and Her Majesty's Minister at Bucharest and Her Majesty's Consul at Galatz had urgently requested instructions for their guidance as regarded the exercise of their jurisdiction.

That, by Article VIII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Roumania of the 5th April last, the privileges of the "most favoured nation" were secured to British Consular officers, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our particular attention to Mr. White's despatch No. 18 of the 10th May, 1880 (Correspondence, p. 3), and Mr. Sanderson's despatch No. 50 of the 8th December, 1880 (Correspondence, p. 5) as showing the present state of the relations between the two countries on the subject of Consular jurisdiction.

That, in the state of things therein described, it was suggested that a short Order in Council should be passed declaring that, notwithstanding the recognition of the independence of Roumania by Her Majesty's Government, Her Majesty's Consuls should be deemed to have legally continued to exercise in Roumania the powers vested in them by the Order in Council for the Levant, so far as those powers were exercisable in Roumania at the date of the Treaty of Berlin, and were saved and continued by Article XLIX of that Treaty.

That Mr. F. S. Reilly was accordingly instructed to prepare the draft of an Order in Council to carry out that suggestion, but we would observe from his Reports of the 31st March, 1880, and 2nd August, 1880 (printed Correspondence, pp. 2 and 4), that he was of opinion that the course proposed was open to objections.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we were also of opinion that there were objections to the proposed Order, and if so, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our advice as to the course which should be followed to remove the difficulties pointed out in the Correspondence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Objections to proposed Order in Council.

That we agree with Mr. Reilly that the objections to the proposed Order in Council are such that the Order cannot properly be made.

There appears from the printed Correspondence to be no inconsiderable difficulty in ascertaining what were the existing rights of Consuls in the Principality at the time of the Treaty of Berlin, and in what manner and to what extent those rights could be exercised.

We apprehend, however, that such rights as were then in fact in existence, and are preserved by the XLIXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin, could acquire no additional validity from an Order in Council.

Course provided by Treaty of Berlin should be followed, and Consular Convention should be concluded.

The right course now to follow is, in our opinion, that provided by the XLIXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin, and that a Convention should be made with Roumania, "determining the privileges and attributes of Consuls in regard to protection" (and in other respects) "in Roumania."

Consular jurisdiction in Roumania.

My Lord, Temple, June 8, 1881.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 26th April on the subject of Consular jurisdiction in Roumania, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our further opinion upon the following point:—

That in the above Report we observed that the proposed Order in Council would give no additional validity to the rights preserved by the XLIXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to explain that the object of the proposed Order was not to give additional validity to such rights (which were not disputed so far as concerned the levy of fees and the trial of cases in which no Roumanian interest was concerned), but to give legal power to Her Majesty's Consuls to exercise such rights, it being conceived that the Order in Council for the Levant, under which they had hitherto exercised those rights, had ceased to have effect in Roumania.

That your Lordship therefore desired to be informed whether, pending the making of a Convention, Her Majesty's Consular officers in Roumania were to be instructed to abstain from levying the fees, and from exercising the jurisdiction in question.

That the papers previously submitted to us were transmitted therewith, for convenience of reference.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, whatever rights existed at the time of the Treaty of Berlin, and are kept alive by Section 49 of that Treaty, may now lawfully be exercised by Her Majesty's Consuls without any fresh Order in Council. Although the Orders in Council under which those rights were exercised in terms applied only to the Ottoman dominions of which Roumania has ceased to form part, we think the effect of Section 49 of the Treaty is to preserve those rights in full force, and make them lawfully exerciseable just as if it had continued a part of the Ottoman Dominions until they are modified by mutual consent.

It was for this reason that we expressed the opinion in our former Report that such Consular rights as were in existence could acquire no additional validity from an Order in Council.

Under authority of XLIXth Article of Berlin Treaty Consuls may, pending the making of a Convention, exercise rights, jurisdiction, &c.

We do not think that Her Majesty's Consular officers in Roumania should be instructed to abstain from levying the fees and from exercising the jurisdiction in question pending the making of a Convention. Until a new Convention is arrived at they may, in our opinion, continue to exercise all such rights as they have heretofore lawfully exercised.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received March 12.)

My Lord, Temple, March 11, 1881.

Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. Complaint against Judicial authorities in Russia.

That Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. complained of a denial of justice by the Russian Tribunals, resulting in a loss to them of about 15,000*l.*, and they asked that Her Majesty's Government should insist on compensation being awarded to them.

Oppenheimer v. Abouloff, an Armenian trader of Tiflis.

That that firm had been engaged in litigation since 1876 with one Abouloff, an Armenian trader of Tiflis, in the Caucasus.

* See Law Officers' Report of April 26, 1881.

† In Messrs. Emanuel and Simonds, January 25, 1881; Mr. Plunkett's No. 31, Consular; to Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co., July 4; Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. (received) July 16; to Mr. Plunkett, No. 18, Consular; Mr. Plunkett, No. 40, Consular, 1879; Earl of Dufferin, No. 4, Consular; to Mr. Plunkett, No. 28, Consular; Mr. Plunkett, No. 26, Consular; Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. (received) November 4, 1880.

That one of the questions involved related to the ownership of certain goods entrusted by the firm to Abouloff, as their agent, for sale, on commission, under two contracts in writing. That the goods having been seized in execution in an action for debt brought by a third party, one Plusheffski, in the District Court at Tiflis, proceedings were instituted in the Courts at Tiflis on their behalf by their representative, Mr. Uloth, which resulted in a Decree of the Supreme Court of Tiflis, dated the 16th October, 1876, declaring the goods to be their absolute property.

That, in the meanwhile, Mr. Uloth had instituted criminal proceedings against Abouloff, and the Circuit Court of Tiflis gave a Judgment on the 17th November, 1876, whereby Abouloff was held criminally responsible, and was ordered by the Court to find bail for the full amount of Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co.'s claim (40,000 roubles), and to deliver possession to Mr. Uloth of the store in which the goods of Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. [sic].

That, according to Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co.'s statement, an official named Toulaieff was the person charged with the execution of the above order, and he neglected to carry it out, acting, it was alleged, in fraudulent connivance with Abouloff. That he left Abouloff in possession of the store, and accepted bail which he knew to be worthless.

That thereupon fresh proceedings were instituted by Uloth, and, by a second Judgment of the same Court, given on the 21st December, 1876, Toulaieff was again directed to give possession to Uloth, and to take substantial bail. But that in the meanwhile part of the goods had been clandestinely removed, no further bail was taken, and Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co.'s first complaint was that they lost the benefit of the Judgments (Statement, pp. 3, 4).

That the case was represented to the Russian Government by Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, and in reply a Report was furnished from the Government of the Caucasus (see Mr. Plunket's No. 31 of the 18th June, 1879), which was printed at p. 15 of the Statement.

That it appeared from that Report that on the 27th March, 1877, the Chief Court of Justice at Tiflis, on appeal brought by Abouloff, reversed the Judgment of the Circuit Court of the 21st December, 1876, with all its consequences, holding that Abouloff could not be proceeded against criminally until, not merely the question of the ownership of the goods, but certain other questions of civil right involved, had been decided.

That the Report further stated that the Chief Court of Justice had re-examined the case and had made a new Decree, setting forth that its Judgment of the 16th October, 1876, declaring the goods in question to be the property of Oppenheimer and Co., could not serve as a basis for a criminal prosecution against Abouloff, for the reasons above mentioned (Statement, p. 17).

That the Report also denied that there was any misconduct on the part of Toulaieff (who was described as a Judge of Instruction), or of any other public officer.

That a copy of the Report was communicated on the 4th July, 1879, to Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co., who, in a letter dated 16th July, 1879, commented thereon, and continued to urge their right to indemnity.

That a copy of their letter was transmitted to Mr. Plunkett, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh, in despatch No. 18 of the 8th September, 1879, and he was instructed to press for a further inquiry into that part of the case relating to the alleged misconduct of Toulaieff, but that that request, which was accordingly made by Mr. Plunkett (see his No. 40 of the 2nd October, 1879), was not acceded to by the Russian Government (see Lord Dufferin's No. 4 of the 15th May, 1880).

That, in the meanwhile, Abouloff had instituted a cross action in the Civil Court of Tiflis against Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co., and on the 2nd June, 1879, obtained Judgment against them for about 25,000 roubles.

That Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. appealed to the Senate at St. Petersburgh, and it was in connection with that appeal that their second complaint arose.

That in their letter to your Lordship of the 4th November, 1880, they stated that the appeal had been heard ex parte and without notice to them, having been taken out of its turn in the Cause List, and had been decided against them.

That thereupon Mr. Plunkett was instructed (No. 28 of the 10th November, 1880), to consult the legal adviser of the Embassy as to what steps could be properly taken in the matter.

That the Report of that gentleman would be found in Mr. Plunkett's No. 26 of the 15th December, and was to the effect that, in his opinion, Her Majesty's Embassy could not interfere on behalf of Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co.

That that opinion having been communicated to Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co., the latter caused the accompanying printed Statement to be prepared, in the hope that some further action might be taken on their behalf.

That, as regarded the first complaint, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that it was founded on the non-execution, by an officer of the Circuit Court of Tiflis, of the Decree of the 21st December, 1876.

But that as that Decree was subsequently reversed, "with all its consequences," by the Chief Court of Justice at Tiflis, on the 22nd March, 1877, your Lordship apprehended that the loss of the benefits which that Decree purported to confer could hardly constitute a valid ground for claiming indemnity, even if the charges against Toulaieff had been admitted.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request, however, that we would take all the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government could properly take any further action on behalf of Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the complaint of Messrs. Oppenheimer, apart from their suggestions that the decisions against them were erroneous, appears to be limited to the allegations that Toulaieff, an officer of the Court at Tiflis, was guilty of corruption and misconduct resulting in mischief to them, and secondly, that the hearing of the final appeal by the Senate at St. Petersburgh was improperly and illegally brought on out of its due turn, and the Judgment consequently pronounced ex parte, without the appellants having the opportunity of being present and being heard.

As regards the charges relating to Toulaieff, it is important to bear in mind the nature of the several proceedings which have taken place in the Russian Courts.

On the 16th October the Chief Court of Justice at Tiflis decided that certain goods seized by one Plusheffski to answer a claim which he had against Abouloff, were the goods of Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. as against Plusheffski.

Prior to this, on the 20th August, 1876, Uloth, on behalf of Oppenheimer and Co., commenced criminal proceedings against Abouloff.

In those proceedings Abouloff raised the defence that until the civil questions arising between him and Oppenheimer under the agreement of the 24th November had been determined the criminal proceedings were not well founded.

The Tiflis District Court, in its Judgments of the 17th November and 21st December, 1876, repelled this defence and decided in favour of Oppenheimer.

It is in relation to his alleged corrupt neglect to carry out these decisions that Toulaieff's conduct is impeached. But it appears that on Abouloff's appeal to the Chief Court of Justice at Tiflis, that Court, on the 23rd March, 1877, reversed the decision of the District Court of the 21st December, 1876, with all its consequences, holding that the defence of Abouloff was well founded.

It follows that Messrs. Oppenheimer cannot be said to have sustained any damage by the non-execution of Decrees which must be taken to have been erroneous in point of law, and such as, therefore, ought never to have been pronounced.

We accordingly concur in the view suggested that, even if there were misconduct on the part of Toulaieff, the claim of Messrs. Oppenheimer, on this ground, cannot, under the circumstances, be properly pressed upon the Russian Government.

After the decision of the Chief Court of Justice at Tiflis, which stayed the criminal proceedings against Abouloff, he commenced civil proceedings against Oppenheimer and Co., and, on the 2nd June, 1879, obtained a Judgment against them for 25,210 roubles. By this means, in the opinion of Mr. Melegi, Messrs. Oppenheimer's legal adviser, "the civil and criminal proceedings against Abouloff may be considered as terminated." But, on his advice, an appeal was presented to the Senate at St. Petersburgh, and it is with reference to this appeal that the second complaint is made.

The opinion of the legal adviser to the British Embassy at St. Petersburgh appears to us to establish that, however unfortunate in its results to Messrs. Oppenheimer, there was nothing illegal or improper in the mode in which the appeal was disposed of, or the time at which it was taken, and nothing certainly to afford evidence that it was corruptly obtained.

We think, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government cannot properly prefer any claim on this ground either against the Russian Government. It is impossible for a Government, on behalf of its subjects, to interfere with propriety in relation to the administration of justice in other countries unless corruption or unequal application of laws, or clear perversion of justice, can be shown, and we see no grounds on which to base either of such complaints in this case.

Oppenheimer v. Abouloff. Petition to Emperor of Russia, praying for appeal to be reheard.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, with reference to the letter from the Foreign Office of the 25th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a further letter from Messrs. D. Oppenheimer and Co.,* inclosing a petition which they had addressed to the Emperor of Russia praying that the appeal recently heard before the Senate at St. Petersburgh, prematurely and ex parte, in regard to the Abouloff case, might be reheard; Messrs. Oppenheimer and Co. at the same time requesting that that petition might, if your Lordship saw no objection to such a course, be forwarded to its destination through Her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburgh.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was accordingly to request that we would take those papers into our immediate consideration, together with those upon that subject then before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Messrs. Oppenheimer's request could properly be acceded to.

That your Lordship was informed that the matter was urgent in consequence of an action having been commenced against the petitioners on the Russian Judgment to which exception was taken, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would be good enough to report on their proposed memorial at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Petition should be sent through Russian Embassy, or through Messrs. Oppenheimer's agents at St. Petersburgh, if according to usage.

That since the petition is now addressed to the Emperor directly, Messrs. Oppenheimer should, we consider, send it through the Russian Embassy in this country, or present it through their own agents at St. Petersburgh.

This, however, is a question of diplomatic usage, and unless the usage is in favour of Messrs. Oppenheimer, it may be well not to make a precedent, which may hereafter lead to inconvenience.

My Lord, Temple, June 30, 1881.

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn from St. Petersburgh.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th of June instant, stating that he was directed to lay before us the papers noted in the accompanying list† and relating to the case of Mr. Lewisohn, which had lately been the subject of discussion in Parliament.

That Mr. Lewisohn, who was a native of Hamburg, and belonged to the Jewish faith, was a naturalized British subject (under the Act of 1870), and carried on business as a merchant in London.

That, in his letter to your Lordship of the 26th of November last, he stated that in the previous month of August he had visited Russia for the purposes of his business, being furnished with a Foreign Office passport duly visé by the Russian Consul-General in London. After spending three weeks at the Nishny Novgorod Fair, he returned to St. Petersburgh, where the police authorities, having discovered that he was a Jew, ordered him to leave the capital within twenty-four hours, no other reason being assigned than that he was a Jew.

That, in consequence of the Report on the case, furnished by Mr. Plunkett, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh, in his despatch No. 612 of the 15th December, Mr. Lewisohn was informed that his expulsion from St. Petersburgh appeared to be warranted by Russian law. Her Majesty's Ambassador, however, was instructed to represent the case to the Russian Government, and to inquire whether there would be any objection to Mr. Lewisohn's return to Russia.

That, after a considerable delay and repeated applications, a reply was received to the effect that Mr. Lewisohn's request for permission to revisit St. Petersburgh had been submitted to the Department of Police, but the authorities in question had declined to acquiesce therein. (Lord Dufferin's No. 112 of the 22nd March, 1881.) That, the case having excited much public interest, and doubts having been raised whether the action of the Russian Government in that matter was consistent with their Treaty obligations and warranted by the Russian laws, your Lordship instructed Mr. Plunkett to procure a Report from the Legal Adviser of the Embassy on the laws of Russia applicable to native Jews and to foreign Jews, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was then to invite our attention to that Report at p. 1 of the inclosed Confidential Print of the 16th June, and to Mr. Wyndham's despatches Nos. 280 and 281 at pp. 4 and 5. A copy of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia of the 12th January, 1859, was annexed, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer in particular to Article XI; he was also to state that, on the 7th of June, 1860, a Russian Ukase was issued granting to foreigners generally in Russia the right to enter Russian commercial guilds and to enjoy all the commercial privileges attached thereto, subject nevertheless to certain reservations and restrictions in the case of foreign Jews.

That no objection was made by the British Government to that Ukase; and a notice respecting it was inserted in the "London Gazette" of the 7th August, 1860, of which a copy was annexed.

That the Ukase of the 20th June, 1860, referred to at p. 3 of M. Cieszkowski's Report, dealt with the admission of foreign Jews into Russian guilds and with their trading rights in general.

That the Report showed that native Jews as regarded their right of settlement and residence were restricted to certain provinces, and that the privileges accorded by Russian law to foreign Jews under certain conditions, were far in excess of those enjoyed by native Jews.

That we would observe that M. Cieszkowski in his Report expressed no opinion on the case of Mr. Lewisohn, but in his letter to Mr. Wyndham of the 8th June (p. 4 in the print) he stated that, as Mr. Lewisohn was furnished with a passport visé by the Russian Consul-General in London, his expulsion on the mere fact of his belonging to the Jewish persuasion was not in accordance with the existing laws of the Empire.

That the last paragraph of his letter, however, pointed to the obligation which devolved on Mr. Lewisohn to have obtained special permission before engaging in trade, and Mr. Wyndham in his despatch No. 281 (p. 6 in the print) suggested that he might have been expelled as an alien having committed an offence against the laws. That a letter had been addressed to Mr. Lewisohn in accordance with Mr. Wyndham's suggestion, inquiring whether he was provided with a licence to trade, as required by the Ukase of the 20th June, 1860.

In the meanwhile Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take all the papers in that case into consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the Treaty between the two Powers, and to the provisions of Russian law as explained in M. Cieszkowski's Report, the expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn from St. Petersburgh, or the refusal of the Russian Government to permit him to return to Russia, under the circumstances above stated, afforded legitimate grounds of remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 20th instant, calling our attention to the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh,* showing that a question had arisen between the Russian Government and that of the United States as to the expulsion of a Jew named Pinkos, from Russia.

And we were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's further communication of the 24th instant, transmitting additional correspondence in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the Treaty of 1859 applies to all Her Majesty's subjects alike without making any distinction of creed.

The expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn therefore appears primâ facie to be a violation of the stipulations contained in Articles I and XI of the Treaty.

But by the terms of Article I the stipulations of the Treaty are not to affect the Laws, Decrees, and special Regulations regarding commerce, industry, and police in vigour in each of the two countries and generally applicable to foreigners.

The question, which is one of fact, therefore arises whether there is any Law, Decree, or special Regulation regarding commerce, industry, or police generally applicable to foreigners in vigour in Russia by virtue of which Mr. Lewisohn's expulsion can be justified.

Disposed to accept M. Cieszkowski's opinion as to violation of Treaty rights.

We hesitate to express any positive opinion upon the question whether Laws, Decrees, or Regulations made after the Treaty of 1859 can alter the effect of the general rights secured to British subjects, or whether the provisions of the Ukases of March 1859 and June 1860, entitling foreign Jews to engage in trade on obtaining special permission from the Minister of the Interior, apply to the case of a person travelling in Russia for commercial purposes in connection with a business founded elsewhere, but we are disposed to accept M. Cieszkowski's opinion which appears to be that there was no violation by Mr. Lewisohn of any Law or police Regulation which would justify his expulsion.

Case of Mr. Pinkos differs on account of the existence of martial law at the time of his expulsion.

We would observe that in the case of Mr. Pinkos, the United States' citizen, the point appears to be taken by the Russian Government that St. Petersburgh being under martial law, the expulsion was justifiable. Of course if the Russian Government are entitled where martial law prevails to expel any suspected person, foreigners sojourning there would be subject to the same liability and the Governments of such foreigners would not be entitled to complain of their expulsion in those circumstances. But in the present case no such position has so far been taken up, and there seems no doubt that Mr. Lewisohn was expelled the country only on the ground that he was a Jew.

Should require an explanation of Russian Government, and then further action may be taken.

Under these circumstances Her Majesty's Government may, we think, properly call the attention of the Russian Government to the matter and require an explanation of what is apparently a violation of the Treaty rights accorded to Her Majesty.

The consideration of the question whether any further action be taken should be postponed until the answer and explanation of the Russian Government have been received and a full opportunity afforded for considering their sufficiency.

The Solicitor-General to Lord Tenterden.—(Received August 26.)

My dear Lord Tenterden, August 25, 1881.

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn (a Jew) from Russia. Leave should be obtained for his temporary sojourn in Russia.

AS the Attorney-General has written you, Baron de Worms informed him to-day that Mr. Lewisohn had started, or was starting, for Russia. We think it would be desirable that Her Majesty's Minister should officially request from the Minister of the Interior permission for Mr. Lewisohn to sojourn temporarily in Russia without prejudice to the question of his right to do so under the Treaty between the two countries, and pending the discussion of the subject by the two Governments. If Mr. Lewisohn has already started this should be done without delay.

Suggest answer to Mr. Lewisohn.

We think Mr. Lewisohn may be answered that Her Majesty's Government have been in communication with the Russian Government on the question of his expulsion, that the Russian Government contend that it did not constitute any violation of the Treaty between the two countries, as Mr. Lewisohn was under the terms of the Treaty subject to the laws and ordinances of the Empire, in accordance with which his expulsion took place. That Her Majesty's Government are sending an answer to their despatch which has been lately received. That Her Majesty's Government will render Mr. Lewisohn such assistance as they properly can pending the discussion of the matter between the two Governments. If it is decided to make the application to the Russian Government suggested above, he might be informed of it.

Russian Government should be asked for information as to laws violated by Mr. Lewisohn.

In answer to M. Giers' despatch, we think Her Majesty's Minister at St. Petersburgh should be directed to ask for specific information as to what are the laws or ordinances the violation of which justified Mr. Lewisohn's expulsion, and that this should be done in such a way as to afford no admission that a British subject of the Jewish religion can properly be subjected to different treatment from any other British subject.

Our formal opinion will follow.

Yours, &c.

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn (a Jew) from Russia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us a despatch[*] which, in consequence of our Report of the 30th June, was addressed by your Lordship to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburgh respecting the case of Mr. Lewisohn, a naturalized British subject, who was expelled from St. Petersburgh last year, and whom the Russian authorities refused to allow to return to Russia; that Sir Julian was also to inclose the note[†] which on receipt of that instruction Mr. Wyndham addressed to the Russian Government, and despatch[‡] from him forwarding the reply of M. de Giers which stated that Jews in Russia were subject to special treatment ("régime particulier"), and that there had been no infraction of Treaty stipulations in the case of Mr. Lewisohn.

Russian note with regard to law authorizing the expulsion and respecting infraction of Treaty rights.

That Mr. Lewisohn had written to your Lordship a letter (which was inclosed),[§] stating that business requiring his presence at the Nishni-Novgorod Fair, he had presented his passport at the Russian Consulate-General, where it had been visé, and he begged to be informed whether, if he proceeded to Russia, Her Majesty's Government could and would grant him such protection as to prevent a recurrence of the treatment to which he was subjected on his last visit to that country.

That on the receipt of this letter your Lordship communicated with the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in this country, and was informed by him that the visa had been granted with the distinct warning to Mr. Lewisohn, by the Russian Consul-General, that he must be subject to the laws of Russia upon entering that Empire, and that the Imperial Government had not withdrawn or suspended the prohibition to Mr. Lewisohn to visit Russia.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Lewisohn's letter, and as to what further action should be taken on the note from the Russian Government.

That for convenience of reference the previous papers and our Report of the 30th June last were also sent.[‖]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should ask Russian Government for information as to laws violated by Mr. Lewisohn.

That we think Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh should be directed to require specific information what was the law, decree, or special regulation regarding commerce, industry, or police which has been violated by Mr. Lewisohn, and in accordance with which he was expelled from St. Petersburgh.

Care should be taken not to admit that any law, decree, or regulation which was not applicable to foreigners generally, but in terms applied only to Russian subjects professing the Jewish religion, could warrant the action of the Russian Government in treating differently from other British subjects one who professed that religion.

Answer to Mr. Lewisohn.

In reply to Mr. Lewisohn's letter, we think he should be informed that Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Russian Government, in answer to which that Government insist that the expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn was not an infraction of the Treaty between the two countries, and that Her Majesty's Government are still in communication with the Government of Russia on the subject.

Should follow course adopted by France in case of French Jews.

We think it would be expedient that the course which is taken by the French Ambassador in the case of French Jewish subjects (see Mr. Wyndham's despatch of the 26th July, 1881) should be followed, and that special permission should be officially requested from the Russian Government for Mr. Lewisohn to pass through and sojourn in Russia for the purposes of his business without prejudice to the question of his right to do so, which is now under discussion between the two Governments.

Should this course be determined upon, it would be well to inform Mr. Lewisohn of it.

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn from Russia. Sending correspondence of 1862 on exemption of British Jews from disabilities in Russia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 7th October last, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, and with reference to our last Report on the case of Mr. Lewisohn, an important correspondence* which took place in 1862 on the construction of the Treaty of 1859 between Great Britain and Russia, with respect to the question which had arisen in Mr. Lewisohn's case, whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled, under that Treaty, to claim exemption for British Jews in Russia from the disabilities to which Russian Jews were there liable.

That that correspondence, which had only been found since the date of our last Report, contained a very full examination of the subject by Lord Napier (then Her Majesty's Ambassador to Russia) in his despatch No. 179 of the 6th May, 1862.

That that despatch was laid at the time before the Law Officers of the Crown, who reported thereon, and advised that Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to claim for British Jews in Russia such immunity as above mentioned. That Lord Tenterden was to refer us, for the grounds of that opinion, to their Report dated the 6th May, 1862, and to the instructions which were sent in conformity therewith to Lord Napier in the Foreign Office despatch No. 105 of the 15th May, 1862.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the conclusions therein expressed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

View taken in 1862 with regard to status of British Jews under Treaty of 1859 was incorrect.

That we have now before us, in the despatch of Lord Napier of the 16th April, 1862, fuller information than we have hitherto had with reference to the status of Jews in Russia at the time that the Treaty of the 12th January, 1859, was negotiated, and showing the considerations which may be supposed to have influenced the parties to that Treaty.

It would seem that Prince Gortchakoff selected the terms of Article I of the Treaty with the view of rendering the Jewish subjects of Great Britain liable to the same disabilities as the Jews of Russia, but it does not appear that, in agreeing to those terms, Sir John Crampton contemplated such a result. The presumed intention of the parties must, therefore, be deduced alone from the language used, keeping in view, however, the surrounding circumstances, which may be taken to have been in the contemplation of the Contracting Parties.

The Treaty is, no doubt, open to two possible constructions: the one, that it only assures to British subjects of any particular creed the same privileges as are enjoyed by Russian subjects of the same creed; the other, that the privileges accorded to British subjects are accorded to all alike without regard to the religious body to which they may belong.

The arguments in support of these conflicting constructions are well and fully stated in the despatch of Lord Napier. We certainly agree with him that, construing it strictly, the language of the Treaty appears decidedly to favour the latter view. But to construe the Treaty thus would, no doubt, involve the supposition that Russia had agreed to create a state of things inconsistent with the traditions of her Government, and which could not fail to be a source of embarrassment to her. In all probability Prince Gortchakoff was anxious not to define matters too clearly, and designedly permitted the terms of the Treaty to be somewhat ambiguous.

* 1. Treaty of January 12, 1859; 2. Law Officers' Report, September 10, 1881; 3. Lord Napier, No. 179, April 16; 4. to Law Officers, April 26; 5. Law Officers' Report, May 6; 6. to Lord Napier, No. 105, May 15, 1862.

Under all the circumstances, we are not prepared to express a confident dissent from the conclusion at which the Law Officers arrived in their Report of the 6th May, 1862.

At the same time, when we consider the consequences which such a construction of the Treaty involves, we cannot say that we are satisfied that it is the correct one. It is clear that the "laws, decrees, and special regulations regarding commerce, industry, and police," which are to be unaffected by the stipulations of the Treaty, are the laws, decrees, and regulations which may be for the time being in force, and not merely those which were in force when the Treaty was made. Supposing, then, that the laws of Russia were to impose commercial disabilities antagonistic to the privileges conferred by the Treaty upon all persons not belonging to the Orthodox Greek Church (a case not altogether impossible), the result would be that all British subjects, with an exception quite inconsiderable, would be deprived of the benefits of the Treaty, whilst Russia would still be in a position to demand that her subjects should remain in full possession of the benefits accorded to them by Great Britain.

British Government must adhere to construction placed upon Treaty by both Governments in 1862.

We think, however, it is hardly open now to Her Majesty's Government to insist upon a construction of the Treaty at variance with that placed upon it in 1862.

The very question now under discussion was raised at that time. The Russian Government took up the position that Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to claim, under the Treaty, that British subjects of the Jewish religion should enjoy the same privileges as other British subjects, and this view was, we gather, acquiesced in by Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, by the instructions of his Government, after the question had thus been distinctly raised between the two Governments.

My Lord,
Temple, December 15, 1881.

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn (a Jew) from Russia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our previous Reports upon the case of Mr. Lewisohn, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh,* inclosing the reply of the Russian Government to the question which was put to them, at our suggestion, as to the law which had been violated by Mr. Lewisohn, and in accordance with which he was expelled from St. Petersburgh.

That it would be seen from M. de Giers' note of the 27th October that by the Russian Code relating to passports the right of finally dealing with the application of foreign Jews on this subject was vested in the Minister of the Interior. That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take that explanation into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, in view of the fact that Mr. Lewisohn failed through ignorance of the law to apply for the authority of the Minister of the Interior to remain in St. Petersburgh, the Russian Government were acting strictly within their legal right in expelling him, although that right might appear to Her Majesty's Government to have been exercised with unnecessary harshness upon the subject of a friendly Power.

That Lord Tenterden was also to transmit a printed copy of the correspondence, including our Reports, on the question.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

† Printed Correspondence, Confidential, No.

Remarks on conduct of Russian Government. Their reply is not satisfactory.

That the provisions of section 2 of the Supplement to Article 486 of the Passport Code, quoted by M. de Giers, are not couched in very definite terms. But inasmuch as all petitions by foreign Jews for permission to remain in Russia are to be dealt with in the last resort by the Minister of the Interior, we think that the right of refusing the prayer of any such petition, and therefore of compelling the departure from Russia of a foreign Jew, is by implication vested in him. This is of course subject to the question discussed in our last Report, whether British Jews are entitled to the same treatment as other British subjects.

In the present case, however, we do not gather that the matter was ever submitted to the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Lewisohn being armed with a passport, and objection being taken to its sufficiency on the ground of his Jewish religion, it appears to be M. Cieszkowski's opinion (see his Report of the $\frac{\text{26th May}}{\text{8th June}}$, 1881, p. 17) that Mr. Lewisohn was entitled to the opportunity of making application to the Minister of the Interior for permission to remain in Russia. In this view we are disposed to concur. And we certainly agree with M. Cieszkowski that twenty-four hours was less than a reasonable time for obtaining the consent of the Minister of the Interior.

Moreover, M. Cieszkowski expresses the opinion that the action of the local authorities in expelling Mr. Lewisohn on the ground of his being a Jew was in direct contravention of Article 2 of the "Regulations for the issue of Passports," and in opposition to Article 16 of the same Regulations. And in his opinion, even supposing Mr. Lewisohn was to be regarded as a person not supplied with a passport, he ought, if a person of peaceful and inoffensive life, to have been supplied with a temporary passport for six months by the Prefect of the capital, and ought not to have been expelled thence by administrative process. We agree in thinking that no sufficient opportunity was allowed him of obtaining this temporary passport.

Should obtain further report on points of law raised.

We think that, in view of the opinion given by M. Cieszkowski, the explanation of M. de Giers cannot, without further consideration, be accepted as satisfactory. And we venture to suggest that a somewhat fuller report on the specific points which appear to be now raised should be obtained from M. Cieszkowski, or some other expert in Russian law, so as to enable Her Majesty's Government to put the matter in the best shape before the Russian Ministers.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received December 30.)

My Lord,
Temple, December 30, 1881.

Erection by Russia of fortifications at Batoum.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,* from which we should see that the Porte had called the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the fortifications which were being constructed by the Russian Government within a short distance of the town of Batoum, a proceeding which the Turkish Government maintained was contrary to the spirit of the Treaty of Berlin and of the Protocols of the Congress.

That the text of the LIXth Article of the Treaty was as follows:—

"Sa Majesté l'Empereur de Russie déclare que son intention est d'ériger Batoum en port franc essentiellement commercial."

That in order fully to appreciate the extent of that undertaking on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia, it was necessary to refer to the discussions in Congress, which resulted in the Article of the Treaty above quoted.

That we should find at pp. 207–210 and 239 of the accompanying Parliamentary Paper the portions of the Protocols bearing on that subject.

That at the sitting of the Congress on the 6th July (see Protocol 14), Prince Gortchacow stated that he was authorized to declare that the Emperor exercising his right of sovereignty would declare Batoum a free port. Prince Bismarck called attention to the fact that that formed a considerable modification of the Treaty of San Stefano; that it facilitated the evacuation of Batoum and its exchange for Erzeroum.

* The Earl of Dufferin, No. 972, November 8, 1881.

That the Earl of Beaconsfield, in accepting the proposal, spoke of it as the transformation of a disputed fortress into a free port and a commercial depôt for all nations; and that in the subsequent discussion as to the passage of the Straits, the Marquis of Salisbury declared that if the acquisition of Batoum by Russia had been maintained under conditions which would menace the liberty of the Black Sea, England could not have taken the engagement towards the other European Powers to interdict to herself the entry to that sea. But Batoum having been declared a free and commercial port, the English Government would not decline to renew their engagements as to the Straits.

That in the remarks which Count Schouvaloff made in reply to the observations of the Marquis of Salisbury, his Excellency said that "it would be very easy to prove that Batoum constitutes a menace for no one, and that the possession of that port is only necessary to us for the purpose of securing our communications with the large territory which Russia already possesses on that portion of the Black Sea and of securing her commerce; and that the declaration of the freedom of the port must have removed the last doubts. The port will become an important point for the commerce of the whole world; it could not be a menace to the Straits," &c.

That the Marquis of Salisbury thereupon stated that, understanding that Batoum was to be only a commercial port, he therefore accepted in principle the status quo ante for the Straits.

That to the interpretation thus given by the Second British Plenipotentiary to the declarations of the Russian Representatives no exception was taken at the time, and the declaration read by Prince Gortchacow, at a subsequent sitting of the Congress, was as follows:—

"The Plenipotentiaries of Russia have already announced to the Congress that the Emperor, their august Master, intends to convert Batoum into a free port. They are authorized to add that His Majesty further proposes to make of this port a port essentially commercial." (Protocol No. 16.)

That the Porte stated that "not only are the old fortifications of Batoum left standing, but new ones are being constructed within a short distance of the town." (Lord Dufferin No. 972 of the 8th November, 1881.)

That that was confirmed by the Reports of Her Majesty's Consuls, and in the latest Report it was stated that much heavy artillery was being landed at Batoum for the fortifications there, which was placed in store, while earthworks and batteries were constructed at commanding points, and communications between them established by tramways.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the facts above stated, as to the military works now proceeding at Batoum, constituted a violation of the LIXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin, and of the assurances given by the Russian Plenipotentiaries at the Congress, and would justify, without awaiting more detailed reports on the subject, the parties to the Treaty of Berlin in addressing any representations to the Government of Russia.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Such fortifications not clearly a violation of Treaty of Berlin and of Russian assurances at the Congress.

That we do not think the facts above stated as to the military works proceeding at Batoum so clearly constitute a violation of the LIXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin and of the assurances given by the Russian Plenipotentiaries as to justify, without awaiting more detailed reports on the subject, the parties to the Treaty of Berlin in addressing any remonstrances to the Government of Russia.

The question is, whether the undertaking of Russia that Batoum should be a free and essentially commercial port, coupled with the assurances given in the course of the discussion, excludes the right to erect any fortifications there. No definite assurances were given or required with reference to the construction of fortifications. It appears not improbable that the Plenipotentiaries of Russia and Great Britain purposely avoided any definite discussion of this point. If, then, the right of Russia to construct the fortifications is excluded, it must be because this is involved in the undertaking given by Russia, read in the light of the discussions which preceded it.

But it does not appear to us perfectly clear that it is so excluded. Though the port may be essentially or indeed exclusively commercial, it does not seem to follow that fortifications may not be erected for its defence. It could hardly be contended that Russia, having created a great commercial emporium, was bound to leave it defenceless and at the mercy of Turkish cruizers, should any conflict arise between the two countries.

It would not be to the interest of the nations who may trade there that this should be the case.

And if the fortifications are defensive only it would not be (in the words of Count Schouvaloff) "a menace to the Straits."

We think that Russia probably did undertake that Batoum should not be converted into an arsenal as a basis for offensive operations.

Further information necessary.

But we see no evidence that the fortifications go beyond what may be fairly necessary for the defence of an important commercial centre, and it therefore seems to us that more detailed information is necessary before we are in a position to assert that there has been a violation of the LIXth Article of the Treaty.

We have, &c.

Mr. Levy's claim to the Enfida estate. Course to be adopted.

NO mistake seems to me to have been, as yet, committed on our side in this matter; the principle being undoubtedly right (on which alone we seem to have, so far, insisted) that the question, being one as to private rights of property, should be decided, according to the lex loci, by the Tribunals which may properly have cognizance of it, and not by political interference. It is enough, therefore, for the present, that each Government should pledge itself to the other against the use of political pressure, at all events unless there should be some interference, by the Tunisian authorities, with the ordinary course of law in the case, whatever that may be. As to the naval demonstration, the French Government seems to have already withdrawn its ships, so no more need be said about that.

2. Consul Reade seems to me to have assumed, with a greater degree of confidence than I can entirely share, that Mr. Levy's claim of pre-emption is well founded, and that the question will be attended with no difficulty if left to be settled in the ordinary course of Tunisian law. What that course may be he does not at all clearly indicate, and all I can do is to point out the questions, and the difficulties, which occur to me, upon the very imperfect materials which this correspondence supplies.

Merits of Mr. Levy's claim of pre-emption.

3. First, as to the merits of Mr. Levy's claim. If it is preferred, bonâ fide, for his own sole benefit as an adjoining proprietor, it ought to prevail, if, under the same circumstances, it could have been maintained (according to the true construction and effect of the law of pre-emption or "scheffa"), by a native Tunisian proprietor, my information as to this part of the Tunisian law is not sufficient to enable me to form an opinion as to the conditions under which it is applicable, e.g., whether it is excluded by the reservation, unsold, of a certain space of land by Khaireddin Pasha, between the Enfida estate and the land of Mr. Levy; or, on the other hand, whether this reservation, if otherwise valid, is defeated by the possession by Mr. Levy of certain "enclaves" of land within the body of the Enfida estate. These are, evidently, mixed questions of fact and law, fit only for a competent Court to determine. In like manner, it must be for such a Court to determine whether the steps taken by Mr. Levy to assert his claim upon the spot were proper and sufficient, and whether they were rendered nugatory, or not, by the subsequent dispossession of his agents by the French Company. As far as I can judge, from general principles, I should say that, if these steps were properly taken on Mr. Levy's part, he cannot be any further, or otherwise, prejudiced by what the French Company afterwards did to displace his formal possession, than that it may make it necessary for him now to take active proceedings, as plaintiff, to assert the title which he claims.

4. Again, it must (after all) be a question of local law, whether Mr. Levy, as adjoining proprietor, can assert this claim, if he does so (in substance and effect, and either with, or without, a commission, or money consideration) for the benefit, wholly or in part, of others (Tunisians or Italians, or anybody else), and not for the bonâ fide object of incorporating this land with his adjoining estate. But I should say that, on this point, all reasonable presumptions are against such a construction, and use, of the right of pre-emption, as would enable it to be asserted in the interests (wholly or in part), not of the adjoining proprietor, but of strangers, to whom the law gives no such right. That a bonâ fide title, acquired by the French Company by purchase from Khaireddin, should be defeated by an adjoining proprietor, who in substance lends or sells the use of his name to persons who have no right of pre-emption, would not be in accordance with sound equitable principles; and, if the name of Mr. Levy is really used in this transaction to enable the Italian Government, or any Italian or Tunisian intriguers or speculators, to exclude the French Company, I think Her Majesty's Government will do well to abstain from giving any countenance to such a transaction, whether it is capable of succeeding, by Tunisian law, or not. Consul Reade seems to think this a matter of no importance; but, on that point, I cannot agree with him.

Mr. Levy should not obtain support of Her Majesty's Government if he has acted on behalf of others who have not rights of pre-emption, whatever the Tunisian law may be.

Mr. Levy ought to establish his right against the French Company.

5. As to legal proceedings. What I collect from the papers is that the French Company have purchased, and paid for, Khaireddin's title; so that Khaireddin has no longer any interest in the Enfida estate; and, it may be assumed (if the Conventions between Tunis and France are like those between Tunis and this country—see Article I of the Convention of the 10th October, 1863) that, but for this claim of Mr. Levy, the French Company would now be entitled to proceed to the verification of their title-deeds, and to obtain a transfer into their name, before the "Ecclesiastical and other legal Courts and authorities" of Tunis. Mr. Levy, having no contract of purchase, but claiming a right by law to the benefit of the French Company's purchase, on paying what may be deemed to be the part of the purchase-money applicable to this property, cannot, I conceive, go before the "Ecclesiastical or other legal authorities," for any verification of title-deeds, or for any transfer into his name, till he has established his right against the French Company. This, I think, it must be for him to do, by instituting a suit, as plaintiff, against that Company, in whatever may be the proper forum; and, as the suit will be entirely between French and English subjects (no Tunisian being a necessary party to it), the IVth Article of the Convention of the 10th October, 1863, will not apply; but the XXIVth Article of the Convention of the 19th July, 1875, will apparently come into play. The dispute, therefore, must be decided "solely in the Tribunals of the Foreign Consuls," according to the established usage, "without the interference of the Tunisian Courts or Government." Whether the "established usage" would give jurisdiction to the Consular Court of the plaintiff, or to the Consular Court of the defendants, is more than I know.

Should do so before Tribunals of Foreign Consuls, but whether in English or French is not certain.

Enfida estate. Opinion as to the Consular Court by which the case is to be decided.

THESE papers* furnish additional grounds for caution. My own Memorandum will show that M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire's objection to commit himself to the principle, that the question is to be decided by a Tunisian Tribunal, may be a well-founded one; my own conclusion (upon the materials which the Foreign Office was able to supply) having been that the proper forum would be primâ facie either the French or the British Consular Court.

I fully expected that the first contest would be, Who ought to begin? i.e., to be plaintiff; the forum (as I presume) being that of the defendant. Mr. Reade insists that Mr. Levy is to be regarded as having a possession, which the French Company must displace, as plaintiffs. But, if general principles are to go for anything in such a matter, I should think otherwise. His right of pre-emption is the matter in dispute, and cannot, therefore (antecedently to litigation), be assumed in his favour. The former title and possession of Khaireddin were indisputable; and (subject to Mr. Levy's claim) the rights of Khaireddin are now vested in the French Company who have bought and paid for them, and will (I assume) obtain registration from the proper Tunisian authorities. The possession assumed by Mr. Levy was merely (as I understand) to fulfil some condition of the law of pre-emption, and it has been treated as that of a trespasser by the French Company. What is Mr. Reade's ground for saying, that it has not been wholly displaced, I do not know. But one thing seems to me to be certain, that Mr. Levy would be able, if he chose, to sue as plaintiff, according to the analogy of any system of jurisprudence with which I am acquainted, and that it would be unreasonable (according to any such analogy) to require the French Company to do so, if they deny his right of pre-emption, and think they can secure their own ends, practically, by simply resting on the defensive. The whole is, evidently, a game of chess; and it is not clear to me that M. Roustan, on the one side, is a more zealous partizan in it than Mr. Reade on the other.

Enfida estate. Her Majesty's Government should not act on Mr. Reade's assumptions as to jurisdiction.

IT is clear that there may be many questions in this case, both as to the Mahommedan law and as to forum and procedure, which Her Majesty's Government should not be in any haste to take for granted, and on which Mr. Reade's views may be incorrect.

He assumes that the jurisdiction is Tunisian, and that Mr. Levy can assert his claims effectually without coming into Court as plaintiff, on both which points, I think, his assumptions ought not to be made the foundation of any diplomatic action by Her Majesty's Government.

As to his present statements, that the two local Courts administer two different laws (or views of the law) of pre-emption, and that Mr. Levy has a string to each bow, they do certainly seem strange. Of course, I cannot say what the local law really is, either on the partnership or on the other view; but Mr. Levy's claims have nothing equitable in them (that I can see) unless they can be established in strict law.

Enfida estate. Case should be settled in accordance with Tunisian law before a Consular Court, either French or English. Suggesting arbitration.

My Lord, Temple, March 3, 1881.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration and advice, the papers noted in the margin,* and relating to the conflicting claims of Mr. Joseph Levy, a British subject, on the one part, and a French Company, called the "Société Marseillaise," on the other, to an important landed property in the Regency of Tunis, known as the "Enfida Estate."

That the British and French Governments had been appealed to by the claimants respectively, and the settlement of the question presented some difficulties.

That the Enfida estate was purchased by the French Company of Kheredine Pasha, but Mr. Levy, who owned some adjoining land, claimed the right of pre-emption under Tunisian law. A general statement of the facts of the case and of the position of the question up to the 5th ultimo would be found in the Foreign Office Memorandum of that date, marked A.

That the printed correspondence, marked B, contained all the information in the possession of the Foreign Office up to the 18th February.

That it commenced with a despatch from Mr. Reade, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis to your Lordship (No. 34 of the 6th December, 1880), transmitting a petition from Mr. Levy, in reply to which Mr. Reade was instructed to support Mr. Levy in vindicating his legal rights if he was satisfied that Mr. Levy had a bonâ fide claim, and that his proceedings were not simply vexatious (Correspondence, p. 3, No. 2).

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our attention to the whole of the correspondence which ensued, from which we would perceive that the principal difficulty which remained was in regard to the Tribunal which should adjudicate upon the claims of the contending parties.

That on that point, Sir Julian was to refer us, in the first place, to your Lordship's despatch to Lord Lyons, No. 120 of the 5th February (Correspondence, p. 29), No. 41, citing the Organic Laws of the Regency, and the British Convention of 1863. Also to Articles V and XXIV of the British Convention of 1875.

That Mr. Reade, in his telegram of the 10th February (Correspondence, p. 53, No. 82), stated that the Société Marseillaise would be the plaintiffs in the case, which must be tried in the Tribunal of the Cadi.

That that view was apparently based on the assumption, that Mr. Levy was the first in possession of the estate (see his telegram of the 8th February, Correspondence, p. 42, No. 60).

That we would observe, however, that whether Mr. Reade's view be correct or not, the French Government demurred to entrusting the decisions of the question to any native Tribunal (see Lord Lyons' No. 130, Correspondence, p. 50, No. 77); and in a despatch which had just then been received from Lord Lyons,* your Lordship was informed that, in their opinion, "the fairest and most expedient plan would be to refer the matter to the joint arbitration of a French and English Arbitrator."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our views on the case so far as we were able to do so from the papers then laid before us, and especially with reference to the practicability, under the circumstances, of disposing of the case by arbitration.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's further communications of the 19th, 23rd, and the 24th February, and the 1st March, inclosing papers for our consideration in conjunction with the papers transmitted with his letter of the 18th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the rights of Mr. Levy and the Société Marseillaise in the controversy which has arisen between them must be governed by, and decided in accordance with, the law of Tunis.

Under the Convention of 1863, Mr. Levy appears to be entitled to the same rights in relation to his claim as if he were a Tunisian subject.

It seems clear that by the law of Tunis the right of "shoofâ" or pre-emption can, under certain conditions, be enforced.

We express no opinion upon the strength or merits of Mr. Levy's claim, beyond saying that it certainly appears to be sufficiently well-founded to entitle Mr. Levy to have it determined by the proper Tribunal.

The important question then arises, by what Tribunals are the rights of the parties to be decided? In order to express a positive opinion on this question, we ought to be informed whether the original vendor, Kheredine, would, according to Tunisian law and procedure, be regarded as having any interest in the controversy that has arisen, or, employing English terms, would he have such an interest as would render it necessary to make him a party to any suit that might be instituted in relation to the dispute? But as it appears that the purchase-money of the estate has been paid by the purchasers to Kheredine, we shall assume his interests to be entirely eliminated from the controversy, and treat the dispute as one existing between English and French subjects.

In such case we are of opinion that the difference is one which must be determined by the Consular Court of Great Britain or France, and not by the Tunisian Courts.

By the IVth Article of the Convention of 1863, all cases of litigation in relation to land between British and Tunisian subjects were to be adjudicated upon by the Tribunals of Tunis; the Convention, however, is silent as to the Tribunal to determine disputes relating to land which may arise between a British subject and a foreigner. But the Convention of 1875 (which by Article V confirms all the stipulations of the Convention of 1863) is general in its terms, and provides in Article XXIV that all civil differences, disputes, or litigations between British subjects and those of any foreign country should be decided solely in the Tribunals of the foreign Consuls without the interference of the Tunisian Courts. These general words appear to include differences having relation to land.

We think, therefore, that the Court to determine the dispute which has arisen is either the English or French Consular Court.

It seems to be accepted that the plaintiff or prosecutor in a suit or proceeding must resort to the Court of the defendant's nationality, and cannot proceed in the Court of his own nation. Whether Mr. Levy or the Marseillaise Company will initiate proceedings must be left to their own will and to circumstances as they arise, but is not a matter with which Her Majesty's Government is in any way concerned.

The result, therefore, appears to be that both the parties to the dispute are exempt from the jurisdiction of the Tunisian Courts, and that if litigation is resorted to to enforce any right of property, the proceedings must be taken in the Consular Court of the defendant's nationality.

As it will probably be felt that advantage will be secured to the defendant in such proceedings by appearing in the Consular Court of his own nation, it is probable that neither party to the dispute will be disposed to commence litigation. In such event it may be to the advantage both of Mr. Levy and the Marseillaise Company that the differences should be determined by means of an independent arbitration. But whilst Her Majesty's Government would doubtless be glad to exercise its influence and good offices to bring the dispute which has arisen to a final determination, it has no power to compel Mr. Levy to consent to an arbitration, and can do no more than offer him advice.

Enfida estate. Question as to nationality of firm

THE Report of the Law Officers is in accordance with the views which I had myself formed; and I have no further observation to make upon the present position of this case, unless it be to notice that in one of the late telegrams from Mr. Reade it appeared that Mr. Levy was a partner in this business with seven or eight other persons, who were, I think, stated to be Tunisians.

Benefits of British nationality should not be invoked for non-British subjects.

This state of the interests concerned in Mr. Levy's claim raises a very important question, which would require to be most carefully considered before those interests could receive any special or exceptional protection from Her Majesty's Government on the ground of Mr. Levy's British nationality. He is, primâ facie, a trustee of his claim (whatever its worth) for a partnership at Tunis, essentially Tunisian, and not British. Is British nationality to be invoked in such a case for the benefit (in the main) of those who are not British subjects? I should say not.

My Lord,
Temple, March 7, 1881.

Enfida estate. Jurisdiction of Consular or Tunisian Courts depends upon position of Mr. Levy's partners.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenderden's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant on the Enfida case, he transmitted to us, by your Lordship's direction, the inclosed telegram from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis, dated the 1st March, for our perusal, and for such observations, if any, as we might have to offer thereon.

The former papers relating to the case were inclosed therewith for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the contents of Mr. Reade's despatch of the 1st March present a new state of facts upon which it is difficult to express an absolute opinion.

In our Report of the 3rd instant we pointed out that if a dispute as to rights connected with land arose between a British and a Tunisian subject the local Tribunals alone had jurisdiction. Reading Mr. Reade's despatch technically, it may be that the whole legal right of "shoofâ" or pre-emption is in Mr. Levy, and that he has Tunisian partners only in the profits which will be derived from exercising the right, in which case the jurisdiction to determine the dispute would still be in the Consular Courts.

On the other hand, if Tunisian subjects are part owners of the estate, by virtue of which the right of "shoofâ" is claimed, the jurisdiction of the local Courts would prevail.

The indefinite nature of Mr. Reade's telegram prevents us from determining positively what is the technical position of the partners.

Case should not be governed by technical considerations.

But we presume that the Bey of Tunis is not likely to enter upon such technical considerations, and if in the substance of the dispute his subjects have an interest, Tunisian authorities will probably be unwilling to permit the rights of native subjects to be determined by Consular Courts. Whilst it will probably be thought advisable to maintain all the rights of the English Consular Court, it will not be unreasonable to regard the position of the parties as being governed by broad and not technical considerations, and—if it be that the rights of Tunisian subjects are involved in the anticipated litigation—to listen to any representation that may be made by the Government of Tunis in support of the jurisdiction of the local Tribunals.

The Lord Chancellor to Earl Granville.—(Received March 10.)

My dear Granville,
House of Lords, March 9, 1881.

I WRITE by my Secretary's hand, my own arm being disabled.

Enfida estate. Tenour of reply to Mr. Reade as to jurisdiction.

I agree substantially both with the Law Officers and with Sir Julian Pauncefote, except that I cannot (with Sir Julian) think anything clear in this case. The despatch to Mr. Reade should, I think, be to this effect: That, if the right claimed is to be regarded as in Mr. Levy only, the case would appear to fall (in the absence of any Treaty between France and Tunis to the contrary) within Article XXIV of the British Treaty of 1875, and should apparently be decided in the Consular Court of whichever of the two claimants is first sued by the other, and thus made the defendant; but that, if the Tunisian partners of Mr. Levy have such an interest in his claim as to make them competent parties to a suit for the assertion or defence of it, then it may be that the Tunisian Courts might have jurisdiction over the matter. But, in that case, the claim must be regarded as substantially that of Tunisian subjects, and it cannot be recognized as entitled to any special favour or protection from Her Majesty's Government on account of Mr. Levy's British nationality. The rest of Sir Julian Pauncefote's recommendation (viz., that before taking further action Lord Granville will await, &c.) seems quite right.

Temple, April 8, 1881.

Enfida estate. Turkish law does not apply to Mr. Levy's case, which ought to be decided by the Consular Court of defendant.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, further correspondence* which had taken place in relation to the Enfida case at Tunis since the date of your Report thereon of the 7th ultimo.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us, in the first place, to your Lordship's telegram to Mr. Reade (Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis) No. 12 of the 14th March, and to Mr. Reade's telegram in reply No. 14 of the 16th March, followed by his despatch No. 27 of the 16th March and No. 29 of the 18th March.

That in those communications Mr. Reade cited the Ottoman Law of Real Property of 1867, and the Protocol of 1868 relating thereto (see "Hertslet's Treaties on Trade," Turkey, pp. 73-75), as being in force in Tunis, and applicable to the present case.

That on that point, however, Sir J. Pauncefote was to invite our attention to a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet, and to the documents annexed thereto, from which it would seem that the Regency of Tunis, though an eyalet of the Turkish Empire, held an exceptional position of independence with respect to its powers of internal legislation, and its relations with foreign States was not generally bound by the laws and Treaties of the Porte. That as regarded the conditions under which foreigners might hold land, it was to be observed that the British Treaty with Tunis of 1875 confirmed the Agreement with the Bey of 1863 concerning real property, and that that Agreement was expressly founded on the Organic Law of the Regency, and ignored altogether the more recent Turkish Law of 1867, appealed to by Mr. Reade.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was, in the next place, to refer us to a translation, forwarded by Mr. Reade in his despatch No. 29, of the Bey's "amra," granting to French subjects the same rights in respect of real property in the Regency as were accorded by Treaty to British and Italian subjects.

That the British Treaty of 1863 made no provision to meet the case of a dispute concerning land between a British subject and a foreigner of another nationality, but, by Article XXII of the Italian Treaty (59 State Papers, p. 1289), it was provided that in case of a dispute between an Italian and the subject of a third Power, the party summoned before the local magistrate should have the right to have the case taken before the Consular authority of his nation, and, subject as therein mentioned, with respect to questions of personal status and other matters, the case was to be governed by the Law of Tunis.

That, accordingly, Mr. Reade, in a letter to Sir Charles Dilke, dated the 10th March, stated that Mr. Levy continued to cultivate the estate on a large scale, and that he had already spent nearly 1,000*l.* on it, and that the legality of his position having been formally recognized by the competent authorities, "he is determined to stick to the property until he is driven out of it by a Cadi's Decree or actual violence."

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such further observations on the case as they might suggest. That your Lordship would be glad to be informed, at the same time, whether, in our opinion, the Turkish Law of 1867, appealed to by Mr. Reade, had any application to the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the Turkish Law of 1867 does not apply to the present case. In matters of internal government, as distinguished from external and foreign relations, the Bey of Tunis acts and has long acted independently of the Porte; and the present case is—from the French and Tunisian point of view, so far as the right to the Enfida is concerned—a subject of internal, and not external, concern. The British Government is held to this view by the Conventions of 1863 and of 1875; and France appears, for a long time past, to have maintained, to a greater extent even than Great Britain, the independence of the Bey of Tunis.

We may observe that the "amra" by which French subjects acquired the right to hold land in Tunis gives them authority to possess it "d'après les Traités conclus dans le même but" between the Government of Tunis and those of England and Italy.

And the Treaty between Tunis and Italy contains an express provision that in case a dispute should arise with reference to immovable property "between an Italian and the subject of a third Power, the party summoned before the local magistrate shall have the right to have the case taken before the respective Consular authority, to be tried there in the ordinary way."

This strongly confirms the view taken by us in our Report of the 3rd March, that such a dispute as the present one, between Mr. Levy and French subjects, must, unless both parties are willing to submit to the local Tribunals, be determined, not by those Tribunals, but by the Consular Court of the party against whom the proceedings are taken.

Temple, July , 1881.

Enfida estate.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he had the honour to lay before us, by direction of your Lordship, the inclosed copies of telegrams which had passed between your Lordship and Mr. Reade, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis, respecting the Enfida case. That that case, which had been the subject of previous references to us, was dealt with in our Reports of the 3rd March and 8th April last, printed copies of which were transmitted therewith, together with the other papers.

That in February last the French Government maintained that the administration of justice in Tunis was so open to suspicion that it was impossible for them to consent to leave the Enfida affair to the decision of the Tunisian Tribunals ("Tunis No. 4," No. 30, p. 33, and No. 40, p. 41.)

That in our Report of the 3rd March, after reviewing the Conventions between Great Britain of 1863 and 1875, we expressed the opinion that both the parties to the dispute were exempt from the jurisdiction of the Tunisian Courts, and that if litigation should be resorted to, the proceedings must be taken in the Consular Court of the defendant's nationality.

That in our Reports of the 8th April last, after referring to the Treaty between Tunis and Italy, we confirmed the view previously expressed by us, that such a dispute as the present one between Mr. Levy and French subjects must, unless both parties are willing to submit to the local Tribunals, be determined, not by those Tribunals, but by the Consular Court of the party against whom the proceedings are taken.

That Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris was accordingly instructed by your Lordship to inform the French Government that in the position in which the matter then stood Her Majesty's Government did not feel called upon to interfere in the dispute ("Tunis No. 4," No. 53, p. 53).

That a copy of the note addressed by Lord Lyons to the French Government in pursuance of the above instructions was contained in his despatch No. 426 of the 4th May last.

That no reply had been received to that communication.

That the correspondence respecting the affairs of Tunis recently laid before Parliament ("Tunis No. 6, 1881") contained full particulars of the change effected in the situation of affairs in the Regency by the military operations carried on by France in that country, which resulted in the Treaty of the 12th May last between the French Republic and the Bey.

That Lord Tenterden was to invite our attention to Article IV of that Treaty (which was printed at p. 52 of the Parliamentary Paper), and to the assurances given by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's Government, that all existing Conventions between Tunis and foreign Powers would be maintained and respected. (Lord Lyons to your Lordship, the 16th May, "Tunis No. 6," p. 42; your Lordship to M. Challemel-Lacour, the 20th May, ibid., p. 55.)

That it appeared from Mr. Reade's telegrams (Nos. 67 and 68) that the Sheikh-ul-Islam and Hanafy Tribunal were prohibited by an Edict of the Bey from adjudicating upon the Enfida case, and that the Meliky Court was directed by another Edict of His Highness to try and pronounce judgment upon the suit against Levy.

That Mr. Reade added that the interference of the Bey in the present instance was contrary to all precedent, and, as he had been assured by the Bey himself and his Prime Minister, so irregular and improper, that, on being appealed to by M. Roustan, they had on repeated occasions been obliged to decline all interference in the matter; and that, in answer to a telegram to Mr. Reade instructing him to report whether legal proceedings had been instituted against Mr. Levy, and, if so, in what Court, he had replied that legal proceedings had not, as yet, been instituted against Mr. Levy; and that, if cited to appear before the Meliky Court, he would refuse to attend, and would protest against the illegality of the proceedings.

That, whether the Meliky Court be the proper native Tribunal for the trial of such cases or not, it was conceived that, under existing Conventions, proper legal proceedings should be instituted against Mr. Levy by the French claimants to the estate before he could be dispossessed of it, and that, under the provisions of Article XXII of the Convention between Italy and Tunis of the 8th September, 1868, the benefit of which was extended to British subjects by Article V of the Convention between Great Britain and Tunis of 1875, and to French subjects by the Bey's Amra of the 6th July, 1871 ("Tunis No. 4," p. 52), Mr. Levy was entitled to have the case removed from the native Tribunal to the British Consular Court.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take the papers* transmitted therewith into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the rights of Mr. Levy under the circumstances, and as to whether any, and, if so, what action should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the present position of the case.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Lord Tenterden, dated the 13th instant, stating that, with reference to the letter from the Foreign Office of the 4th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a telegram which had been received from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis,† from which it appeared that Mr. Levy had then been summoned to appear before the Meliky Court, although, as stated by Mr. Reade, the Cadis of that Court had already signed a formal certificate delaring their incompetency to try the Enfida case, which, he says, they assert pertains exclusively to the Hanafy Court, and which document Mr. Reade believed to be in Mr. Levy's possession.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take that telegram into our consideration, together with the papers then before us, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our Report on that case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Jurisdiction of Tunisian Courts and question as to legality of Bey's action.

That if the Tunisian partners of Mr. Levy have such an interest in his claim as to make them competent parties to a suit for the assertion or defence of it, it may be (as pointed out in your Lordship's despatch to Mr. Reade of the 14th March, 1881) that the Tunisian Courts have jurisdiction over the matter. And if so, the question would be whether the Bey had authority, according to the law of Tunis, by Edict, to prohibit the Sheikh-ul-Islam and Hanafy Tribunal from adjudicating upon it, and to direct the Meliky Court to do so.

We have not before us the information necessary to enable us to express any opinion on these points.

Rights of Mr. Levy, under Treaties, lately confirmed by France, to bring his case before Consular Court.

Assuming that the interest in the claim is substantially that of Mr. Levy, to the exclusion of the interests of Tunisian subjects, we are of opinion that he is not bound to leave the determination of a question of legal right between him and French subjects to any of the native local Tribunals, and that, if summoned before the local magistrate, he would have the right to insist that the case should be taken before the Consular Court, to be tried there in the ordinary way.

We have already expressed our opinion, in former Reports, that, previous to the recent events in Tunis, this would be the right of Mr. Levy under the existing Treaties; and the Treaty between the Bey and the French Government lately concluded preserves all the rights created by existing Treaties. We think, therefore, that, if cited to appear before the Meliky Court, Mr. Levy would be entitled to take the course suggested above. Whether any steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government must depend on the proceedings which may be adopted.

Action of Government depends upon proceedings adopted.

My Lord,

Grant of concession for a bank or pawning establishment to M. Daninos.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's letter of the 27th June last, stating that Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis reported* that a concession had been granted to a French subject, named Daninos, for a bank or pawning establishment, with exclusive privileges, for a term of fifty years. That Mr. Reade stated that those exclusive privileges consisted chiefly in the fact that M. Daninos was guaranteed against competition, and that no concession would have been necessary had the business been open to all the world. That the concession appeared to him to be opposed to Articles V and XVI of the Treaty between the Governments of Great Britain and Tunis of the 19th July, 1875. Your Lordship drew our attention to Article IX of the same Treaty, respecting the abolition of all monopolies of agricultural produce or of any other article whatsoever save as therein excepted. Your Lordship requested that we would favour you with our opinion as to whether the provisions of the Treaty precluded the granting by the Tunisian Government of the concession to M. Daninos referred to by Mr. Reade. A copy of the Treaty was inclosed with your Lordship's letter.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Question as to such concession being contrary to Anglo-Tunisian Treaty of 1875.

That, in our opinion, the IXth clause of the Treaty cannot be relied on as opposed to the concession made to M. Daninos. This clause is limited to monopolies of a particular description, and would not extend to a bank or pawning establishment.

But the Vth, XVIth, and XVIIth clauses appear to preclude the granting by the Tunisian Government of the concession, with exclusive privileges, to M. Daninos. This opinion, however, is expressed with a very imperfect knowledge of the exact nature of that concession.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Mr. Levy's resort to the Hanafy Court.

That it now appears from Mr. Broadley's last statement that Mr. Levy has himself resorted to a local Court, "the Hanafy Court" (see Articles 20 and 21 of Petition), and has not waited for any proceedings to be taken in the Consular Courts.

Cannot advise further action without more accurate information.

This being so, we, with our present information as to the law of Tunis with reference to the jurisdiction of its local Courts, are unable to advise your Lordship that any further steps can be, at present, taken on behalf of Mr. Levy. The determination of this must depend upon more accurate information with reference to the exact nature of Mr. Levy's legal proceedings, the jurisdiction of the several local Courts, and the powers of the Bey of Tunis, especially as to removal of proceedings.

Note by the Lord Chancellor.

Enfida estate. Agrees with Law Officers. Opinion as to drafts (A) and (B) to Mr. Adams, and private letter as to offer to Mr. Levy.

I AGREE, as I have done throughout, with the Law Officers in this case.

The two drafts (A) and (B) appear to me very proper to be sent.

But I share Lord Granville's doubts as to the private letter to Mr. Adams, marked (C).

It seems to me that it would be very inconvenient if, after suggesting the mode of settlement there mentioned (if Mr. Adams should be led by this letter to suggest it to the French Government), the French Government should make such an offer as is suggested, and if Mr. Levy should then refuse it, saying that he does not wish to sell his property, and insisting upon his legal rights.

What I would myself prefer is to tell Mr. Adams that Her Majesty's Government have received some private information which leads them to think it probable that, if a lump sum were offered to Mr. Levy to retire, he might be found accessible to such an offer, assuming it (of course) to be a substantial one, but that their information does not go so far as to satisfy them that it has proceeded, directly or indirectly, from Mr. Levy himself. If M. B. St. Hilaire should appear to be willing to find an expedient, as suggested in draft (B), he might be confidentially told as much as this.

Draft (B).

(No. . Very Confidential.)

Foreign Office, July , 1881.

Sir,

WITH reference to my despatch of yesterday's date, it may be as well that the French Government should know that Her Majesty's Government are advised by the Law Officers of the Crown that Mr. Levy is entitled, under the provision of the existing Treaties to which Lord Lyons was instructed to call the attention of the French Government in my despatch No. 379 of the 21st April (recently laid before Parliament), to have the case taken from the local Court, whether Hanafi or Meliki, before the Consular Court, to be tried there in the ordinary way.

Her Majesty's Government have not informed Mr. Levy of this opinion, nor will they present to Parliament the opinion of the Law Officers, as this would be contrary to established practice. They cannot, however, ignore the fact that the case is approaching a point at which it may become difficult to avoid a question arising between the two Governments of a very complicated, and, possibly, serious character.

Under these circumstances, they think it advisable that the two Governments should anticipate any such question by a friendly interchange of views. They therefore wish you to sound M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire, in an entirely confidential manner, whether he has any suggestion to offer by which the case might be settled between the contending parties.

Dear Adams,

WITH reference to Lord Granville's despatch No. of to-day respecting the Enfida estate, probably the easiest solution would be that the French Company should be induced to pay Levy a lump sum to retire.

You might give a hint to this effect as from yourself.

My dear Adams,

LORD GRANVILLE did at one time receive some private information which leads him to think it probable that if a lump sum were offered to Mr. Levy to retire he might be found accessible to such an offer, assuming it, of course, to be a substantial one; but this information does not go so far as to satisfy him that it has proceeded directly or indirectly from Mr. Levy himself. If M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire should appear to be willing to find an expedient, as suggested in Lord Granville's despatch of to-day, he might be told confidentially as much as this.

My Lord,

Mr. Perkins charged with fighting against French and killing an officer.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers relative to an accusation brought against Mr. Perkins, a British subject, by the General in command of the French forces operating in Tunis against the Kroumirs, of having fought in the ranks of the enemy and having killed a French officer.

That the circumstances under which that charge had been brought were detailed in Mr. Reade's further despatch No. 61 of the 2nd May last.

Charge withdrawn.

That we should perceive from Mr. Reade's further despatch No. 78 of the 24th June, and from Lord Lyons' despatch No. 652 of the 6th July, that that charge had since been withdrawn.

Claim for indemnity.

That, nevertheless, Mr. Perkins had addressed a letter to Mr. Reade (Inclosure 3 in No. 78), in which he expressed himself dissatisfied at the terms in which the charge had been withdrawn, and claimed to be entitled to a substantial indemnity for the calumnious accusation, which, he stated, compelled him to abandon his duties in the interior, and had otherwise damaged his present position and future prospects in the Regency of Tunis. That there was no evidence whatever in support of those allegations.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Perkins' application for further redress.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

It cannot be supported.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Perkins may properly be informed that the circumstances are not such as would entitle Her Majesty's Government to make a pecuniary claim upon the French Government in respect of the mistaken charge against Mr. Perkins, now withdrawn, of having taken part in the warlike operations against the French army.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

Insurrection at Sfax.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, in a despatch dated the 6th ultimo, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis forwarded a Report by Mr. Vice-Consul Galea of the occurrences in connection with the insurrection at Sfax, and a copy of a protest which he had addressed to the Bey, holding His Highness' Government responsible for any losses sustained by British subjects owing to the insufficiency of the measures taken by the local authorities for the protection of their persons and property.*

Proposed draft to Mr. Reade as to liability of foreign Governments for losses of British subjects, and presentation of protest.

That Lord Tenterden transmitted therewith Mr. Reade's despatch and its inclosures, and he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would report at our early convenience whether the terms of the accompanying draft instruction which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. Reade, as to the liability of a foreign Government for losses sustained in such cases, and the presenting of a protest without reference to Her Majesty's Government, were right and proper.

That we would observe that the draft instruction referred only to losses from the insurrection, and not from the subsequent bombardment by the French fleet, as to which the rights of Her Majesty's Government were reserved.

That the proposed draft was founded on a Report furnished by the Law Officers of the Crown in 1861 on certain claims of the same nature against the Government of Venezuela,† a copy of which Report was also transmitted therewith.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve draft.

That, in our opinion, the terms of the accompanying draft instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Reade are right and proper.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to Mr. Reade.

(No. .) Foreign Office, August , 1881.

Sir,

IN your despatch No. 80 of the 6th ultimo you inclose copy of a protest addressed to the Bey on behalf of the British subjects who have suffered by the recent insurrection at Sfax, in which you hold the Government of His Highness responsible for the losses they have incurred on account of the insufficiency of the measures taken by the local authorities for the protection of their persons and property. I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government have always held the opinion that a foreign Power cannot, as a matter of international right, be made responsible generally for injuries inflicted on the persons or property of British subjects resident in the country by insurgents engaged in open and armed hostility to its Government, which injuries the Government had not the power to prevent. In such a case, foreigners cannot claim to be placed in a better situation than the natural-born subjects of the country. If a foreigner's property is injured by an invading army he has no title to compensation, and injury caused by insurgents or rebels is subject to the same rule. If, indeed, the Government, having the power to do so, neglects or wilfully omits to restrain or put down the insurgents, it may be regarded as an accomplice in the act complained of, and there would be a right in the foreigner to demand compensation. It is possible that you may have reasonable ground for supposing that in the present instance the injuries complained of would not have occurred but for gross neglect on the part of the Bey's Government, although, so far as Her Majesty's Government are informed, this does not appear to have been the case. But, under any circumstances, it is desirable that protests of this nature should not be presented without previous communication with Her Majesty's Government, and I have accordingly to instruct you to refer home in the first instance if it should on any future occasion appear necessary to present a similar protest.

You will understand that this despatch refers only to losses by the rising of the population, and not to any losses which may be caused by the bombardment, as to which Her Majesty's Government reserve their rights.

My Lord,

Enfida estate. Mr. Levy summoned before the Meliky Court.

WE were honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 8th August, and to previous correspondence respecting the Enfida case, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a telegram from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis,* from which it appeared that Mr. Levy had again been summoned to appear before the Meliky Court, which had been directed to proceed with case, and if Mr. Levy should not appear, to pass judgment in default, although, according to Mahommedan law, as stated by Mr. Reade, judgment cannot be pronounced in the absence of the defendant. That Mr. Reade stated that Mr. Levy had protested against the procedure now adopted, insisting on his right, as defendant in the suit, to demand that it should be tried by the British Consular Court, conformably with Article XXIV of the Treaty of 1875. That Mr. Reade pointed out that, as neither of the litigants is Tunisian or subject to the Bey's jurisdiction, his interference was all the more irregular.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose a copy of our Report on the case of the 8th April last, and of the following documents, namely, the Convention between this country and Tunis of the 10th October, 1863;† the General Convention of the 19th July, 1875;‡ the Bey's Amra§ declaring the conditions under which French subjects might hold real property in the Regency; the Treaty between Italy and Tunis of 1868;‖ and the Printed Correspondence, "Tunis No. 4."¶

That a later telegram from Mr. Reade was also annexed, stating that no reply to his protest had been received; that the trial before the Meliky Court had been deferred in consequence of the absence of Mr. Levy, who had been again summoned to attend. That, in his previous telegram, Mr. Reade reported that a French military force had gone in the direction of the Enfida estate, accompanied by agents of the Marseilles Company.

That Mr. Reade had been instructed to report at once by telegram the result of Mr. Levy's demand for the transfer of the case to the British Consular Court.

That Sir Julian was to add that to the other papers sent therewith a despatch which had just been received from Mr. Reade,†† containing a copy of a protest addressed to him by Mr. Levy; and he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any action was called for on the part of Her Majesty's Government under the present circumstances of the case.

We were also favoured with a note from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 23rd August, inclosing despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis.‡‡

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Mr. Levy's action renders difficult the maintenance of his right to be heard only before a Consular Court.

Cannot give any opinion as to removal of case to Meliky Court.

No steps to be taken unless the Meliky Court has no jurisdiction.

That, inasmuch as Mr. Levy himself instituted proceedings in one of the local Tunisian Courts, it appears to us that he has rendered it difficult on the part of the Government to maintain his right to have the case heard only in the British Consular Court. Whether the removal of the case from the Hanafy to the Meliky Court was beyond the lawful power of the Bey is a matter on which we are unable to express an opinion, as it depends on the Constitution of Tunis and the procedure of its Courts.

We do not think, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government is in a position at present to take any action in the matter.

We have written the above on the assumption that there has been a transfer to the Meliky Court of an existing cause pending in the Hanafy Court, and not the commencement of new and independent proceedings in the former Court.

If it should hereafter appear that this assumption is not well founded, or that the Meliky Court is acting with entire absence of jurisdiction, it may become your Lordship's duty to make representations on the subject.

Temple, October 27, 1881.

My Lord,

Enfida estate.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 12th instant, stating that, with reference to the claim of Mr. Levy to the Enfida estate, in the Regency of Tunis, and to our last Report in relation thereto of the 27th August last (a copy of which would be found at p. 25 of the accompanying printed papers, marked A), he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, further correspondence which had taken place on the subject.

Proceedings of the Meliky Court.

That on the 31st August Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis reported by telegram that the Meliky Court had issued a Decree directing the authorities to put the Marseilles Company into possession of the Enfida estate. (Print A, p. 26, No. 63, and Extender, p. 28, No. 68.)

That, in reply, Mr. Reade was instructed to answer the inquiry suggested in our Report of the 27th August (ibid., p. 25), viz.: "Whether there had been a transfer of the cause pending in the Hanafy Court to the Meliky Court, or whether a new and independent proceeding had been commenced in the Meliky Court." (Ibid., p. 27, No. 65, and Extender, No. 66.)

That Mr. Reade's reply (ibid., p. 27, No. 67, and p. 28, No. 68) was somewhat obscure. That the next document to which Lord Tenterden was to call our attention was a short petition from Mr. Levy, transmitted by Mr. Reade to the Foreign Office on the 30th August. (Ibid., p. 28, No. 69.)

That, in the meanwhile, Dr. Arpa, Her Majesty's Legal Vice-Consul at Tunis, who had been absent on leave, had been instructed to return to his post, and to draw up a Report on the case. (Ibid., p. 18, No. 43.)

That that Report would be found at pp. 38-48, ibid.

That, before its receipt at the Foreign Office, Mr. Reade had telegraphed a request to your Lordship to suspend all action upon it until receipt of fuller explanations. (Ibid., p. 29, No. 71, and Extender, p. 51, No. 75.)

That those explanations were contained in his despatch of the 1st September (ibid., p. 49, No. 73), and in a further despatch of the 8th September (ibid., p. 51, No. 76), and a Supplementary and Confidential despatch of the same date. (Ibid., p. 58, No. 77.)

That the next document to which our attention was invited was a letter from Mr. Levy of the 14th September, stating that he had instructed Mr. David Santillana, ex-Secretary of the International Commission at Tunis, and Chief Interpreter of His Highness the Bey, to proceed to London and place his original documents and his services at the disposal of the Foreign Office, in the event of their being required.

That Mr. Santillana had arrived in London, and had addressed two letters to your Lordship. That the first, dated the 22nd September (print B), contained translations of the Arabic documents relating to Mr. Levy's claim, with a summary of their contents, "as illustrating the legal part of the claim according to Moslem law." That the second letter, October the 1st (print C), contained a brief summary of the Mahommedan law of pre-emption, under which Mr. Levy had preferred his claim. That we should observe that Mr. Reade, in his telegram of the 5th September (print A, p. 27, No. 67), reported that "in consequence of Mr. Levy's opposition, or some other cause, the trial has not been proceeded with;" whereas, in his immediately preceding telegram of the 31st August (ibid., p. 26, No. 63), he had reported that the Meliky had actually issued a Decree directing the local authorities to put the Marseilles Company into possession.

That the latest Report on the subject was contained in his telegram No. 95 of the 24th September, from which it appeared that, notwithstanding "the illegal sentence" of the Meliky Court, Mr. Levy's possession was still undisturbed.

That it would seem from those communications that the Decree referred to in Mr. Reade's telegram of the 31st August (ibid., p. 26, No. 63) was an arbitrary order made by the Meliky Court without previous trial. Such being the position of affairs, Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take all the papers transmitted therewith into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any further action was called for at present on the part of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Remarks on the transfer by Bey of case to the Meliky Court, and the action of that Court.

That it appears, from the information now before us, that the pending case was transferred, by order of the Bey, from the Hanafy to the Meliky Court, and that the latter Court has made an order annulling the attachment of rent granted by the Hanafy Court. It would seem, too, that it has directed that the Marseilles Company should be put in possession of the estate, but that no steps have been taken to carry out this order.

But upon the important question how far it was within the constitutional power of the Bey to transfer the case, and authorize the Meliky Court to adjudicate upon it, our information is still imperfect, and the matter is left very obscure.

Mr. Reade states (No. 76) that the Bey of Tunis at one time informed him "distinctly and emphatically that he had no jurisdiction whatever over the local Court," and he adds that "it is notorious that in Mahommedan countries the religious Tribunals are entirely independent of the Sovereign Power."

Dr. Arpa (No. 72, p. 39) states, in relation to the Decree directing the Meliky Court to adjudicate on the Enfida case, and to another Decree of the Bey, interdicting the Hanafy Court from doing so: "I have not been able to see these two Decrees. I am unable, therefore, to say whether they are ultra vires, constituting a violation of the Treaty right, but by the very fact of their being ex parte orders, if they were intended to decide a question of jurisdiction by a judicial authority, they are illegal, as Mr. Levy had no opportunity of defending himself. If they were intended to create a new order of things by a legislative measure, they could only be prospective, and cannot affect Mr. Levy's case."

The meaning of this is not very clear, and we do not know whether it is intended to lay down as a general principle of law that prospective legislation of the nature in question could not affect pending litigation (which would seem open to doubt), or whether this observation has special reference to the powers of the Bey of Tunis.

But however this may be, it does not appear that Dr. Arpa agrees with Mr. Reade's view that the Courts are entirely independent of the power of the Bey, inasmuch as, if he did, it is not easy to understand why he should be unable, without seeing the Decrees, to say whether they are ultra vires or not.

But, further, in Mr. Santillana's letter of the 22nd September, 1881, written on behalf of Mr. Levy (see para. 14), he urges, as the first of the reasons why Mr. Levy is not bound to appear before the Meliky Court, that, according to a Decree of the Bey (which he hopes to be able shortly to submit) that Court is debarred from judging of suits relating to "shoofâ" or pre-emption by right of contiguity.

If such a Decree exists, it certainly seems inconsistent with the idea that the Bey has no power to confer jurisdiction upon the Tribunals, or to deprive them of it. And the existence of such a Decree would sufficiently explain why the Meliky Court should have declared itself competent in a case of "shoofâ," which is urged by Mr. Santillana as the second reason why Mr. Levy is not bound to submit himself to that Tribunal.

Course to be adopted.

Under these circumstances, we feel ourselves incompetent to pronounce an opinion whether the Meliky Court is acting without jurisdiction. If further information should prove that this is so, it may be your Lordship's duty, as we pointed out in our former Report, to make representations upon the subject.

Even if it should turn out that the Bey was in a position lawfully to transfer the case to the Meliky Court, still, if your Lordship should be satisfied that this act of the Bey, though strictly within his powers, was an arbitrary exercise of those powers due to the action taken by the French authorities with a view of obtaining an advantage for the Marseillaise Company to the prejudice of a British subject, we think your Lordship would be warranted in taking action in the matter.

Suggesting independent arbitration.

We need hardly say that if the French Government could obtain the consent of the Marseillaise Company to refer the case to independent arbitration, and should be willing to do so, such a course would be the best solution of the difficulties which have arisen.

My Lord,

Liability of foreigners contracting for French troops in Tunis to French criminal jurisdiction.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 15th instant, stating that by your Lordship's direction he inclosed a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent at Tunis,* calling attention to a notice (also inclosed) which had been circulated in that city by the French military authorities, advertising for tenders for the supply of their troops.

That Mr. Reade pointed out that by the 12th paragraph of that notice tenders could only be accepted from foreigners on condition of their submitting to French jurisdiction, both criminal and civil, and as British subjects could not submit to the jurisdiction of a foreign Power in Tunis without the assent of the British Representative, Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be advisable to warn either them or the French authorities that no such assent would be given as regarded criminal jurisdiction.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consul may warn British subjects against submitting to such jurisdiction.

Although there is no obligation to do so we see no objection to Her Majesty's Consul warning British subjects, whom he may think likely to enter into contracts with the French Government, that consent will not be given to their submitting to French criminal jurisdiction.

Should inform French authorities of such warning.

If such notices be given it probably will be well, as an act of courtesy, to inform the French authorities that such course has been adopted.

to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised by Her Majesty's Judge and Consul-General at Constantinople in his telegram of the 11th instant.

That Messrs. Hanson and Co., English bankers at Constantinople, recently suspended payment, and that a meeting of the creditors was to take place on the 22nd instant.

That it was presumed that Mr. Fawcett's question referred to public moneys due by the bankers at the time of their suspension to the various Departments of Her Majesty's Government which he mentioned. That Bonham's case to which he referred was one of those cited in the letter of the Secretary of the Post Office of the 1st January, 1881, and was reported in "Law Reports, Chancery Division," vol. x, pp. 595-604.

That Mr. Fawcett desired to know also whether he had power to issue a writ of extent, and whether that course was expedient in the interest of the Crown.

That Sir Julian was to inclose a copy of the Order in Council for the Levant, and to refer us more particularly to sections 6 and 87.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Issue of writ of extent necessary.

That we think Mr. Fawcett has the power to issue a writ of extent, and that such a course is expedient and necessary in the interest of the Crown, for the purpose of securing the sums due by Messrs. Hanson at the time of their suspension to the various Departments of Her Majesty's Government.

That we write this on the assumption that Messrs. Hanson did not carry on business under any licence from the Ottoman Government comprising conditions which would be violated by an administration of their estate in the British Consular Court, according to the English law.

My Lord,

The swearing of affidavits before Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, which had been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople* on the subject of the validity of an affidavit sworn before a Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople, for the purposes for which an affidavit was required in certain bankruptcy proceedings pending before Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court there, it being contended that such affidavit should have been sworn before the proper officer of the Court.

That by section 1 of the Act 18 & 19 Vict., cap. 42, an affidavit sworn as therein mentioned was as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if sworn before a Justice of the Peace or Notary Public in the United Kingdom, and the question of validity of affidavits so sworn in proceedings pending before the Supreme Consular Court in cases where affidavits were required seemed to be a question of law for the decision of that Court when it should arise; but the power to administer oaths given to Diplomatic officers under the Act was discretionary; and, in view of the opinion expressed by Mr. Fawcett, the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, in his letter to Mr. St. John, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers under our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople to decline in future to swear persons to affidavits required to be used in proceedings pending before the Supreme Consular Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the object of the 18 & 19 Vict., cap. 42, generally was to enable the persons there named to administer oaths and do notarial acts in the absence of those usually performing such acts, and the words "whenever he shall see necessary" in the first section make the exercise of the power entirely discretionary.

Should be done only under exceptional circumstances.

Since there is at Constantinople no difficulty in swearing affidavits in bankruptcy and other proceedings in the Consular Court before the officer duly appointed for the purpose, instructions may, in our opinion, properly be sent to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople to decline in future (unless under exceptional circumstances of emergency) to swear persons to affidavits to be used in proceedings pending before the Supreme Consular Court there.

My Lord,

Case of V. Farrugia. Petition for remission of sentence passed by Consular Court at Constantinople.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Colonial Office,† forwarding a petition from Vincenzo Farrugia, a Consular prisoner in the Corradino Prison at Malta, praying for a remission of sentence that he was then undergoing at that place.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was further to inclose us Reports on that case from Her Majesty's Acting Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, and from Mr. Fawcett, Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge, who was then in this country;‡ and that he (Sir J. Pauncefote) was to request that we would be so good as to take those documents into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any, and if so, what, portion of the sentence passed on Farrugia could properly be remitted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in imposing the sentence of twenty years' imprisonment upon Vincenzo

Farrugia, Sir Philip Francis was no doubt influenced by the laudable desire to prevent the knife being used as a weapon of attack; but still the sentence appears to us to be very severe, and one that may well be, in part, remitted.

A perusal of the depositions and notes of evidence leads us to the conclusion that the prisoner was probably subjected to considerable provocation before inflicting the wound.

In the preliminary examination, Antonio Bailas states: "I heard cracks of glass broken; but I did not see how. I saw stools broken. I went to the prisoner's room, and saw marks about his face and head."

This evidence was not given on the trial; but Demetrio Sereno did prove that the prosecutor struck the convicted man on the back with a stool before the wound was inflicted.

Prayer of petition may be granted, and prisoner released.

As the prisoner has now suffered an imprisonment of five years and five months, which, we presume, would, if he has been well-conducted, represent a sentence of seven years' imprisonment, we are of opinion that justice will be sufficiently effected and reflection upon the original sentence avoided if the convict be set at liberty upon the 1st July next, and that he be so informed forthwith.

Writ of extent in case of Hanson and Co.'s failure.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st March last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 19th January, of which a printed copy was inclosed, relative to the issue of a writ of extent by Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople for the protection of the interests of the Crown affected by the failure of Messrs. Hanson and Co., he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Judge at Constantinople,* and to state that the writ of extent was issued immediately on affidavits of urgency, but that no inquiry had been subsequently instituted to establish the Crown debt.

That Consul-General and Judge Fawcett's previous despatch on the subject was also inclosed,† and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what further steps, if any, should be taken to protect the rights of the Crown.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Form of writ not correct, and proceedings perhaps irregular. Should let matter drop.

That the form of the writ is not correct, and it is not clear that the proceedings connected with it are regular. But it is, we apprehend, too late now to commence the proceedings ab initio. And inasmuch as it is not improbable that the matter may not be litigated, we think it would be prudent to take no further steps at present.

The form of the writ can possibly be amended if steps be taken to question the proceedings, and this could be as effectually done then as it could now.

Temple, June 30, 1881.

My Lord,

Revenue of Cyprus. Application of surplus to the Loan of 1855.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 15th instant stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th of January last relative to the question of the retention by Her Majesty's Government of so much of the surplus revenue of Cyprus as might be sufficient to satisfy the arrears due by the Ottoman Government to the Porte on account of the 1855 Loan, he was directed by your Lordship to lay before us the accompanying correspondence on the subject, which had taken place since the date of our Report.

That that correspondence referred, as we would observe, to two distinct points.

1. The offer made by the Porte, and accepted by Her Majesty's Government, to apply the surplus revenue of Cyprus for 1879-80 to the 1855 Loan, on the understanding that the surplus for that year was to be converted at the rate of 120 piastres to the £ T.; and,

2. To the appropriation in subsequent years of the surplus, or of such portion of it as might be required, to the payment of the arrears and interest due on the Loan.

That the communication suggested in our Report calling upon the Porte to give the Guaranteeing Governments the benefit of the special security to which they were entitled under Article III of the Convention of 1855, by which the Customs of Smyrna were specially charged with the interest and sinking fund of the loan, had been made by the British and French Ambassadors; no reply to that communication had been received from the Porte.

That Lord Tenterden was to call our special attention to Mr. Goschen's despatch No. 374 of the 10th May and to the note from the Porte inclosed in it; to the letter to the Treasury of the 27th May and to their reply of the 4th June; and Lord Tenterden was to request us to take into our consideration the annexed draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople instructing him to call the attention of the Porte to Lord Salisbury's despatch of the 23rd December, 1879, and to inform them that Her Majesty's Government do not recognize the assignment of the Cyprus revenues to the Administration of the Six Contributions, and that, in order to maintain the prior claim of the Governments, they had decided to instruct the High Commissioner of Cyprus to suspend any further payments on account of the surplus revenue.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed at our early convenience whether we concurred in the terms of the draft.

We were also honoured with Lord Tenterden's communication of the 28th instant.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to the Earl of Dufferin.

(No. .)
Foreign Office, July , 1881.

My Lord,

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration Mr. Goschen's despatch No. 374 of the 10th May last, forwarding a note from the Porte relative to the question of the application of the Cyprus surplus for 1879-80 to the payment of the arrears due on the Ottoman Guaranteed Loan of 1855. The note states:—

1. That the Ottoman Government do not consider the sum of 85,000*l.* as the whole of the surplus revenue of Cyprus for that year.

2. That the revenues of Cyprus having been pledged to the Administration of the Six Indirect Contributions by the Convention of the 22nd November, 1879, that portion only of the revenues which preceded the conclusion of the said Convention can be affected to the 1855 Loan.

3. That for the future the Turkish Government will insist on the concession of the surplus at the rate of 100 piastres to the £T.

I will deal first with the second point, which refers to the assignment of the tribute to the Administration of the Six Contributions. Her Majesty's Government are advised that they are entitled to treat the surplus revenues of Cyprus as part of the revenues of Turkey, which are charged, by Article III of the Convention of 1855, with the payment of the interest and sinking fund of the 1855 Loan; and they cannot admit the right of the Porte to assign them to later creditors. A despatch was addressed by my predecessor to Sir H. Layard on the 23rd December, 1879, in which he stated that Her Majesty's Government could not accept or recognize the transfer to any other person of the Sultan's right to receive this payment, nor could they admit any liability, immediate or contingent, to pay it to any person except the Sultan. Further, that any debt owing by the Porte to Her Majesty's Government must of necessity stand as a first charge against the said surplus.

I have to instruct your Excellency to address a note to the Porte calling their attention to the communication in this sense made by Sir H. Layard in January 1880, and to state that Her Majesty's Government do not recognize the assignment of the Cyprus revenues to the Administration of the Six Contributions.

With reference to the first and second points raised in Assim Pasha's note, I may refer your Excellency for a statement of the views of Her Majesty's Government to the letter from the Board of Treasury of the 16th February last. You will see that the Board, after a careful consideration of the subject, consider that the accounts of the Government of Cyprus previous to the transfer were fairly and impartially examined by Sir R. Biddulph, that the claims for deductions made by him were reasonable, and they assumed, until better informed, that the annual payment was properly fixed by him at 11,121,951 piastres, subject to a temporary deduction of 29,574 piastres on account of the Forced Loan of 1877.

With regard to the rate of exchange, the Board were of opinion that the payment to the Porte for the years subsequent to 1879-80 should be made at the average rate which prevailed during the five years preceding occupation.

If the Ottoman Government wish to reopen the discussion of these points, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to do so at a fitting opportunity; but, in view of the claim which has been put forward to ignore the rights of the Guaranteeing Governments under the Convention of the 27th June, 1855, and to transfer part of their security to the parties to the Convention of the 22nd November, 1879, Her Majesty's Government have decided, in order to maintain the prior claim of the Guaranteeing Governments, to instruct the High Commissioner of Cyprus to suspend any further payments on account of the surplus revenue. Mr. Goschen's proposal to continue to press for the immediate remittance of as large a portion as possible of the 85,000*l.*, which the Porte offered to pay on account of the interest due on the 1855 Loan, is approved, and I have to request your Excellency to take action accordingly.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

Abcaris v. Solas. Power of British Consular Courts in Levant to order service on British subjects out of their jurisdiction.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch that had been addressed to your Lordship by Her Majesty's Acting Judge at Constantinople,* forwarding a despatch, together with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tripoli, and requesting to be informed whether, having regard to the provisions of clause 6 of Her Majesty's Order in Council for the Levant, a British Consular Court in the Ottoman dominions had the power to order service on a British subject in England in the same way as the High Court of Justice in this country had power in certain cases to order service out of the jurisdiction.

That Mr. Lister was to request that we would be so good as to take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted by Mr. Burrell.

That a copy of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 12th December, 1873,† was transmitted therewith.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

They do not possess such power.

That, in our opinion, a British Consular Court in the Ottoman dominions has not, under the provisions of clause 6 (see also clause 53, iv) the power to order service on a British subject resident in England.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 20th May last, stating that he had the honour to lay before us, by direction of your Lordship, papers‡ which related to the recent increase of piracy in the Persian Gulf and to the measures which should be taken for its repression.

That Lord Tenterden was to refer us, in the first place, to the Reports of our predecessors on the subject (dated the 2nd December, 1879, and the 5th January, 1880, respectively), in which the facts of the case are fully detailed.

That since the date of those Reports negotiations have continued with the Porte to obtain their assent to the arrangement proposed in a note addressed by Her Majesty's Ambassador to Abédine Pasha on the 7th July, 1880 (Inclosure No. 1 in No. 136 of the 12th July, 1880), whereby Her Majesty's Government should be allowed to co-operate with the Turkish authorities, and to act in Turkish waters for the suppression of piracy, as suggested in the Law Officers Report of the 5th January, 1880.

That the result of those negotiations had been unsuccessful, and that Lord Tenterden was to call our attention to the letter of the Foreign Office to the India Office of the 9th March last, communicating the final reply of the Porte on the subject, also to the India Office letter of the 24th March, suggesting that Her Majesty's Naval Commanders in the Persian Gulf should be authorized to act along the Arab coast in such wise as might be necessary for the capture and punishment of marauders, collision with Turkish cruizers or troops being scrupulously avoided.

That your Lordship was disposed to instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople to notify distinctly to the Porte that, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government found themselves compelled to authorize the British Naval Commanders in the Gulf, in case of need, to take such measures as they might think fit for the protection of British commerce without reference to the claims of the Sultan to territorial jurisdiction in those waters; and that Lord Tenterden was to submit, for our consideration, the accompanying draft of a proposed letter to the Admiralty, requesting that instructions be given to Her Majesty's Naval Commanders in the Gulf in the sense proposed by the India Office.

That before adopting that course, however, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the doctrines of international jurisprudence on the subject, the circumstances of the case were such as to justify a resort to the measures proposed; and, if so, whether the terms of the draft letter to the Admiralty met with our concurrence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve of proposed steps for its repression.

That in our opinion it has now become evident that the Porte is wanting either in the power or the will to protect British and general commerce in the Persian Gulf.

The constant representations of the English Government protesting against the continuance of unrestrained and unpunished piracy, have produced no result.

We therefore think that, having full regard to the principles of international jurisprudence, the circumstances of the case are such as to justify a resort to the measures mentioned in Lord Tenterden's letter to us.

We do not regard the proposed measures as "reprisals," but simply as necessary for the protection of life and property, in the continued absence of the maintenance of authority by the Power on which that duty would more naturally devolve.

Notice of such action should be given to the Porte.

Notwithstanding the various communications that have already been made to the Turkish Government, we agree with your Lordship in the view that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople should notify distinctly to the Porte the course of action determined upon by Her Majesty's Government.

Noting that the word "private" is probably intended for "piratical," we concur in the draft proposed letter.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from Sir J. Pauncefote to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Foreign Office, July , 1881.

Sir,

THE prevalence of piracy in the Persian Gulf has occupied the attention of Her Majesty's Government for some time past, and it has been their object to co-operate with the Turkish Government for its suppression, and to obtain their permission for the Commanders of Her Majesty's ships to pursue piratical craft within the limits of Turkish waters in those parts where the Sultan's authority is not sufficiently established to afford the necessary protection to commerce from the attacks of the marauders.

In May 1879 Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople warned the Porte that Her Majesty's Government could not permit the state of things complained of to continue; that it was a danger to British commerce, and that they would be compelled to interpose to put an end to it unless the Turkish Government took measures to do so.

These and further representations have only resulted in a denial by the Porte of any necessity for the measures proposed.

I am accordingly directed by Earl Granville to request that you will move the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to modify the instructions issued in May 1879 by which the Naval Officers in the Gulf were prohibited under certain conditions from taking hostile action within Turkish territory or its waters, and to instruct them not to allow themselves for the future to be too much hampered by the 3-mile limit in pursuing and capturing pirates, especially as the Turkish authority on the coast is at many points of a very shadowy description.

They will scrupulously avoid any collision with Turkish cruizers or troops, and they will hand over to the Turkish officials all offenders captured in Turkish jurisdiction. They will report all cases where operations have been undertaken within the 3-mile limit, to Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad for communication to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople.

I am to add that Earl Granville proposes to instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople distinctly to notify to the Turkish Government that their neglect or inability to suppress piracy on those parts of the coast over which they claim sovereignty is a constant source of peril to British commerce and shipping in the Gulf, and that under those circumstances Her Majesty's Government find themselves compelled to authorize the British Naval Commanders, in case of need, to take such measures as they may think fit for its protection when necessary, without reference to the claims of the Sultan to territorial jurisdiction in those waters.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

My Lord,

Claims of British subjects on Porte. Protest against surrender of Cyprus revenue to bondholders.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, forwarding a letter from certain British subjects having claims against the Ottoman Government for various sums of money due on account of work done, goods supplied, and services rendered, in which they called attention to a rumour that the Porte intended to surrender the surplus revenues of Cyprus for the benefit of the bondholders, and that they protested against the assignment of the surplus by the Porte to any persons, or body of persons, until the debts due to them by the Imperial Ottoman Government had been paid or satisfactorily provided for.

That the claims in question had formed the subject of frequent correspondence between Her Majesty's Embassy and the Porte. That they had in whole, or in part, as would be seen from the annexed despatches from Sir H. Layard and Mr. Goschen, been admitted by the Turkish Government, which had made various proposals for their settlement, but had hitherto failed to carry those proposals into effect. That our Report of the 6th January last relative to the appropriation of the Cyprus revenue to the payment of the arrears and interest of the Guaranteed Loan of 1855 was sent therewith for convenience of reference, together with a despatch which, with our concurrence, had been addressed to the Earl of Dufferin,* renewing the protest of Her Majesty's Government against the assignment of the Cyprus revenues to the Administration of the Six Contributions. That with reference to the last paragraph but one of the inclosed letter from the British creditors of the Porte, your Lordship presumed that, apart from any question of previous lien under the Convention of 1855, the surplus revenue of Cyprus could not legally be attached in the hands of Her Majesty's Government by private creditors of the Porte. That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether that view be correct; and, if so, whether Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople might properly be instructed to inform the British creditors, in reply to their letter, that Her Majesty's Government claimed to retain the surplus revenue of Cyprus in satisfaction of debts due to them by the Porte, and could not admit the right of any other creditors to attach that surplus in their hands, or the right of the Porte to dispose of the same until its pecuniary obligations towards Great Britain had been liquidated.

* To the Earl of Dufferin, No. 485, July 14, 1881.

That Lord Tenterden was to inclose, for our information, a further despatch from Lord Dufferin, relative to representations which he had made to the Porte as to the claims of British subjects on the Ottoman Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Surplus Cyprus revenue cannot be attached by creditors of Porte. British Government entitled to such surplus.

That, in our opinion, the surplus revenue of Cyprus could not legally be attached in the hands of Her Majesty's Government by private creditors of the Porte.

And Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, we consider, may properly be instructed to inform the British creditors of the Porte that Her Majesty's Government claim to be entitled to retain such surplus revenue, and cannot admit the right of any other creditors of the Porte to attach that surplus in their hands, or the right of the Turkish Government to dispose of the same until its pecuniary obligations towards Great Britain have been liquidated.

My Lord,

Tax on machinery in Mr. Hadkinson's oil-mill.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to submit for our consideration a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,[*] relating to the case of a British subject named Hadkinson, who disputed the right of the Turkish Government to levy a tax on machinery which he had erected in his house in Mitylene. That it would be seen that the Turkish authorities insisted upon their right to assess as real property some machinery which Mr. Hadkinson had imported and affixed to an oil-mill, and maintained that Ottoman subjects were similarly taxed, whereas it was contended on behalf of Mr. Hadkinson that machinery which was removable could not be treated as part of the building; that, having paid duty on its importation into Turkey, it could not by Treaty be subjected to any further taxation, and that to impose such a charge upon Ottoman subjects who were similarly situated was equally illegal. That the question seemed to be one of Turkish law, for the decision of the Turkish Tribunals, which, as we were aware, had exclusive jurisdiction in matters relative to land held by foreigners in Turkey.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose Hertslet's "Treaties on Trade: Turkey," which contained, at pp. 73-75, the Turkish Law of 1867, enabling foreigners to hold real property in Turkey, and the Protocol relating thereto between Great Britain and the Porte.

And that Sir Julian Pauncefote had the honour to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople for his guidance in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Question controlled by Turkish law. Tax on importation of goods does not exempt them from further payments.

That the question involved is controlled by Turkish law.

It does not follow that because the tax on importation has been paid in respect of the machinery it may not be treated as enhancing, for the purposes of taxation, the value of the real property to which it is affixed.

This would not, we think, be a violation of the Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Turkey which provides that if goods have paid the import duty the buyer shall not be charged with any further duty in respect of them. It appears to us that it would be desirable to obtain further information with regard to the nature of the tax, the mode in which it is assessed, and the Turkish law in relation to it, before definitely determining the course which should be adopted.

Further information desirable.

My Lord,

Pitts v. Lafontaine. Proceedings as to decisions of Judicial Committee.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th July last, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list,[*] and relating to the application of Mr. Joseph Pitts, a British subject, resident at Constantinople, for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in recovering possession of some landed property on the Island of Prinkipo, in the Sea of Marmora, of which he complained that he had been unjustly deprived by the action of Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was, in the first place, to invite our attention to a letter from the Privy Council Office to your Lordship's Department of the 8th December, 1880, transmitting a copy of an Order in Council of Her Majesty on the appeal of Pitts v. Lafontaine, and other documents therein mentioned, and to the copies (which were inclosed), marked A and B, of two Judgments delivered by the Lords of the Judicial Committee in that suit.

That the first Judgment (A) contained a statement of the facts which gave rise to the litigation, and to Mr. Pitts' present application. That, on the 18th December last, a copy of the letter from the Privy Council Office, and duplicates of the inclosures, were forwarded to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople for communication to Consul-General Fawcett, the Judge of Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court.

That we would observe that in the first Judgment (A, p. 18) their Lordships stated that it was unhappily impossible for them, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, to give Mr. Pitts full and adequate relief, and (after setting aside certain orders of the Court of the 18th July, 1874, and the 27th March, 1878, and all subsequent orders in the suit under appeal), they declared that Mr. Pitts, or his wife, as trustee for him, ought to be restored to the possession of the property claimed by him, but without prejudice to any questions between him and third parties. That they further ordered that the Consular Court do take all such proceedings as were within its jurisdiction, in order to effect such restoration of possession, and they declared that Mr. Pitts was to be at liberty to take such proceedings as he might be advised against the respondent, or any other person, to obtain restoration of his property.

That on the 26th February Mr. Goschen, in his despatch No. 7, transmitted a letter from Dr. Mizzi, the legal adviser of Mr. Pitts, in which he solicited the intervention of Her Majesty's Embassy, by diplomatic or other means, to secure the execution of that part of the Judgment of the Judicial Committee "by which it is directed that possession of his property be restored to his client." That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe, however, that this statement of the effect of the Judgment was hardly accurate, as their Lordships distinctly stated that they could not absolutely direct a restoration of possession for the reasons explained at p. 18 of the Judgment (A), though they declared the rights of Mr. Pitts thereto as between him and the respondent in the appeal.

That, on receipt of Mr. Goschen's despatch No. 7, a correspondence took place between your Lordship's Office and Mr. Fawcett, who was then in this country on leave, to which Sir Julian was to direct our attention (see Foreign Office to

That, with reference to Mr. Fawcett's reply to the Foreign Office letter, Sir Julian was to state that, so far as your Lordship's Department had been able to ascertain, no steps whatever had been taken, up to the date of Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter to us, by Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople to assist Mr. Pitts in recovering possession of his property, or even to inform the Turkish authorities who carried out the order of that Court of the 13th June, 1878, by ejecting Mr. Pitts from the property, and putting M. Constantinides (a Greek subject) in possession, that the above order had been reversed on appeal. That copies of the letter from the Foreign Office to Mr. Fawcett, and of his reply, were transmitted to Mr. Goschen (see draft of the 8th April, 1881), with instructions to inform Dr. Mizzi that every assistance which could properly be given by Her Majesty's Embassy or Consulate to Mr. Pitts to obtain restitution of his land through the proper Turkish Court would be readily afforded him, and that his Excellency was further instructed to inquire why Mr. Pitts had taken no proceedings in the Turkish Courts to vindicate his rights in the manner indicated by the Judgment of the Judicial Committee. That on the 12th May Mr. Goschen, in reply to the above instruction, transmitted (despatch No. 29) a further communication from Dr. Mizzi, in which that gentleman argued at great length that the Judicial Committee, by their Judgment of the 19th May, 1880 (A), ordered the restoration of the property to Mr. Pitts, and that the British authorities were bound to carry out that order, by diplomatic or other means, independently of any questions in dispute between Mr. Pitts and M. Constantinides.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request us to take the accompanying papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the course indicated in your Lordship's despatch to Mr. Goschen No. 23 of the 8th April was proper under the circumstances, and, if not, as to what other course should followed, and as to the reply which should be returned to the application of Mr. P and his advocate, Dr. Mizzi.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approval of instructions to Mr. Goschen.

That the course indicated in your Lordship's despatch to Mr. Goschen No. 23 of the 8th April was proper in the circumstances.

It seems that since that despatch some further communication has passed between Mr. Goschen and Dr. Mizzi, Mr. Pitts' counsel (No. 29, Consular, of the 12th May), and that the effect of the Privy Council Judgment and Order in Council has not been correctly understood by Mr. Pitt's adviser.

Mr. Fawcett's illegal orders should be rescinded, and Turkish authorities urged to restore the property to Mr. Pitts.

It appears to us that the proper course now to be pursued is to direct Mr. Fawcett to take immediate steps to rescind the orders which the Judicial Committee have decided to have been wrongfully made.

That the Turkish authorities should be informed by Mr. Fawcett that the orders made by him were illegal, and have been rescinded by the highest Court of Appeal, and are of no effect, and that he should request the Turkish authorities, who, at his instance, acted upon the orders made by him, and dispossessed Mr. Pitts, to replace him in possession of the property.

And we think Her Majesty's Ambassador should urge the Turkish authorities to take that course.

Inform Mr. Pitts. If these steps prove ineffectual, Mr. Pitts should be assisted in gaining remedy through Turkish Courts.

Mr. Pitts should be informed that these steps are being taken.

In case they should prove ineffectual, he must seek a remedy through the Turkish Courts, and Her Majesty's Ambassador should render him, in so doing, all the assistance which he properly can.

We have, &c.

Pitts v. Lafontaine. Action against Mr. Fawcett.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th July last, stating that, with reference to his letter

No. 1 of the same date, relating to the suit of Pitts v. Lafontaine, he had the honour to submit to us, by your Lordship's direction, for our consideration and advice, the following application from Consul-General Fawcett, Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople:—

That Mr. Pitts, the plaintiff in the above suit, had commenced an action for damages against Mr. Fawcett in this country, founded on the allegations contained in the statement of claim, a copy of which was transmitted.

That, as regards the cause of action set out in paragraph 9, he was to refer us to Mr. Fawcett's letter of the 8th January, 1879, printed at p. 5 of the Memorandum which accompanied a reference to the Law Officers of the Crown of the 17th March, 1879; also to the Report of our predecessors thereon of the 18th April, 1879, vol. , p. 73, of which a copy was annexed, together with the Memorandum above referred to

That Mr. Fawcett, in his letter of the 4th April last, and in his Memorandum on the case inclosed in his letter of the 3rd July, asked for the support of Her Majesty's Government in defending the action; or, as your Lordship understood the application, Mr. Fawcett submitted that the action should be defended on his behalf by Her Majesty's Government and at the public expense.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under all the circumstances of the case, Mr. Fawcett's application should be acceded to.

That he was to transmit to us therewith the papers noted in the accompanying list,* in addition to those transmitted with his letter No. 1 of the same date.

That he (Sir Julian Pauncefote) was to add, in conclusion that, as it was believed that both Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Pitts had been in this country on several occasions, and at the same time, since the causes of action arose, the attention of Mr. Fawcett would be drawn to section 7 of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843, and section 8 of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1878, respecting the limitation of such actions, in case any defence should be available thereunder.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No reason to defend action for Mr. Fawcett.

That, in our opinion, there are no special circumstances in this case which should lead Her Majesty's Government to defend the action on behalf of Mr. Fawcett, or to support him in defending the action.

As to grant of relief to him on conclusion of case.

But we think that when the case is concluded it may be further considered whether any relief should be afforded to Mr. Fawcett.

Capture of Mr. Suter by brigands at Isvor.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, to submit the following case for our opinion and advice:—

That, in April last, a Mr. Suter, a British subject, residing at Isvor, in Macedonia, and engaged in mining operations, was captured by a band of brigands, notwithstanding that the village was guarded by Turkish troops, who had been provided by the Government in consequence of the disturbed state of the country.

That a sum of 15,000*l.* was demanded by the brigands for Mr. Suter's release, and Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople was instructed to inform the Turkish Government that they would be held responsible by Her Majesty's Government for Mr. Suter's safety, and for the payment of any ransom that might be necessary for his recovery.

That the Turkish Government, however, declined to admit their responsibility in the matter. That in the meantime, it was reported that his life might be endangered by further delay, and Her Majesty's Government accordingly undertook to advance the sum required for his release. That the correspondence which had passed upon the subject was inclosed,* and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to call our particular attention to the instructions addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople to his Excellency's conversations with the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, and to the notes from Assim Pasha to Mr. Goschen and to the Turkish Ambassador in this country, refusing to admit the responsibility of the Turkish Government. That it would be seen that the attack on Mr. Suter's house took place on the night of the 7th April by "three united bands of brigands, chiefly Greek." That full particulars of the attack were given in Mr. Blunt's despatch No. 45 of the 10th April.

Turkish Government deny their liability.

That the substance of the defence of the Turkish Government was contained in the telegram to Musurus Pasha of the 23rd April, the first paragraph of which admitted the general principle determining the liability of Governments in such cases. That they urged:—

1. That they had a sufficient force posted in the village to repel the banditti, and to ensure Mr. Suter's safety had he not imprudently chosen to stay at some distance outside the village.

2. That the forces would or might have prevented the capture of Mr. Suter had he not entreated them not to act against the banditti for fear of the danger to himself and his family.

3. That this outbreak of brigandage was connected with the agitation in Greece for war with Turkey, and was not of Turkish origin.

That the second and third allegations appeared to be supported by the statements in Mr Suter's letter to Mr. Blunt of the 10th April, and that the third was confirmed by Mr. Blunt in his telegram of the 8th April and his despatch No. 45 of the 10th April.

That, but the first allegation did not appear to be in accordance with the facts, as Mr. Suter's house was not at a distance from, but was in the village of Isvor, where the Turkish soldiers were quartered, and that the latter did nothing to frustrate the attack, until the brigands were virtually in possession of the house. (See Mr. Suter's letter of the 10th April.)

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose the despatches noted in the margin from Mr. Blunt,† and to which he was to invite our particular attention, as showing all the circumstances attendant on the incident in question, the condition of the country, the proceedings of Mr. Suter, and the action of the Turkish authorities prior to the attack.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to inclose a printed Foreign Office Memorandum containing an account of brigandage cases, and of the circumstances under which indemnities had been paid.‡

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government might properly insist on their demand for the repayment by the Porte of the ranson advanced for Mr. Suter's release.

That, if our reply should be in the affirmative, he was further to request that we would inform your Lordship whether the draft (which was inclosed) of a proposed instruction to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople on the subject met with our approval.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Difficulty in giving definite opinion.

That, under the peculiar circumstances submitted to us, we have difficulty in expressing a definite opinion for the guidance of your Lordship.

On the one hand, we fully recognize the desirability of not receding from the position which your Lordship has thought right to assume towards the Porte, and the evil precedent which will be created by the British Government consenting to pay ransoms which may be demanded by brigands in Turkey without having ultimate recourse to the Turkish Government, and these considerations certainly render it very desirable, as a matter of policy, to obtain from the Porte a recognition of the justice of the claim that has been made upon it.

We must, however, point out that the liability of the Turkish Government to make repayment must rest upon its having culpably permitted a state of brigandage to exist without having taken the necessary steps for the protection of the inhabitants of the disturbed district.

‡ Confidential No. 4471.

Doubtless, in this case unrestrained brigandage resulted in Mr. Suter's capture, and the military force in the neighbourhood did not prove effectual to prevent it.

But we think that due consideration should be given to the fact that the brigandage which existed seems not to have been of an ordinary character arising from the disturbed state of the country internally, for it appears to have been connected with the hostile feeling of the Greek population towards Turkey, which is shown by the hope displayed by the brigands that the ransom would be paid and loss borne by the Turkish Government.

It appears also that there was a sufficient force of soldiers in the neighbourhood of Mr. Suter's house to protect it against the ordinary attacks of brigands of the country, and whilst it may be contended that the military force should have been sufficient to have prevented the house being entered at all, yet Mr. Suter's own action interfered with the soldiers making any effort to prevent his being carried off from his house.

We lay, however, but little stress upon Mr. Suter's conduct in this respect, as he probably saved the lives of himself, wife, and child, by deprecating any attack by the soldiers on the brigands.

Claim for repayment of ransom should not be abandoned.

The above considerations would have caused us to hesitate before advising your Lordship in the first instance to prefer the claims that have been made on the Turkish Government; but, as we have pointed out, very grave evils may result from now falling back from the position that Mr. Goschen was directed to take up on behalf of the British Government, and as we think the arguments stated in the draft despatch can fairly be maintained, we do not feel justified in advising your Lordship to abandon the claim that has been preferred.

We have, &c.

Paolo Muscat convicted of murder.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 5th instant, stating, that with reference to sections 268 and 269 of the Levant Order in Council, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures which had been received from Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople, reporting the trial for murder and conviction of Paulo Muscat at Smyrna,* and that he was to request that, in favouring your Lordship with our opinion as to the punishment which should be imposed on that offender, we would at the same time report on Mr. Fawcett's recommendation, that the law of evidence should be altered, so that the depositions of persons, who had been proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been kept out of the way, should be admissible in evidence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Punishment to be awarded.

That we think this is a case in which the maximum punishment of twenty years' imprisonment with hard labour should be imposed.

No case made out for altering law of evidence with regard to depositions.

That we do not think any case is made out for exceptionally altering the law of evidence in Her Majesty's Courts in the Levant.

Moreover, it is obvious that it would be unjust to the prisoner to permit the depositions of persons kept out of the way to be used against him unless it were proved that they were kept by his act, which could rarely, if ever, be established.

Russian war indemnity. Russia claims Bulgarian tribute as guarantee.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us copy of a telegram from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,* reporting that the Russian Ambassador had laid claim to Bulgarian tribute as a guarantee for the war indemnity which was imposed on Turkey by the XIXth Article of the Treaty of San Stefano, a copy of which Treaty was inclosed.

That in the last paragraph but one of Article XIX, it was stipulated that the guarantee for the indemnity should be settled by an understanding between Russia and the Porte.

That the question of that indemnity formed the subject of discussion in the Congress of Berlin, as recorded in Protocol No. 11. That we should find the remarks and reserves made by the various Plenipotentiaries at pp. 162-165 of the inclosed Parliamentary Paper,† and that we should observe that Prince Gortchakow, the First Russian Plenipotentiary, gave an assurance (p. 162) that the guarantee referred to implied no territorial acquisition whatever, and would be settled between the two Governments en dehors of all such acquisition, and, further (p. 165), that the war indemnity should not affect the interests of the creditors of the Porte. That the Second Russian Plenipotentiary (Count Schouvaloff) made similar declarations, and stated that the situation of the loans guaranteed by Great Britain and France would remain the same as before the war.

In reply to Count Corti, the First Italian Plenipotentiary, his Excellency observed that the intention of Russia was to respect legal rights, that is to say, all prior hypothecations (p. 164). That the President, at the close of the discussion, observed that the rights of the Turkish bondholders having been upheld by Great Britain and France, the declaration of Russia relative to the priority of hypothecations appeared satisfactory (p. 165).

That by Article IX of the Treaty of Berlin, it was stipulated "that the amount of annual tribute which the Principality of Bulgaria shall pay to the suzerain Court—such amount being paid into whatever bank the Porte may designate—shall be fixed by an agreement between the Powers signatory of the present Treaty at the close of the first year of the working of the new organization.

"This tribute shall be calculated on the mean revenue of the territory of the Principality.

"As Bulgaria is to bear a portion of the Public Debt of the Empire, when the Powers fix the tribute, they shall take into consideration what portion of that debt can, on the basis of a fair proportion, be assigned to the Principality."

That owing to the delay of the Porte in giving its formal sanction to the final acts of the International Boundary Commission, which drew the line at the Bulgarian frontier, as laid down in the IInd and XLVIth Articles of the Treaty, the formal recognition of the boundaries of the Principality was not complete till quite recently, and that it was only on the 31st August last that Her Majesty's Government was in a position to authorize Lord Dufferin to join with the Representatives of the other Great Powers at the Porte in the consideration of the subject of the financial obligations of Bulgaria with regard to tribute and the Ottoman Debt.

That no charge or lien on the Ottoman revenues was created by the Treaty of San Stefano as a guarantee for the payment of the war indemnity. That the Russian Government stated that they admitted the prior claims of the Turkish bondholders to the securities which were already pledged to them, but that they contended that Russia had taken a position in order of date among the creditors of Turkey, and that they could not recognize the right of the Porte to hypothecate revenues which did not exist or were not pledged at the date of the Treaty of Berlin, so long as there had been no arrangement as to the securities to be given for the payment of the war indemnity.

‡ "Turkey No. 44 (1878)," Treaty, No. 623.

That it would appear therefore that the Russian Government did not consider that the charge created on the entire revenues of Turkey, from whatever source they might be derived, in favour of certain bondholders, as expressly stated on the back of the bonds themselves, and in favour of Great Britain and France, under the Convention* relative to the Turkish Loan of 1855 attached to the Bulgarian tribute, because such tribute did not exist, and formed no part of the Ottoman revenues, at the time when such charge was created.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the validity of the preferential claim put forward by Russia to the Bulgarian tribute.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Lord Tenterden of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state that our Report on the reference that was made to us by your Lordship's direction on the 14th instant as to the validity of the preferential claim of Russia to the Bulgarian tribute might, your Lordship presumed, be framed on the hypothesis that the bonds of certain Turkish loans, anterior to the date of the Treaty of San Stefano, constituted a charge on the whole revenues of Turkey, for such appeared to be the case with regard to the Loan of 1858, as shown by the Firman of the 26th November of that year, and by the Firman respecting the Loan of 1862, as well as from the terms of the bond for that loan.

That copies of the Firmans and bond would be found at the pages marked in the accompanying volume.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No ground for preferential claim put forward by Russia.

That we are of opinion that there is no ground for the preferential claim put forward by Russia to the Bulgarian tribute, and that such claim cannot be maintained.

When the creditors of Turkey lent money to that country, they did so on the security of its general revenue, and even, in the absence of express words, such an hypothecation would include the then present and future revenues. We have not before us the terms of hypothecation of revenue in respect of all the loans, but the security given for that of 1862 was the "whole of the revenues of the Exchequer of my Imperial Government, present and future."

It is also to be observed that the Bulgarian tribute must be regarded as being received by the Turkish Government in substitution of the revenue received from Bulgaria at the time the loans were contracted, and therefore it cannot be said that this payment of tribute is a new source of revenue, although, even if it were, Russia would have no right to claim it.

Russia has no right to the Bulgarian tribute, as it is not a new source of revenue.

We therefore think that Russia has no greater claim to appropriate the Bulgarian tribute than any other portion of the revenue of Turkey.

Beyond these considerations, the express declarations of the Russian Representatives at the Congress of Berlin form a complete answer to the claim now made. Consent was given at the Congress to that portion of the Treaty of San Stefano which made Turkey liable to a money indemnity of 300,000,000 roubles, only after statements by Count Schouvaloff "that Russia proposed to respect every anterior hypothecation," and by Prince Gortchacow, "that the indemnity of war will not affect the interests of the creditors of the Porte."

Both of which pledges would be broken if the claim now preferred by Russia be maintained.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received November 19.)

Temple, November 18, 1881.

My Lord,

Navigation of Tigris and Euphrates.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Charles Dilke's letter of the 17th September last, stating that he had to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers,* noted in the margin of his letter, respecting the navigation of the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates by British vessels.

That the first question which arose had reference to a claim put forward by the Euphrates and Tigris Steam Navigation Company to tow barges on those rivers as a matter of right, a proceeding which had from time to time met with opposition on the part of the local authorities at Bagdad.

That the second question was of a more general character, and had reference to the right of foreign vessels to navigate those rivers, alleged to have been conceded in 1846, in pursuance of an arrangement entered into between Sir S. Canning and the Porte, which resulted in a Vizierial letter addressed to the Pasha of Bagdad, instructing him to carry out the same.

That document No. 1 transmitted therewith contained a full exposition of the question and a résumé of the correspondence on the subject.

That document No. 2 contained a Memorandum on the question by Mr. Plowden, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad.

That document No. 3 contained a copy of a despatch from your Lordship to Mr. Goschen No. 44 of the 16th May, 1881, instructing his Excellency to remind the Porte of the arrangement entered into in 1846 with Sir S. Canning, and copies of a correspondence between Mr. Plowden and the Governor-General of Bagdad.

That document No. 4 contained copies of the Firmans and Vizierial letters referred to in the other inclosures.

That among the papers transmitted therewith we would find (Nos. 6 and 7) Mr. St. John's despatch No. 44 of the 29th December, 1880, and the letter of the Company to the Foreign Office of the 20th May, 1880, referred to in your Lordship's despatch to Mr. Goschen (Inclosure No. 3, p. 1), and (No. 5) a recent despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 68 of the 25th July last), in which Lord Dufferin held out some hope that those questions might be satisfactorily adjusted. That a copy of the capitulations and of the British Treaty of 1861, referred to in Mr. Plowden's Memorandum (document No. 2), was likewise transmitted therewith.

Questions as to—
1st. Rights of navigation by British vessels under arrangement of 1846.
2nd. Right of the Tigris and Euphrates Steam Navigation Company to tow barges.

That Sir Charles Dilke was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion—Firstly, as to how far the general right to navigate the Euphrates and Tigris could be claimed for British vessels under the arrangement of 1846; secondly, whether the right claimed by the Euphrates and Tigris Steam Navigation Company to tow barges on those rivers could properly be maintained.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Review of evidence as to first question.

That the evidence of the arrangement made by Sir Stratford Canning in 1846, and of the nature of the rights which it confers, consists almost exclusively of his despatch of the 18th March, 1846, in which he informs Her Majesty's Government that the arrangement has been arrived at. The only document under the hand of any Representative of the Turkish Government on which reliance can be placed as affording against them evidence of the arrangement is, so far as we are aware, the despatch of Réouf Pasha to the Governor of Bagdad of the 2nd April, 1846. That despatch appears to be chiefly concerned with questions of Tariff, and of the duties to be levied on foreign as compared with Turkish vessels. It is not an announcement of an arrangement conceding to British vessels the right to navigate the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates under their own flag, though it certainly by inference seems to recognize the fact that vessels under the English flag have been navigating, and will continue to navigate, those rivers for the purpose of internal commerce. And if, subsequent to that despatch, British commercial steamers, in continuance of prior usage, had navigated the rivers with no warrant beyond what is contained in it, and without objection by the Turkish authorities, these facts, coupled with the despatch of Réouf Pasha, would afford cogent evidence against the Turkish authorities, that an arrangement rendering this course legitimate had been entered into.

It appears, however, that no British steamer was placed upon either the Tigris or Euphrates prior to the year 1862 except the two vessels which had been navigating them before 1846, under the authority of the Firman of the 29th December, 1834.

It is necessary, therefore, carefully to examine the circumstances which intervene between the date of the arrangement in question and the year 1862.

It appears that in 1859 Messrs. Lynch and Co., having in view the establishing a line of steamers on the Tigris and Euphrates, entered into communication with Sir H. Bulwer, at that time Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople. Sir H. Bulwer (whether from having overlooked the Agreement of 1846, or from some other cause, does not appear) expressed the view that Messrs. Lynch could not, without further authority from the Turkish Government, claim the right permanently to navigate the river with steamers carrying the British flag. But the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs informed Sir H. Bulwer, in answer to his inquiries, that if Messrs. Lynch were to apply to the Porte for a Firman of Concession to establish a line of steamers to run between Bagdad and Busrah, the Porte would, he thought, not be averse to an arrangement of that nature. Upon this Messrs. Lynch submitted to Sir H. Bulwer an application for a Firman, "granting them the requisite sanction to navigate the rivers of the country with British registered steam-vessels." No answer was received to this application until 1861. In January of that year Sir H. Bulwer transmitted a Vizierial letter to the Pasha of Bagdad. The terms of that document are important. It begins by reciting that the British Embassy had made communications for the purpose of obtaining a renewal of the orders sent concerning "the British steamers and boats authorized by His Majesty to ply on the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates;" it then recites the Firman of 1834 and the Report of 1846 with reference to the duties to be levied on British vessels, and the despatch of Réouf Pasha of the 2nd April, 1846, founded upon it; and it concludes by instructing the Pasha "to act according to these rules." It is to be observed that this despatch treats as in full force the Firman of 1834, authorizing the British Government to station two steamers on the River Euphrates at Bagdad, and to run them by turns for the purpose of facilitating trade, and that the part of the despatch which is more general in its terms, and has reference to the Vizierial letter of 1846, deals with the financial question only.

This seems hardly consistent with the idea that the arrangement announced by Sir Stratford Canning was treated as being then in force, and having the effect to be gathered from his despatch; for that arrangement, which permitted British merchant-steamers, without limit of number to ply on the rivers, would override the extremely limited authority given by the Firman of 1834. And the various applications made by Sir H. Bulwer to the Porte, resulting in his receiving from them the Vizierial instructions of January 1861, were wholly unnecessary, if such an arrangement, as was communicated to Her Majesty's Government in 1846, was still in force.

In 1862 Messrs. Lynch and Co. placed their first steamer on the rivers. Their second followed in the year 1864, and as early as that date the Turkish authorities distinctly asserted that, under existing Firmans, only two British steamers were permitted to navigate the Tigris. From that time to the present the Government of Turkey has persistently adhered to that position. The use of more than two steamers has, during all this period, been only exceptional, and has never been permitted without remonstrance and the assertion that it could not be claimed as a right. These remonstrances appear to have been acquiesced in from time to time, and notably in the Memorandum of the English Embassy (if it be correctly quoted by Aali Pasha) in 1864. And the British Ambassador has on various occasions sought permission for acts, the title to do which would have been clear under the reported arrangement of 1846.

1. Rights of navigation under arrangement of 1846 cannot now be claimed.

Considering, therefore, the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence of that arrangement so far as Turkish documents are concerned, and that the authority alleged to have been given appears not to have been acted upon, that for nearly twenty years the Turkish Government have practically denied its existence, and that Her Majesty's Representatives at the Porte, so far from insisting that it existed and relying upon it, have sought permission which would have been needless if it were in force, we think the general right to navigate the Tigris and Euphrates cannot now be claimed by British vessels under the arrangement of 1846.

2. The authority granted to Company to navigate the rivers would include towage of barges.

As regards the second question submitted to us, we think the Company are entitled to employ steamers having authority to ply upon the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates for all commercial purposes for which such vessels are ordinarily employed, and we think this would probably include the towing of barges laden with merchandize.

The permission under the Firman of 1834 liable to revocation.

But we would observe that, if the only authority for British steamers to run on these rivers is derived from the Firman of 1834, as appears to have been insisted upon on the one hand, and acquiesced in on the other, it may be expedient to remember, in pressing the matter upon the Turkish Government, that the Firman of 1834 is, as was pointed out by Sir H. Bulwer, a permission open to revocation by the Turkish Government.

Dr. Deane agrees in answer to first question, but of opinion that Firman of 1834 does not concede right to tow barges.

I agree with the Attorney and Solicitor General in the answer to the first question. With respect to the second question, I regret to differ.

I think the permission given to a limited number of steamers to navigate the rivers does not include the leave to tow barges laden with merchandize.

At the time of the Firman in 1834 towing was not, I consider, in the view of the Turkish Government. No extension of the leave given in the Firman has since been conceded.

The towing of barges would obviously, to a very great extent, add to the carrying power of the steamers, and such use of the steamers, in my opinion, is not within the intention, and certainly not within the letter, of the permission given by the Turkish Government.

I am therefore of opinion that the right claimed by the Euphrates and Tigris Steam Navigation Company to barges on those rivers cannot properly be maintained.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received November 23.)

My Lord,
Temple, November 22, 1881.

Mr. A. O. Arsenian.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of our predecessors of the 8th April, 1880, and our Report of the 9th June, 1880, respecting the case of Mr. A. O. Arsenian, he had the honour to transmit therewith, by direction of your Lordship, a letter which had been received from Mr. Pears, the legal adviser of Mr. Arsenian, calling for a reconsideration of the decision at which Her Majesty's Government had arrived in that matter; also a copy of the answer which your Lordship caused to be returned to that gentleman, to the effect that your Lordship did not consider a further reference to the Law Officers of the Crown was necessary.[*]

That Lord Tenterden was also to inclose a Memorial signed by Messrs. Cunliffe, Brookes, and Co., and other merchants of Manchester, respecting certain goods which they represented had been consigned by them to Mr. Arsenian on credit, and had been sold by order of the Persian Ambassador, together with the reply which was returned thereto.

That your Lordship had received a further despatch which Lord Tenterden was likewise to inclose from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, forwarding copies of two letters he had received from Mr. Arsenian, setting forth the grounds on which he considered the decision of the Law Officers with regard to his nationality to be erroneous, and asking that an officer from Her Majesty's Embassy or Consulate might attend at the Court of the Persian Ambassador when the case should come before his Excellency on appeal from the Consular Court.

[*] List of Papers:—Law Office, April 8; ditto, June 9; Sir H. Layard, No. 500, May 11; Mr. Pears, November 23; to Mr. Pears, December 13, 1880; Manchester Petition, received August 2; Reply to ditto, August 16; Lord Dufferin, No. 902, October 11, 1881.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether they contained anything to affect the conclusions already arrived at by ourselves and by our predecessors in regard to the case.

That Lord Tenterden had the honour to inclose the two previous Reports of the late Law Officers and ourselves above referred to; also Sir H. Layard, No. 500, of the 11th May, 1880, containing the Convention between Turkey and Persia (Inclosure 12), and Wheaton's International Law, edition 1866, containing (at p. 146, notes to section 86) the precedents referred to in the letters of Mr. Arsenian and his legal adviser, Mr. Pears.

That Mr. Arsenian obtained British naturalization in 1868 under the Act 7 and 8 Vict., cap. 66, and again in 1877 under the Act of 1870.

We are also honoured with a letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 10th instant, stating that he forwarded therewith Lord Dufferin's despatch No. 902 in regard to Arsenian, which was accidentally omitted in the previous papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Not exempt from Persian Consular jurisdiction.

That we see no reason to modify the opinion we have expressed, that Mr. Arsenian is not exempt from the jurisdiction of the Persian Consular Court at Constantinople in a civil suit.

Her Majesty's Ambassador might afford his good offices.

But that as Mr. Arsenian is a naturalized British subject, and as the goods, the title to which is in question, are the produce of his trading in this country, and he is liable in respect of them to English creditors, we would suggest that Her Majesty's Ambassador should afford his good offices to Mr. Arsenian, and should comply with his request, if it can be done without diplomatic impropriety.

My Lord,

Russian war indemnity

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 19th November last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 24th October, he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a telegram[*] from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople relative to the preferential claim raised by Russia to certain Turkish revenues, as a guarantee for the war indemnity; he was also to inclose copy of a previous telegram[†] from Lord Dufferin bearing on the question; and he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereon, especially as regarded the argument of the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, that the term "hypothecation," as used by Count Schouvaloff at the Congress of Berlin, had reference only to "special hypothecations," and that Russia could not recognize hypothecations of the whole of the Turkish revenues en bloc, as nothing would then be left to satisfy the claims of Russia.

That the papers which accompanied the last reference to us on the subject were sent therewith, together with a copy of our Report thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Russian preferential claim to Bulgarian tribute or other sources of revenue not well grounded.

That we have carefully considered the words used by Count Schouvaloff (p. 164) and of Prince Gortchacow (p. 165) in the Blue Book, "Turkey No. 39 (1878);" and, in our opinion, they amount to an admission that the war indemnity is not to affect the rights of the then creditors of the Porte.

In our former Report we expressed our opinion that the Bulgarian tribute must be regarded as being received by the Turkish Government in substitution for the revenue received by that Government from Bulgaria at the time the loans were contracted, and that the tribute was not a new source of revenue; and we are still of that opinion.

We beg to submit, for your Lordship's consideration, that, in whatever sense Count Schouvaloff at the Congress may have intended to use the particular word

"hypothecation," the context in which the words are found, and the discussion on the subject of the position of the creditors of the Porte, show clearly that the prior and existing rights of those creditors, including those who are not secured by the hypothecation of any special revenues, were not to be postponed to the payment of the war indemnity.

Temple, December 13, 1881.

My Lord,

Russian war indemnity. Claims to Bulgarian tribute or other revenues.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he had the honour to submit, by your Lordship's direction, a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh,* inclosing copy of a note from M. de Giers, stating the arguments upon which the Russian Government based their preferential claim, either to the Bulgarian tribute or to other revenues of Turkey, as a guarantee for the war indemnity; and that he was to request that we would take that note into our consideration with reference to his letter of the 19th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Grounds for Russian claims.

That M. de Giers, in his despatch of the $\frac{14}{26}$th November, 1881, bases his argument on three propositions:—

1. That the Plenipotentiaries of Russia at the Berlin Congress, in recognizing the right of priority of the European creditors of Turkey in respect of all anterior hypothecations, referred only to the case of hypothecations of some specific revenue, and not to that of general hypothecations of the revenues of the Empire.

2. That Russia is entitled to the same right over all revenues not the subject of such anterior specific hypothecation as is possessed in respect of revenues specifically hypothecated by those who enjoy the benefit of such hypothecations.

3. That the Bulgarian tribute falls within the category of revenues not specifically hypothecated, and that Russia has, therefore, this right over it.

Contrary to Russian declarations made at Congress of Berlin.

The second of these propositions appears to be in direct conflict with the express declarations of Prince Gortchacow, to be found in Protocol 11 of the 12th July, 1878 (p. 164).†

Lord Salisbury having declared, in the name of his Government, that he could not admit that Russia, a creditor in virtue of the Treaty of San Stefano, could take a rank preferential to that of any of the creditors of Turkey whose claims bore a date anterior to the war, Prince Gortchacow replied "that he only meant to speak of an analogous situation."

We are not prepared to admit the first proposition contended for by M. de Giers; but it is unnecessary at present further to discuss this or the third proposition. The declaration at the Congress of Berlin, to which we have called attention, seems to us to dispose of the arguments upon which the Russian Government base their preferential claim.

My Lord,

Turkish claim to 8 per cent. duty on goods shipped by Mr. Colokorino at Candia for Odessa, but disembarked at Varna.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to submit to us, by your Lordship's direction, papers‡ relating to the claim of the Turkish Customs authorities

* Sir E. Thornton, No. 562.

to levy a duty of 8 per cent. upon merchandize exported by Mr. Colokorino, the British Vice-Consul at Candia, from that port to the port of Varna in Bulgaria.

That an export duty of 8 per cent. was properly chargeable on goods shipped from one Turkish port to another, or, as it was termed, "on goods for the interior;" but than an export duty of 1 per cent. only was chargeable on exports to foreign countries.

That that duty of 1 per cent. had been duly paid, as the merchandize was shipped ostensibly for Odessa, but that its destination was changed, and it was disembarked at Varna.

Varna claimed as a non-Turkish port.

That the question therefore arose whother the port of Varna, in the Principality of Bulgaria, was to be considered for Customs purposes, as forming part of Ottoman territory, as maintained by the Turkish authorities in their note of the 15th September (Inclosure 1 in No. 864), or as the port of a foreign country, according to the claim of Mr. Colokorino, and of the Bulgarian Agent at Constantinople in his note to Lord Dufferin of the 3rd October (Inclosure 3 in No. 864).

That by Article I of the Treaty of Berlin, Bulgaria was constituted an autonomous and tributary Principality, under the suzerainty of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan.

That by Article VIII it was declared that the Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between the Porte and foreign Powers were to remain in force in the Principality until modified, as regarded any Power, by mutual consent.

That it would be seen from Lord Dufferin's despatch No. 910 of the 10th October (Inclosure 3), that according to the practice in force before the date of the Treaty of Berlin, merchandize shipped from Candia to Varna, or vice versâ, would be charged with the export duty of 8 per cent., the shipper receiving a "teskére" or certificate of the payment of such duty, which would clear the goods at the port of destination. But that since the customs duties in Bulgaria had been collected solely for the benefit of the Bulgarian Exchequer, the Customs authorities at Bulgarian ports had ceased to acknowledge the above-mentioned certificate of the Turkish Customs, and vice versâ. That it followed, therefore, that the shipper of goods from Candia to Varna, who had paid the export duty of 8 per cent. "for the interior," found that his goods on arrival at Varna, instead of being cleared on the mere production of the Turkish certificate, were charged by the Varna Customs with the usual import duty of 8 per cent. That the shipper of goods from Varna to Candia experienced the same treatment, and thus paid 16 per cent. instead of 8 per cent., a result entirely at variance with the provisions of Article VIII of the Treaty of Berlin.

That Lord Tenterden was to call our attention to the instruction issued by the Turkish Government to their Customs officials in December 1879 (Inclosure 2 in No. 910), according to which, and in apparent opposition to, their present contention, foreign goods arriving at Constantinople for transmission by sea to Bulgaria were to be treated as goods intended for a foreign country, and charged a duty of only 1 per cent. accordingly.

That Lord Tenterden was to inclose a copy of the Treaty of Berlin, and a Memorandum referring to the Articles of the Commercial Treaty between this country and Turkey which bore upon the question; also to the articles of the Treaty of Berlin which regulated the position of Bulgaria, and to the Treaty arrangements which were made with regard to the payment of duty on goods imported into, or exported from, Moldavia, Wallachia, and Servia, before those Principalities obtained their independence, and were tributary Principalities forming part of the Ottoman dominions.

That it appeared to your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government and the other foreign Powers were entitled to demand that arrangements be made between the Porte and Bulgaria, which would relieve foreign shippers of goods between Bulgarian ports and Turkish ports from the payment of any other or higher duties than were chargeable at the date of the Treaty of Berlin, in conformity with Article VIII of that Treaty, and that pending the adjustment of that question, Mr. Colokorino should be supported in his refusal to pay the additional 7 per cent. duty claimed of him by the Customs authorities of Candia.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on this question, and on the course which should be pursued under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The fiscal independence of Bulgaria controlled by previous Treaties with Turkey.

That there can be no doubt that, in a sense, the port of Varna is still a part of the Ottoman dominions. But it is equally clear that Bulgaria is made, for fiscal purposes, independent of the Porte, and may make her own Treaties with foreign Powers with reference to import and export duties. Until any such Treaty is concluded, however, all existing Treaties with the Porte are, by the Treaty of Berlin, to remain in force in Bulgaria as completely as if it were still, in all respects, a part of the Ottoman Empire.

The effect of this, we take to be, that no British subject, for example, is to be liable to any greater duties on exporting from, or importing into, Bulgaria than he would have been prior to the Treaty of Berlin.

But we do not gather very clearly, from the information before us, what provisions in the existing Treaty of Commerce between this country and the Porte govern the duties to be paid by British subjects in the case of goods exported by them from a Turkish port to another part of the Ottoman dominions.

The only Article of the Treaty which appears, in terms, to deal with the export of goods purchased in Turkey by British subjects is Article IV; but Sir E. Hertslet states, in his Memorandum, that the provision in that Article for the gradual reduction of the duty from 8 per cent. to 1 per cent., "has reference only to goods exported from the Turkish dominions to British ports, and not to goods exported from one Turkish port to another."

If this be so, it is not easy to see how the earlier part of the Article, which provides for the 8 per cent. export duty, could be held to have a wider application.

Relief from payment of such duties should be demanded.

Assuming, however, that by virtue of our Commercial Treaty there was a right to insist on the continuance of the practice which prevailed prior to the Treaty of Berlin, viz., that the payment of an export duty of 8 per cent. at a Turkish port should clear the goods on their arrival at any other Turkish port, we think that the same right exists in the case of the export of goods from a Turkish to a Bulgarian port, and vice versâ. And in that case we think Her Majesty's Government and the other foreign Powers having like Treaty rights are entitled to demand that arrangements should be made between the Porte and Bulgaria, which would relieve foreign shippers of goods between Bulgarian and Turkish ports from the payment of any other or higher duties than were chargeable at the date of the Treaty of Berlin, in conformity with Article VIII of that Treaty, and that, pending the adjustment of this question, Mr. Colokorino should be supported in his refusal to pay the 7 per cent. duty claimed of him by the Customs authorities of Candia.

Mr. Colokorino should be supported in his refusal to pay the duty claimed.

My Lord,

Russian war indemnity. Russian pro-memoriâ.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us a pro-memoriâ[*] communicated to your Lordship by the Russian Ambassador, stating the views of the Russian Government with regard to their claim on the Bulgarian tribute as security for the payment of the Russian war indemnity, and the position in which Russia stood as regards the other creditors of the Porte, as set forth in the 11th Protocol of the Congress of Berlin.

That Lord Tenterden was directed by your Lordship to request that we would have the goodness to inform you, at our earliest convenience, whether the arguments contained in Prince Lobanow's pro-memoriâ in any way altered the opinion given by us in our Report on that subject of the 13th instant, which was returned therewith with the previous papers.

That, as we were aware, the question of the fixing of the Bulgarian tribute payable to the Porte, and of the proportion of Ottoman debt to be borne by the Principality, formed the subject of the IXth Article of the Treaty of Berlin,[†] and the discussions[‡] thereon in Congress were contained in the 7th Protocol, pp. 83-85, of the accompanying papers, and at pp. 162, 164, 165, Protocol 11, were recorded the proceedings and declarations with regard to the Russian war indemnity.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Lord Tenterden, stating that the Russian Ambassador desired the following paragraph to be added between the last paragraph and the last but one of the pro-memoriâ:—

"Ce droit est pourtant clairement déterminé par le Traité de Constantinople conclu entre la Russie et la Turquie en 1879 postérieurement au Traité de Berlin."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the arguments contained in Prince Lobanow's pro-memoriâ in no way alter the opinion given by us in our Report of the 13th instant.

Russian claim for specific revenues as security is excluded; but question as to postponement of payment of indemnity to that o other creditors admits of rgument.

We would desire to point out, however, that the claim by Russia to have assigned to her as security for the war indemnity specific revenues belonging to the Turkish Government is quite distinct from the question (which is also dealt with in the pro-memoriâ), whether the payment of this indemnity is to be postponed to the payment of prior creditors, who had only a general hypothecation of the whole of the Turkish revenues. The former claim appears, as we have pointed out, to be excluded, in express terms, by the Protocols of the Berlin Conference. The position that Russia is not to be postponed to creditors having no specific hypothecation, but may rank pari passu with them, is open to more argument. We have already drawn attention to the fact, that from the language used by the Plenipotentiaries at Berlin, taken as a whole, the fair conclusion appears to be that it was agreed that the prior creditors were not to be prejudiced by Russia's claim to the war indemnity. But the Russian view on this point may be supported by some plausible arguments, and we would suggest that in any discussion of the question this distinction should be borne in mind.

My Lord,

Export of copper coins from Bagdad.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th instant, stating that, by direction of your Lordship, he had the honour to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople,[*] from which we should perceive that Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad had been requested by the Vali of that city to prevent the exportation in Messrs. Lynch and Co.'s steamers of the small copper currency, on the ground of the inconvenience thereby caused to the native community.

That Sir J. Pauncefote also inclosed a Memorandum, drawn up in the Foreign Office,[†] on the provisions of the Treaties between the various foreign Powers and the Porte which bore upon the matter.

That it appeared to your Lordship to be doubtful whether the copper or other current coin of Turkey could properly be deemed a "manufacture" within the meaning of Article II of the Treaty of 1861 between Great Britain and the Porte.[‡]

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request us to take the papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Lord Dufferin's inquiry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Copper coinage not a manufacture.

That, in our opinion, the copper coinage of the country is not a "manufacture" within the meaning of Article II of the Treaty of 1861.

Article II of Treaty of 1861 does not apply to currency.

That Article cannot, we think, have been intended to apply to the currency of the respective countries.

The right of regulating the currency is in this country amongst the prerogatives of the Crown. It is conceivable that it might be deemed expedient in Turkey, as well as in this country, for reasons of State, to prohibit the exportation of some species of currency, and we do not think that such an Article in a Commercial Treaty as that in question could properly be construed as involving an abandonment of the right to do so.

United States.

No. 103.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor on British Claims on United States since April 9, 1865.

British claims on United States. Those comprehended within the Treaty of Washington, whether made at the time of the award or not, cannot now be preferred.

I THINK it clear that the XIIth Article of the Treaty of Washington, and the award made under it, must be taken as conclusive, not only against all claims which were made under it and disallowed, but also against all claims comprehended within it, according to its true and proper construction, whether made or not, and (if made) whether wholly or partly withdrawn, or not judged by the claimants upon any erroneous view of the construction and effect of the Article (see Article XVII).

2. In my opinion, "claims arising out of acts committed during the period between the 13th April, 1861, and the 9th April, 1865," included all claims for the continuance, prolongation, or other consequences after the 9th April, 1865, of acts committed before that date. And it is distinctly stated in Mr. Howard's Memorandum that one claim by a person named Hoskins was expressly allowed (as to some time later than the 9th April, 1865) upon this principle. I cannot, therefore, think it advisable for Her Majesty's Government to propose to the United States that an opportunity should now be given for the revival of any claims of this nature which ought to have been presented and adjudicated upon by the Commissioners under Article XII of the Treaty of Washington.

The other claims, wholly subsequent to the 9th April, 1865, have now been practically waived, and cannot be brought forward.

3. As to claims wholly subsequent (i.e, subsequent in their origin as well as in their continuance), it is important to observe that the Treaty of Washington was negotiated in 1871, and bears date the 8th May in that year. All the unsettled claims mentioned in the list which accompanies Mr. Howard's Memorandum appear to be of a much earlier date, ranging between April 1865 and the early part of 1866. They do not appear (if arising out of acts committed after the 9th April, 1865, and having had no earlier commencement) to be, like those provided for by Article XII, expressly barred by Article XVII of the Treaty; but I think that, if they were now brought forward and pressed as claims requiring settlement upon the Government of the United States, it would be for Her Majesty's Government to explain why they were not brought forward and treated in the same manner in 1871. All but four of them appear, from Mr. Howard's list, to have been notified by the claimants to the British Embassy at Washington long before that time. The four exceptions are: No. 70 (notified 11*th February*, 1871), No. 64 (notified 12*th April*, 1871), No. 74 (notified 6*th December*, 1873), and No. 26 (notified 11*th March*, 1879). Of these, the first seems to have been submitted to, and disallowed by, the Mixed Commission. The second is of very trifling amount, and was known before the signature of the Treaty. As to the two others, no reason is given why they were not sooner brought forward by the claimants, and No. 26 is evidently a claim of a very doubtful character. I do not know whether, when the 9th April, 1865, was fixed as the limit of time under Article XII, anything passed which could be referred to in favour of or against any proposition which Her Majesty's Government might now make for the recognition and settlement of claims of later date which were known at the time of the Treaty, but, if nothing did pass which would be favourable to the entertainment at the present time of such a proposition, and if no such claims have been (in fact) pressed by Her Majesty's Government upon the Government of the United States during the interval between the Treaty and the present time, it seems to me that any such claims would now be brought forward under a very great disadvantage, and with no prospect of success, unless the United States had some object to gain by the reciprocal investigation of other claims on their part against this country. The circumstance that the French have lately concluded such a Convention as that of the 15th January, 1880, with the United States, seems to me to be no reason why Her Majesty's Government should now press, or why the United States should now entertain, claims which have been practically waived, and suffered to go to sleep for fourteen years (if the time is reckoned from the date at which they originated), and for nearly ten years (if the time is reckoned from the date of the Treaty).

4. Besides the objection from laches, and from the deliberate adoption (for whatever reason) of the 9th April, 1865, as the limit of claims under Article XII of the Treaty, there is also to be considered the difficulty (on our part) of proposing or agreeing to any settlement of later claims, which should exclude, and (on the part of the United States) of entertaining or agreeing to any proposal for such a settlement which should include, the claims arising out of the Fenian raids upon Canada. If the 9th April, 1865, was a date deliberately fixed in order that those claims should be excluded from the XIIth Article, I think the United States will be fairly entitled to hold us now to the consequences of our bargain, not in that only, but in other respects.

Further Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor as to British Claims on the United States.

British claims on United States. The further papers do not diminish objections to revival of.

I CANNOT perceive that there is anything in the papers now sent to diminish the force of the objections suggested in my former Memorandum to the proposal to take up now, and press upon the United States' Government, the claims noted in Mr. Howard's list, or any of them.

The dates in Article XII of the Treaty of Washington appear to have been deliberately adopted, in preference to a wider and more general form of expression on the propositions of the British Commissioners. The reasons now suggested do not diminish the force of this fact. It is plain, from Sir E. Thornton's letter at p. 33 of the correspondence (C), that the question was, how to formulate a reference of "all other claims, . . . . arising out of acts committed during the recent civil war." Of all the claims now in question (except two, which need not be dwelt upon), Her Majesty's Government had notice, when the British Commissioners fixed the date, by which they were (as I assume) excluded.

The diplomacy of the United States is habitually and characteristically forensic, not to say litigious. As between private persons in a Court of Equity, an attempt (after ten years) to bring forward, as a new category of claims requiring settlement, some which, at the time when a previous general settlement was taking place, were already known, and were deliberately kept out of it, would not be regarded with any favour; and I cannot doubt how such a proposition, as between this country and the United States, would be received by a lawyer like Mr. Evarts, unless the United States had some object of their own to be answered by entertaining it, which is hardly probable.

I confess that, to my mind, it has no merits.

As for the other claims, which really were within Articles XII and XVII of the Treaty of Washington, it is beyond controversy that they are absolutely barred, and that to attempt to revive them would be against the faith of the Treaty.

British Claims on United States.

Lord Chancellor,

I SEND you some papers bearing on the remarks in your Memorandum.

(A.) Memorandum showing the opinion of the Law Officers in 1866 as to claims for damage to property and course claimants should be advised to pursue.

(B.) Memorandum showing why dates were adopted to avoid use of "rebellion" or "civil war." I may add that, as will be seen from (C), p. 163, the objection came from the British Commissioners from fear that "rebellion," as originally drafted, might damage controversy as to belligerent rights.

(C.) Reports from the Commissioners as to this Treaty Article and waiver of Fenian raid claims.

(D.) List of shipping cases prepared at Washington in 1869. This shows that only two cases (and these doubtful) arose after the 9th April, 1865.

Fortune Bay Fishery question. Approving offer of sum of money in settlement.

THE course which commends itself to Lord Granville, of offering "a moderate and reasonable sum," without any joint inquiry, and without going into the particular items of the claim made by the United States' Government, would certainly not involve any prejudice to the Treaty rights of this country, if those rights were (as is proposed) expressly reserved; and I should think it a very good course to take, if it is likely to be accepted, and assuming no great importance to be attached to the question, whether what may be so paid can or cannot afterwards be recovered from the Newfoundland Treasury.

But I am far from sanguine as to the chance of an agreement on this footing. The tone of Mr. Evarts' despatch of the 4th February* seems to me very unpromising. It is full of the spirit which (I regret to say) seems to me to be characteristic of American diplomacy when international claims (especially money claims) are in question. There is never any "give and take" with them. Whatever is conceded is accepted, and everything beyond is then pressed more tenaciously (if possible) than before. It is inconceivable to me that the writer of that despatch should accept in this case, as sufficient, any amount which we could possibly offer as "moderate and reasonable."

I see no reason to modify any part of the opinions which I expressed in my two Memoranda of the 21st July and 7th October, 1880.

"Strand fishing" excluded by Articles XVIII and XXXII of Treaty of Washington; therefore, United States' fishermen, when engaged in it, are subject to local law.

With respect to the "strand fishing" in particular, the terms of the Convention of 1818, and of the Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington (quoted in Lord Salisbury's despatch of the 3rd April) seem to me to define the land rights granted by the Treaty in a manner which distinctly excludes it; and the decision of the Halifax Commission (in accordance with the argument maintained at the time by the United States' Agent) proceeded upon a principle which, though the strand fishing may not have been then principally or immediately in question, clearly covered it. The importance of this point is, that when the Americans fish (as they have done, not only without objection, but with aid from the Newfoundlanders) with seines, or otherwise, from the shore, they do so, not in exercise of the rights which they have acquired by Treaty, but by the courtesy and hospitality of the people of Newfoundland voluntarily admitting them to a participation in their own use of the shore. In this the American fishermen neither do nor suffer wrong; but it appears to me, on very plain principles, that in what they do, without Treaty right upon and from the terra firma of Newfoundland, they are subject, and ought to be obedient, to the local law.

Ought to consult Newfoundland Government before compromising their rights by settlement of the question.

I cannot close this Memorandum without saying that, however desirable a speedy settlement of this matter may be, I should not think it expedient to purchase such a settlement upon any terms which would either compromise the permanent rights and interests of the Colony of Newfoundland and its fishermen, without giving the Government of that Colony the fullest opportunity of being heard in support of their own rights and interests, or concede (even in appearance) the principles contended for in Lord Granville's despatch of the 27th October. If the amount of compensation insisted upon by the United States' Government should be such as cannot reasonably be entertained on these principles, it would, I think, be more satisfactory to have it settled by an arbitrator on each side, with an impartial umpire (if an impartial umpire is possible), than to rely on any solution being come to by the two Governments, after appointing a referee on each side, and finding that the referees cannot agree.

IF the Government of the United States think it consistent with their honour and dignity to haggle for 1,000*l.* more, when they know that we have offered (for mere good-will's sake) four or five times as much as we believe to be fairly or justly due, and to enforce that demand, by declaring that they had rather let the matter drift than submit it to a fair and effective arbitration, I suppose it is not worth our while to keep the question open for the sake of 1,000*l.* more or less. A reference to Mr. Blaine and Sir E. Thornton, without umpirage, means (I suppose) merely the same thing as the demand for 16,000*l.*

Question as to ulterior claims.

Is there any possibility of ulterior claims for loss of fishing profits on account of the United States' fishermen being deterred from going to Newfoundland in respect of the time since the 4th March? I assume that there is not, but this sort of haggling suggests that any advantage which is possible might be hereafter taken of us.

Cannot expect any indemnity from Newfoundland.

If we settle with the United States on this footing (the case of the Newfoundlanders not having been so much as heard), we cannot expect Newfoundland to indemnify us.

Impolicy of repeated concessions.

Although I do not advise holding out (unless Lord Granville or Lord Kimberley should think it wise to do so), I have misgivings as to the effect, in the long run, of the policy of yielding to the screw whenever it is put upon us, even by the United States.

Lordship with our opinion as to what further steps, if any, should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That Mr. Evarts' letter of the 7th March raises a question of very great importance, deserving of the most serious consideration.

Incorrectness of Mr. Evarts' arguments as to non-liability of State Governments in the United States;

The claim preferred by Her Majesty's Government was on account of the murder of a British subject, and a lawless abstraction of his property by those who were executing legal process in the territory of New Mexico. According to the opinion of Mr. Calderon Carlisle, the process there being executed would be that of the United States' Federal Government, and as New Mexico is a territory without a Legislature or State Government, it appears to us that Mr. Carlisle is probably correct. If this be so, Mr. Evarts' argument must fail, as he bases it upon the fact that New Mexico is in the same position as a State, having its separate Courts, and by its process enforcing the execution of the laws of the State and not of the Federal Government.

But the consequences resulting from an admission of the validity of Mr. Evarts' contention will be equally grave if the claim be regarded as if it had arisen in respect of occurrences within one of the States of the Union.

According to Mr. Evarts' argument, no English subject can obtain compensation for any injuries occasioned through the acts of any State Government. For the only Sovereign Power is the Government of the United States. With the individual States of the Union foreign Governments stand in no diplomatic relation, and they can only look for redress, and are entitled so to look, to the Sovereign Power of which the States are constituent parts. If Mr. Evarts' argument be well founded, the obligation resting upon the British Government to afford compensation will be far in excess of that borne by the United States' Government.

The citizens of the different States of the Union would be entitled to recover compensation here for lawless acts committed under the like circumstances to those that have occurred in New Mexico, but Mr. Evarts declines to afford any compensation for such injuries sustained in any portion of the United States.

and of British Colonial Governments.

By alleging that an American citizen is not entitled to be compensated for claims arising within our Colonies, Mr. Evarts appears to sustain the right of claim for unjustifiable acts in the United Kingdom, but his argument shows that such claim would be without any mutuality.

We much doubt whether Mr. Evarts is correct in saying that no claim can be made on Her Majesty's Government by an American citizen on account of lawless acts committed within our colonies. A Colonial subject of the Queen has the same right to compensation as a native of the United Kingdom against the American Government, and if Mr. Evarts' suggestion be admitted as corrrect, it will be a dangerous admission against the rights of Colonial subjects, for if their non-liability to make compensation be admitted, their right to claim it must be doubtful.

We must remind your Lordship that there is apparently no substantial dispute as to the murder of Mr. Tunstall and the seizure of his property being lawless acts committed by those who were executing legal process within the United States.

Should protest against principles of non-liability. Great Britain cannot admit right of compensation without mutuality.

We therefore think that your Lordship should cause strong protestation to be made to the American Government against the principles of non-liability contended for by Mr. Evarts, and point out that it would be impossible for the British Government to continue to admit the right to compensation of American citizens if similar rights be denied to those of Great Britain.

Future action must be governed by the result of such representation.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor respecting the Tunstall Murder.

Murder of J. H. Tunstall. Agrees with Law Officers as to Mr. Evarts' reply.

I AGREE entirely with the opinion of the Law Officers, and need add little to it.

The doctrine advanced by Mr. Evarts is absolutely inconsistent with the fact, that the relations of the United States to foreign Governments are exclusively through the President, as the Representative of all the States united under the Federal Government.

What would the United States' Government say to any action on our part to enforce redress by reprisals against a particular State of the Union?

And, with respect to British Colonies, at the very time when Mr. Evarts was advancing this doctrine, he was claiming indemnification from the British Government for acts of violence committed in Newfoundland, by inhabitants of that Colony, against United States' fishermen.

He cannot have meant to say, that redress may be claimed against a State or a Colony for such acts of violence; but not for murder and robbery, committed by the representatives of the law, in the same State and Colony.

Murder of J. H. Tunstall. Claim well founded. Remarks on Mr. Tunstall's letter.

I HAVE no observations to make on this letter* except that the claim seems to me to be just and well founded.

The writer refers to the "Alabama" claims and the Geneva Award. This reference is more pertinent than it might, at first sight, seem to be; because the compensation awarded to the United States, so far as relates to the "Shenandoah," was entirely for matters which occurred in one of the Australian Colonies; as to which, if Mr. Evarts' argument could be maintained, the United States' Government would not have been entitled to make any claim, because the authority which did the wrong, or, rather, which failed to prevent it, was Colonial and not Imperial.

Fortune Bay fishery claims. Proposal to prefer counter-claims.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the printed correspondence noted in the margin,† together with two letters, dated the 28th and 11th April, from the Colonial Office, relative to certain counter-claims which the Newfoundland Government desired to prefer in reduction of the indemnity claimed by the United States' Government in respect of the incident at Fortune Bay, which was the subject of our Reports of the 15th July and 27th September last (Correspondence 1880-1, pp. 59 and 75).

That those counter-claims arose out of losses sustained by Newfoundland fishermen, who alleged that their nets were wantonly destroyed by American fishing vessels after the incident at Fortune Bay, by way of retaliation.

That the particulars of those counter-claims would be found in the affidavits transmitted in the Colonial Office letter of the 28th March last.

That, with reference to the charge of wanton destruction of those nets by way of retaliation, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our attention to the affidavits of Saunders and Cluett, taken shortly after the date of the Fortune Bay incident, copies of which were furnished at the time to the United States' Government. That they would be found at pp. 25 and 31 of the print of 1878-79.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the following papers on the subject:—Print, 1880-81, No. 89, p. 96; No. 90, p. 101; No. 93, p. 102; No. 96, p. 103; No. 118, p. 116; No. 174, p. 134.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to observe that in the letter addressed by your Lordship to Mr. Lowell, dated the 27th October last (Print No. 65, p. 81), in which your Lordship expressed the willingness of Her Majesty's Government to pay a reasonable indemnity in respect of the Fortune Bay claims, no mention was made of any counter-claims.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, whether, looking at the evidence and considering all the circumstances, the counter-claims in question could properly be preferred by Her Majesty's Government.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to add that the Premier of Newfoundland (Sir William Whiteway, Attorney-General of the Colony) was expected in this country in course of the month.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Reasons against bringing forward counter-claims.

That we have considered these papers, and particularly with reference to Sir J. Glover's inclosure No. 118, Print, 1880-81, the affidavits of Saunders, p. 25, Print, 1878-79, and Cluet, 31, Print, 1878-79.

In our opinion the evidence of malicious intention on the part of the American fishermen is too weak to enable Her Majesty's Government properly to support the counter-claims of the Newfoundland fishermen.

And we are further of opinion that if the evidence had been more conclusive the small amount of damage done, and the delay in making the counter-claims, would be strong reasons against now bringing them forward in reduction of any compensation to which the United States' fishermen may ultimately be held entitled.

Await arrival of Premier of Newfoundland.

But we think it would be well to defer coming to a final determination until the views of the Premier of Newfoundland have been fully ascertained and considered.

My Lord,

Cotton deck cargoes of British vessels. Is it advisable for Consuls, in such cases, to inform Board of Trade or Lloyd's?

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, to transmit to us papers relating to a correspondence which had recently taken place between the Committee of Lloyd's and the Board of Trade, and between that Department and the Foreign Office, on the subject of the departure from certain ports in the United States of British vessels loaded with cotton on deck.*

That it would be perceived from Lloyd's letter of the 13th June (Inclosure 1 in the letter from the Board of Trade of 2nd September) that, in accordance with a suggestion made by the Board of Trade to Lloyd's, that the Underwriters should contribute some assistance in preventing vessels carrying cargo on deck by refusing to take insurance risks in such cases, the Committee of Lloyd's requested that Her Majesty's Consuls at the cotton ports of the United States should be allowed to telegraph information to Lloyd's with regard to vessels leaving an American port with cotton on deck, "with a view to the fact of cotton being loaded on deck being made known to the Underwriters interested." That in their letter of the 24th August (Inclosure 5 in the letter from the Board of Trade above-mentioned) the Committee of Lloyd's stated that they were prepared to pay the costs of procuring the required information, "in the event of the Board of Trade being able to make the necessary arrangements with Her Majesty's Secretary of State." That in that letter of the 12th October (Inclosure 2 in the Board of Trade letter of the 19th October) Lloyd's suggested that Her Majesty's Consuls at the ports mentioned should be instructed to communicate the information required to Lloyd's Agents at Baltimore, who would telegraph it direct to Lloyd's Committee, and in their letter of the 19th October (inclosed in the Board of Trade of the 25th October) the Committee informed the Board of Trade that they would be happy to give some publicity of their intention to receive the intelligence referred to, provided that the Foreign Office saw no objection to the adoption of this course. That, as the Board of Trade concurred in Lloyd's suggestions, your Lordship was, at first, disposed to accede to the proposed arrangement, and that a Circular to Consuls had been prepared accordingly (Inclosure in letter to Board of Trade of the 13th September), but that, on further consideration, your Lordship felt some hesitation in giving effect to the proposal.

That your Lordship understood that the practice complained of was not illegal, except so far as it might, in some cases, render the ship unseaworthy. But that it was alleged to be dangerous, and it was said also to be a "fraudulent evasion of dues," payable for space of deck cargo.

That if, therefore, the proposed arrangement were limited to an instruction to Her Majesty's Consuls to telegraph to the Board of Trade the fact of any ship having left with bales of cotton on deck there would seem to be no objection to it, as the object would be to put the Board of Trade, on inquiry as to to whether the vessel had put to sea in an unseaworthy state (for which the master would be punishable), and also to prevent fraud in the payment of dues. That the Board of Trade might then, on the receipt of such information, communicate it, if they thought proper, to the Underwriters.

That your Lordship considered, however, that the proposal to instruct Her Majesty's Consuls to telegraph such information direct to Lloyd's for the benefit of the insurers was open to objection. That the Underwriters could procure their information from Lloyd's Agents at the ports where the practice complained of prevails, and that it appeared to your Lordship somewhat invidious to throw on Her Majesty's Consuls that new and inquisitorial duty for the furtherance of private interests. That your Lordship apprehended also that it might involve them in disagreeable relations with shipmasters and owners, if not in some legal responsibility, and that the public interest being only concerned in regard to the safety of life, and to a proper payment of dues, all official information which the Board of Trade thought necessary should be addressed to that Department.

That your Lordship was inclined to think that the task of telegraphing the information in question direct to Lloyd's was one which goes beyond the limit of the functions which could legitimately be imposed on Her Majesty's Consuls, and that Sir J. Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in that view, and favour your Lordship with such observations on the subject as we might think proper to make.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir J. Pauncefote, dated the 28th ultimo, inclosing a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston* on the above subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consuls should inform Board of Trade to avoid legal difficulties.

That we concur in your Lordship's view, and think that the official information, which the Board of Trade deem necessary, should be addressed to that Department.

Any other course would, we think, be likely to give rise to considerable embarrassment and difficulty, and might involve the Consuls in grave legal responsibility.

My Lord,

Mr. Littlejohn's claim on Uruguayan Government for appropriation of gunpowder. That Government will only pay in depreciated bonds.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he had the honour, by your Lordship's direction, to forward to us the correspondence* relative to a claim preferred by Mr. Robert Littlejohn, a British subject, against the Uruguayan Government, on account of some gunpowder belonging to him which had been appropriated by that Government in 1874, and for which an order on the Treasury for the estimated value, 891 dollars gold, was granted to Mr. Littlejohn by them.

That, on being pressed for the settlement of the claim, the Uruguayan Government had declined to satisfy it in any other way than by giving Mr. Littlejohn bonds of the new funded debt, or "deuda amortizable," which he declined to receive on the ground that those bonds were worth only 19 per cent. of their nominal value.

That, together with the above papers, were annexed a copy of the Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation between Her Majesty and the Oriental Republic of Uruguay of the 26th August, 1842, and of the Protocol respecting the renewal of diplomatic relations between Great Britain and the Republic, signed on the 29th April, 1879, to which was attached a despatch from Mr. Ford, defining the arrangements he had made for the payment of a certain class of British claims, and the investigation and settlement of others.

That, by a recent Law of the Republic, all debts owing by the State at the date of December 1880 were included in the "deuda amortizable," and that the Government declined to take into consideration the origin of Mr. Littlejohn's claim, but insisted on classing it in the same category as all other claims. That, in his despatch No. 69 of the 16th August, Mr. Monson stated that Mr. Littlejohn's powder was deposited as required by regulation in the Government magazine of the capital, and was appropriated by the Government for its own purposes.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the seizure of Mr. Littlejohn's powder under those circumstances amounted to a military exaction or requisition within the meaning of Article IX of the Treaty of 1842, and, if so, whether the Government of Uruguay could refuse to pay to Mr. Littlejohn's claim of 891 dollars gold, for which an order was given to him on the Treasury at the time, on the ground that, by the Municipal law above referred to, all the debts of the State not satisfied at a particular date were to be paid off in the bonds issued thereunder, and then were only 19 per cent. of their nominal value.

That if we should be of opinion that Article IX of the Treaty did not apply to the case, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether Mr. Littlejohn's claim could be supported on any other ground.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have not before us the exact circumstances under which the gunpowder belonging to Mr. Littlejohn was taken possession of by the Government of Uruguay.

If the appropriation was forcible, Mr. Littlejohn should be paid in full, and Her Majesty's Government are entitled to insist on full reparation.

But, assuming that it was appropriated by them without the consent of Mr. Littlejohn for their military purposes, we think that such forcible appropriation was a military exaction or requisition within the meaning of Article IX of the Treaty between this country and Uruguay, and, if so, we think that the Government of Uruguay are not justified in refusing to pay Mr. Littlejohn, except in bonds which represent only one-fifth of the value of the property expropriated, and that Her Majesty's Government may properly insist that he shall receive the entire value of his property.

His claim (always supposing the assumption we have made to be correct), unlike an ordinary debt, does not arise from his having trusted the Government of Uruguay, but has its origin in the breach of an international obligation, and this being so, Her Majesty's Government are themselves entitled to prefer the claim, and to insist on full reparation.

Regulations respecting foreign vessels of war in British ports.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a translation of a letter from the Venezuelan Minister at this Court,* asking on behalf of his Government for information on the following points:—

1. By what order or regulation of police, or any other kind, is it considered that foreign vessels of war which visit the ports of Great Britain are bound, and from which are they excluded; what number of vessels of war may enter, and how long are they allowed to remain in the ports?

2. What consequences are brought upon foreign vessels of war by inattention to the laws which are considered binding on them, and what is the mode of proceeding to enforce the responsibility they incur?

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the Venezuelan Minister.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Reply to questions of Venezuelan Minister.

That the Venezuelan Minister may properly be answered that the Laws of Great Britain in time of peace, and subject to any exceptional state of things, place no restriction upon the number of foreign ships of war which may come into any of the ports of the United Kingdom, nor any limit of time for their remaining in such ports.

That such ships of war are not under the orders or regulations of the police or other British authority in respect to matters occurring on board, but that they would be expected and required to conform to such port and harbour regulations as relate to safe navigation or to the public health, as, e.g., Quarantine Regulations. Any infraction of these rules, however, would not be dealt with in the manner applicable to private ships, but would be the subject of representation or claim by the British Government, addressed to the State to which the offending vessel belonged.

My Lord,

Claim of Venezuela to Patos or Goose Island.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, received the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th April last upon the subject of the claim of Venezuela to the Island of Patos, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office* pointing out which of the papers submitted to us contained the evidence relied upon as showing that the island in question had been held and treated as a Dependency of Trinidad since the occupation of the Colony in 1797.

That the papers inclosed in the Foreign Office letter to us of the 4th February, 1880, were sent therewith for convenience of reference, and that our Report of the 27th April was also inclosed.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Island may be regarded as dependency of Trinidad.

That we think it may be taken on the evidence before us that the Island of Patos was within the Government and jurisdiction of Trinidad prior to the cession of that island to Great Britain, and that Patos may properly be regarded as one of its dependencies.

British title, under Treaty of Amiens, is not clear;

This seems to be established by the grant made by the Governor and Captain-General of Trinidad to the Cabildo in 1791, whatever question there may be as to the extent of the rights thereby granted, or as to the necessity for its confirmation by the Crown of Spain. If therefore, by the Treaty of Amiens, the Island of Trinidad and its dependencies had been ceded to Great Britain, her right to the Island of Patos could hardly have been called in question. In the Treaty, however, the "Island of Trinidad" only is in express terms ceded. There are, nevertheless, strong grounds for contending that such language would suffice to carry, and must primâ facie be construed to carry, a cession of the dependencies of the island also, or, at all events, of such of them as are in its immediate neighbourhood. Grave inconvenience would certainly result from a contrary construction. But the terms of the Treaty render such a construction difficult in the present case, for in another part (Article VII) of the Treaty of Amiens when the case of Malta is dealt with "its dependencies" are expressly mentioned. And further, Patos appears to be considerably nearer the mainland than it is to Trinidad. If then the question had arisen immediately after the Treaty, and had rested only upon the construction of that instrument we think it doubtful whether the title of Great Britain to the Island of Patos could be clearly established.

It becomes important therefore to inquire how the parties to that Treaty have acted and how the island has been dealt with subsequently.

For nearly sixty years after the Treaty (viz., until 1850) no claim was made to the island either by Spain or by the Government of Venezuela, which, in 1845, succeeded to the Spanish dominions in that part of America. On the other hand acts of dominion were exercised over the island by the Government of Trinidad as far back as 1822, and such acts have been renewed at other periods subsequent to that date.

It is true that the leave given to Felix to occupy and cultivate the island in 1822 was not the exercise of a very definite act of sovereignty.

but may be sustained on account of acts of sovereignty exercised by British Government, though not free from doubt.

But it is clear, from the opinion of the Attorney-General, that it was regarded as an assertion of sovereignty, and it seems to have been intended as such by the Government of Trinidad. In addition to this there have, we gather, been undoubted acts of sovereignty exercised, without question down to the present time, over the Islands of Mouos and Huelons, which, like Patos, are separate islands and could only have passed to Great Britain as dependencies of Trinidad.

Under these circumstances we think that the title of Great Britain to the island in question may well be sustained, though we cannot say that the matter is free from doubt.

If the boundary negotiations be still going on, sufficient doubt exists to render it expedient to close the matter definitely, one way or the other, if the opportunity presents itself for so doing.

My Lord,

Venezuelan Law imposing additional duties on imports from West Indies is contrary to Article IV of Treaty with Great Britain of 1825.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence* relative to a Law recently passed by the Venezuelan Government imposing an additional duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem upon all imports into that country from West Indian Islands or Colonies, which Law was to come into force on the 19th December, 1882, when the Treaty between Denmark and Venezuela would expire.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to inclose copy of the Treaty of 1825† between this country and the United States of Colombia, and of the Convention of 1834‡ between this country and Venezuela, by which the Treaty of 1825 was adopted and confirmed as between Great Britain and Venezuela.

That Article IV of the Treaty of 1825 provided that "no higher or other duties should be imposed on the importation into the territories of Venezuela of any article of the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions than were or should be payable on the like article being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country."

That, under the new Act, goods imported into Venezuela direct from British West Indian Colonies would be charged higher duties than the products of other countries, and that where such goods were the "growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions," it appeared to your Lordship that the Law would be inconsistent with the provisions of Article IV of the Treaty of 1825.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take that matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That if (as we gather will be the case), under the Law recently passed by the Government of Venezuela, articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Majesty's West Indian dominions would be charged, on importation, with higher duties than are imposed on the like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of other foreign countries, the enforcement of that Law will, in our opinion, be inconsistent with the provisions of Article IV of the Treaty of 1825.

subject, appeared to have flogged and imprisoned natives over whom he had no power to exercise any jurisdiction, and that we would perceive that Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar stated in his despatch No. 65 of the 1st July that he considered Mr. Streeter to have thereby committed "a crime most seriously dealt with under the Indian Penal Code, which we administer here" (viz., in the British Consular Court at Zanzibar).

That Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 9th August, 1866, for the regulation of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Zanzibar, contained no provision authorizing the Consular Court to administer the Indian Penal Code, but that section 27 empowered Her Majesty's Consul to establish "Rules of Practice," and that in 1867 Colonel Playfair, then Her Majesty's Consul in Zanzibar, drew up certain Rules and Regulations, of which Article 24 provided that the Indian Penal Code "shall be considered the Criminal Law to which British subjects at Zanzibar are amenable," with certain exceptions therein mentioned.

That those Rules and Regulations were submitted by him to Lord Stanley, at that time Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and were referred by his Lordship to the Law Officers of the Crown, who reported on the 21st February, 1867, that, with some slight alterations not affecting Article 24, the Rules were right and proper. That the Rules were issued accordingly.

That the attention of the Law Officers, however, was not directed to the fact that the power of Her Majesty's Consul to frame Regulations under section 27 of the Order in Council only extended to Rules of Practice, whereas the 24th Article of the Regulations issued by Colonel Playfair applied part of the Law of India to Zanzibar, and therefore seemed to be ultra vires.

That it appeared also to your Lordship that that provision could not be supported under section 3 of the Order in Council, as under that section the Consul could only make Rules the violation of which entailed no greater punishment than 500 dollars fine or three months' imprisonment.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take his letter and the papers which accompanied same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our early convenience, as to whether Her Majesty's Consular Court in Zanzibar could lawfully administer the Indian Penal Code under the Order in Council of 1866 and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder in 1867.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was further to draw our attention to Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 1st June, 1877, and to request that we would advise your Lordship whether, under that Order, Her Majesty's Consular Court in Zanzibar could apply the provisions of sections 367, 370, and 371 of the Indian Penal Code to the offences therein defined and committed in Zanzibar by the persons mentioned in the Order, or whether such persons were justiciable only in British India under that Order.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think it clear that the rule which provides that the Indian Penal Code shall be considered the criminal law to which British subjects at Zanzibar are amenable could not properly be made under section 27 of the Order in Council, which relates to rules of practice only.

If the Consul had authority to make it at all, it could only be under section 1 of the Order in Council, as a rule "for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar."

But, having regard to the terms of that section, and to the other provisions of the Order in Council, especially those contained in section 22, we do not think that it was competent for the Consul to make such a rule as that numbered 24.

Consular Court at Zanzibar cannot legally administer Indian Penal Code;

We are therefore of opinion that Her Majesty's Consular Court in Zanzibar cannot lawfully administer the Indian Penal Code under the Order in Council of 1866 and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder in 1867.

offenders against sections 367, 370, and 371 are justiciable only in India.

We are of opinion that, under the Order in Council of the 1st June, 1877, Her Majesty's Consular Court in Zanzibar cannot apply the provisions of sections 367, 370, and 371 of the Indian Penal Code to the offences therein defined and committed in Zanzibar by the persons mentioned in the Order in Council, and that such persons are justiciable only in British India under that Order.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received December 7.)

My Lord,

Temple, December 6, 1881.

Ill-treatment of natives at Mombasa by Mr. Streeter.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 15th ultimo stating that your Lordship had had under further consideration the printed correspondence relating to the proceedings of Mr. Streeter, a lay missionary at Mombasa, in the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, a copy of which was laid before us in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 9th September, referred to in our Report of the 3rd October last,* respecting the validity of a Rule issued in 1867, under section 27 of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 9th August, 1866, and purporting to empower the British Consular Court at Zanzibar to administer the Indian Penal Code.

That, although the Indian Penal Code did not apply in Zanzibar, your Lordship considered it a matter of regret that the offences of aggravated assault and false imprisonment, of which Mr. Streeter appears to have been guilty, were not dealt with according to English law by the Consular Court.

That Mr. Streeter was, at the date of Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, in this country, but that your Lordship understood that he could not be brought to justice here for the offences committed by him in Zanzibar, as the Courts in England had no jurisdiction over crimes committed by British subjects on land out of the British dominions, other than murder or manslaughter, or offences against the Slave Trade Acts.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to state that, under those circumstances, your Lordship proposed to again address the Church Missionary Society, informing them that it was intended to lay the papers on the subject before Parliament, and adding that your Lordship would be glad to hear that the Society had resolved to relieve Mr. Streeter of his functions in Zanzibar, and will not give him any new employment in any responsible situation out of Her Majesty's dominions, where there was any possibility of a repetition of similar outrages.

That having, however, regard to the fact that the matter was one which would no doubt excite great public interest, before acting in the above sense, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we concurred in the view that Mr. Streeter could not be brought to justice in this country, and, if so, Sir Julian Pauncefote requested that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the communication which he proposed to address to the Society was right and proper under the circumstances, and generally with such observations as we might have to offer on the case.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 29th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the letter of the 15th ultimo, he was to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further letter and its inclosures from the Church Missionary Society† respecting Mr. Streeter's proceedings at Mombasa.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Opinion as to trial of Mr. Streeter, and letter to Church Missionary Society on the subject.

That we concur in the view that Mr. Streeter cannot be brought to justice in this country, and that the communication which your Lordship proposes to address to the Society is, in our opinion, proper under the circumstances.

No further observations occur to us in relation to the case.

APPENDIX.

Turkey.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 6.)

My Lord, Temple, January 6, 1881.

Cyprus revenue and Guaranteed Loan of 1855.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd December last, stating that he had to submit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the following questions for our consideration and advice:—

Conditions of guarantee.

That in 1855 a loan of 5,000,000*l.* was raised by Turkey under the guarantees agreed to by Great Britain and France, and recorded in a Convention with the Porte, dated the 27th June, 1855. On the same day a Declaration was signed by Great Britain and France relative to the mode in which their liability under the above guarantee, in case of default by the Porte, should be met. (Hertslet's "Map of Europe by Treaty," vol. ii, pp. 1235-1237.) Copies of the Convention and Declaration were annexed.

That by the Convention the interest on the loan, which was fixed at 4 per cent. per annum, was guaranteed by Great Britain and France jointly, and the Porte agreed to pay the further rate of 1 per cent. per annum by way of sinking fund.

That the interest and sinking fund were made a charge "on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire," and especially on the balance of the Egyptian tribute unappropriated to the previous Loan of 1854, and moreover on the customs of Smyrna and Syria.

That finally the Porte agreed to remit to the Bank of England, at stated half-yearly periods, the amounts payable in respect of that loan for interest and sinking fund, until the whole capital borrowed should be repaid.

Financial situation as regards loan.

That the financial situation as regarded that loan was as follows:—Turkey then owed on account of interest about 105,000*l.*, which sum had been wholly paid by England, France being liable to repay to her one moiety.

That the capital of the loan then stood at 3,815,000*l.*, the stipulated interest on which (4 per cent.) amounted to 152,600*l.* per annum. Towards the payment of that sum the balance of the Egyptian tribute, amounting to 72,000*l.* per annum, was paid to the Bank of England, leaving in addition to the then arrears 80,600*l.* per annum to be provided in future by England and France in case of default by the Porte. That the Porte had ceased to pay anything towards the sinking fund since 1876.

Proposed retention of surplus for payment of arrears of interest and sinking fund.

That in view of the risk which was apprehended of further defalcations by the Porte, the question had arisen whether, having regard to the terms of Article III of the Convention, whereby it was declared that the interest and sinking fund of the said loan "shall form a charge on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire," Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in retaining the surplus revenue of the Island of Cyprus, payable by them to the Porte under the Convention and Annex of the 4th June, 1878, hereinafter mentioned, in satisfaction of the arrears of interest and of sinking fund then due or thereafter accruing due by the Porte.

Conditions of occupation of Cyprus.

That the terms on which Great Britain proposed to the Porte to occupy and administer the Island of Cyprus, and the objects of that proposal, were fully explained in the despatch of the Marquis of Salisbury to Sir Henry Layard of the 30th May, 1878 (Parliamentary Paper, "Turkey No. 36, 1878," p. 1).

That in that despatch the following passage occurred:—"Her Majesty's Government do not wish to ask the Sultan to alienate territory from his sovereignty, or to diminish the receipts which now pass into his Treasury. They will therefore propose that while the administration and occupation of the island shall be assigned to Her Majesty, the territory shall still continue to be part of the Ottoman Empire, and that the excess of the revenue over the expenditure, whatever it may be, shall be paid over annually by the British Government to the Treasury of the Sultan."

That the intention would therefore seem to have been that the revenues of Cyprus should be received by Great Britain in a fiduciary character.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was then to refer us to the Convention of Defensive Alliance between Great Britain and Turkey of the 4th June, 1878, and to the Annex thereto of the same date, (see Parliamentary Paper above cited, pp. 3-5), whereby the above proposal for the British occupation of Cyprus was carried out, and we would observe that by Article III of the Annex it was provided that "England will pay to the Porte whatever is the present excess of revenue over expenditure in the island," such excess to be determined as therein mentioned.

That that excess or surplus revenue of Cyprus payable by Great Britian, and which amounted to 90,000*l.* per annum, had been pledged by the Porte as part of the security given by her to carry out certain financial arrangements recently concluded.

That Her Majesty's Government were disposed to make a proposal to the Porte in relation to the Loan of 1855, which had lately been under consideration, and which was likely to be advantageous to all parties; but before doing so they desired to be advised as to their strict legal rights.

Questions as to appropriation of surplus revenue.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would take the facts stated in his letter, and the documents above referred to, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following questions:—

1. Were Her Majesty's Government entitled to treat the surplus revenue of Cyprus as part of the revenues of the Ottoman Empire, which were charged by Article III of the Convention of 1855 with the payment of interest on the loan and sinking fund?

2. If so, was there anything opposed to international right or equity (apart from considerations of political expediency) in the retention by Her Majesty's Government of so much of the surplus revenue of Cyprus as might be sufficient to satisfy the arrears due by the Porte in respect of interest and sinking fund, or either of them, by way of enforcement for the joint benefit of Great Britain and France of the charge created on the "whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire" by Article III of the Convention of 1855.

3. If Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to retain the surplus revenue by way of enforcement of the said charge, were they entitled to retain the same by way of mutual credit and set-off, for the benefit of Great Britain only, and to the extent of her share of liability under the Convention of 1855, or generally on account of any pecuniary obligations of the Porte towards Great Britain?

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose (together with the other papers) a case laid before our predecessors in 1878 by the Treasury, in relation to the Loan of 1855, and to refer us to the questions submitted to them at p. 8, some of which were not irrelevant to the points then under consideration.

That the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown on those questions would be found at p. 161 of the "Further Correspondence respecting Ottoman Loans, 1876-78," Part II (Confidential No. 3849).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government entitled to apply Cyprus surplus to loan.

1. That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are entitled to treat the surplus revenues of Cyprus as part of the revenues of the Ottoman Empire which are charged by Article III of the Convention of 1855 with the payment of interest on the loan and sinking fund.

Such application not opposed to equity, subject to demand as to special securities.

2. We desire to point out to your Lordship that under Article III of the Convention of 1855 the customs of Smyrna and Syria, as well as the surplus tribute of Egypt, are specially charged with the interest and sinking fund of the loan. And we would suggest (if it has not already been done) that before seeking to apply any part of the general revenues of the Ottoman Empire to the payment of the interest and sinking fund, the Porte should be specially called upon by Her Majesty's Government to give them the benefit of the special security which they are entitled to by the Convention. Subject to this being done, and in the event of the demand not being complied with, we are of opinion that there is nothing opposed to international right or equity (apart from considerations of political expediency) in the retention by Her Majesty's Government of so much of the surplus revenue of Cyprus as may be sufficient to satisfy the arrears due by the Porte in respect of interest or sinking fund by way of enforcement, for the joint interest of Great Britain and France, of the charge created on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire by the Convention of 1855.

Right of Her Majesty's Government to retain surplus established by Convention of 1855 only.

As to power of Porte to assign surplus.

3. If Her Majesty's Government were not entitled to rely on the charge imposed on the surplus revenue of Turkey by the Convention, we think it would not be equitable or right to retain it by way of mutual credit or set-off, inasmuch as the special charge created upon it by the Porte, of which Her Majesty's Government have notice, gave a valid title to those to whom it was assigned, subject only to any pre-existing charge upon it.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN: 1882.

Africa (West Coast).

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received July 6.)

My Lord, Temple, July 5, 1882.

Orders to Naval Officers on West Coast.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter (which was inclosed) from the Admiralty, dated the 8th April last, containing a copy of the Orders to Naval Officers relating to dealings with natives on the West Coast of Africa, drawn up by Commodore Sir Frederick Richards.

Capital punishment of natives on board Her Majesty's ships, &c.

That your Lordship observed that Article 1 of those Orders implied that capital punishment might be inflicted on natives in some cases on board of Her Majesty's ships, and by officers of Her Majesty's ships on shore.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose the Parliamentary Papers relating to the execution of a native of Tanna on board in 1877, and also Reports of questions and answers, and of a debate which took place on the subject in the House of Commons on the 5th August, 1878.*

That in view of the conflict of opinion to which that case gave rise as to whether the execution of natives on board Her Majesty's ships for outrages committed on British subjects could be supported in law as "an act of war," or on any other ground, Sir Julian was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether your Lordship could properly express your approval of the terms of Article 1 of the Orders in question.

That your Lordship would also be glad to be informed whether there was any objection in point of law to the terms of any of the other Articles of the Orders, or whether they might be approved generally.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

It should not be sanctioned.

That we do not think your Lordship can properly express your approval of the terms of Article 1 of the Orders in question.

The implied authority which they involve was very strongly called in question in the debate which took place in 1878, and having regard to what was said on that occasion, we think it would be inexpedient to give fresh official sanction to it.

We see no objection to the terms of any of the other Articles.

We have, &c.
(Signed) HENRY JAMES.

No. 2.

Foreign Office, August 21, 1882.

Gentlemen,

Exercise of jurisdiction by the Queen in territories granted to the North Borneo Company.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of Earl Granville, a letter (O) from the Chairman of the British North Borneo Company, recently incorporated by Royal Charter, asking for information as to the course which Her Majesty's Government propose to take with reference to the exercise of the Queen's exterritorial jurisdiction in North Borneo; and I am to inclose the other Papers on the subject noted in the margin.*

A Map will be found at p. 229 of the Parliamentary Papers (A), showing the territories ceded to the Company by the Sultans of Brunei and Sulu respectively, and which are comprised in the expression "North Borneo."

It is to be observed that in the Treaties and Orders in Council presently referred to the Sultan is styled "Sultan of Borneo;" but his more correct appellation is "Sultan of Brunei."

Position of the Company.

The sovereignty over the east coast of North Borneo is claimed both by him and by the Sultan of Sulu; but the Company derive their title to the east coast under separate grants from each Sultan.

No exterritorial jurisdiction over the east coast has been granted by the Sultan of Sulu to any foreign Power.

Proposal of Company to establish civil and criminal Tribunals.

The Company now propose to establish Tribunals in North Borneo for the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction under the general powers of government conferred on them by the Sultans, and subject to the Treaty rights of foreigners.

You will observe that by Article IX of the Charter of the Company (C) it is provided that "in case at any time Her Majesty should think fit to make provision by Order in her Council for the exercise and regulation of her extra-territorial jurisdiction and authority in Borneo, and to appoint any of the said Company's officers to discharge judicial or other functions thereunder in Her Majesty's name, then, and so long, the said Company shall provide all court-houses and establishments necessary or proper in that behalf, and bear all expenses of the exercise of the jurisdiction or authority which those officers are so appointed to exercise."

Former British jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction formerly enjoyed by the Queen in the dominions of the Sultan of Brunei was that conferred by the Additional Article of the Treaty of 1847 (D), which is as follows:—

"His Highness the Sultan of Borneo agrees that in all cases when a British subject shall be accused of any crime committed in any part of His Highness' dominions, the person so accused shall be exclusively tried and adjudged by the English Consul-General, or other officer duly appointed for that purpose by Her Britannic Majesty; and in all cases where disputes or differences shall arise between British subjects, or between British subjects and the subjects of His Highness, or between British subjects and the subjects of any other foreign Power, within the dominions of the Sultan of Borneo, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General, or other duly-appointed officer, shall have power to hear and decide the same, without any interference, molestation, or hindrance on the part of any authority of Borneo, either before, during, or after the litigation."

An Order in Council was passed in 1854 (F) to give effect to the above Article so far as relates to criminal jurisdiction; but it was repealed by another Order in Council passed the following year (G) for the reasons stated by Sir E. Hertslet in his Memorandum (I), and in 1856 a different Agreement as to jurisdiction was substituted for the Additional Article of the Treaty of 1847. (See Appendix to Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum—I, p. 7 A.)

"His Highness the Sultan agrees that, in all cases where a British subject shall be accused of any crime, committed in any part of His Highness' dominions, the person so accused shall be tried and adjudged by the English Consul-General, or other officer duly appointed by Her Majesty, together with (and by) an officer chosen by His Highness; and in all cases where disputes and differences shall arise between British subjects, or between British subjects and the subjects of His Highness, or between British subjects and the subjects of any other foreign Power, within the dominions of the Sultan of Borneo, Her Majesty's Consul-General, or other officer duly appointed, together with an officer appointed by His Highness, will adjudge, according to the customs of Borneo, those who are in the wrong in these differences, and the Sultan will receive their sentences and carry them out. No other persons can interfere with English subjects, and no punishment can be inflicted on them heavier than accords with the customs of the English."

No Order in Council was passed to give effect to that Agreement, but it appears to have been in operation for some time, though of late years there has been no British Consular staff in Brunei, and in 1879 the difficulties and delays thereby occasioned were pointed out by Acting Consul-General Treacher, then stationed in Labuan. (I, p. 6.)

Exterritorial jurisdiction of United States by Treaty of 1850.

The United States are the only other Power which can claim exterritorial jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sultan of Brunei. (See the Treaty of 1850 between the Sultan and the United States—E.)

With reference to this Treaty, I am to refer you to the correspondence between Commodore Schufeldt and the Sultan of Brunei transmitted in Acting Consul-General Treacher's despatch No. 3, Consular, of the 8th March, 1880 (B, p. 16, No. 26), and to your Report of the 17th September, 1880 (B, p. 59).

The American Treaty contains nine Articles, of which the first eight are identic in their terms with the first eight Articles of the British Treaty, and Article IX is identic with the Additional Article of that Treaty relating to jurisdiction. Article II provides for most-favoured-nation treatment.

The regulation of civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects in the territories which still remain under the administration of the Sultan of Brunei will form the subject of a separate reference.

The question on which Lord Granville now desires to be favoured with your opinion and advice is that of the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction by the Queen in the territories granted to the Company.

Proposed Order in Council as to jurisdiction over all foreigners except United States' citizens, and as to appeals.

All foreigners in North Borneo (except British and Americans) are subject to the territorial jurisdiction which is vested in the Company under the general powers of government conferred on them by the Sultans. It is presumed that the Company can surrender to the Queen any part of its jurisdiction, and it has been suggested that, subject to the Treaty rights of the citizens of the United States (for which the United States' Government can make provision by the appointment of Consuls if they think fit), a general and uniform civil and criminal jurisdiction over all foreigners, throughout North Borneo, should be conferred on the officers of the Company, and regulated by an Order in Council, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, whereby provision should be made for appeals to the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, and ultimately to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and power should be given to send prisoners to Singapore for trial or punishment, or by way of deportation (J, K, and L).

This plan, if it can be carried out, would inspire confidence in the proper administration of justice over foreigners in North Borneo, and would be of great assistance to the Company at the commencement of its administration.

Has Queen the power to issue proposed Order?

The first question, therefore, which arises is whether, having regard to the general powers of government conferred on the Company by the Sultans (see Q, pp. 5 A and 8 A), and looking at the terms of the Provisional Agreement of 1856, it is competent to Her Majesty, at the request of the Company, to issue such an Order as above suggested, saving the Treaty rights of citizens of the United States, and providing for their submission to the jurisdiction with the consent of their Government.

I am to observe that the administration of justice in Cyprus over all foreigners, irrespective of nationality, is carried on under an Ordinance of the local Legislature established by Order in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and I am to refer to section 4 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1878" (M), which extends the provisions of "The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865" (N), to Orders in Council passed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

If such jurisdiction is not assumed, what other plan should be adopted?

If you should be of opinion that such an Order in Council as above suggested cannot properly be passed, or in case Her Majesty's Government, for reasons of policy, should be unwilling to assume the proposed jurisdiction, it will be necessary to consider what other mode of dealing with the question of jurisdiction in North Borneo should be adopted.

Although the Additional Article of the British Treaty was renounced and superseded by the Provisional Agreement of 1856, it is presumed that Her Majesty's Government may claim to revert to it under the most-favoured-nation clause of the British Treaty (Article II—D, p. 1), which entitles them to the benefit of Article IX of the American Treaty (E, p. 36), that Article being identic with the Additional Article of the British Treaty; and I am to inclose the draft of an Order in Council (P) prepared by Mr. R. S. Wright on behalf of the Company, and privately communicated by them for the consideration of the Foreign Office, which is based on the assumption that the Additional Article of the Treaty of 1847 and the Order in Council of 1854 are still in force.

Proposal to vest Queen's jurisdiction in officers of Company, or to waive it and leave British subjects on same footing as foreigners.

This draft (P) contemplates the vesting of the Queen's jurisdiction under the Additional Article in the officers of the Company, subject to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (see sections 3 and 10). The inconvenience of this plan would seem to be, that, as regards crimes and offences, British subjects would be tried under the Order in Council, whereas other foreigners would be tried under the territorial jurisdiction, and this might occasion confusion where the defendants were persons of different nationalities. Another alternative would be for Her Majesty's Government to waive altogether the Queen's exterritorial jurisdiction, and leave British subjects to be dealt with, like other foreigners, in the Courts established by the Company.

This plan is also open to the objection that there would be no appeal from the Courts of the Company, and that American citizens, being entitled by Treaty to exemption from the local jurisdiction, would not be so likely to submit to it as they would to the jurisdiction of the Queen exercised under such a general Order in Council as first suggested, giving powers of appeal to the Straits Settlements and to the Privy Council.

I am to request that you will take all the above suggestions into your consideration, and favour Lord Granville with your opinion as to the best mode of disposing of the question.

I have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received September 19.)

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st August, 1882, we have the honour to report—

Doubtful whether transfer of Company's jurisdiction to Queen is in accordance with international law.

That no doubt considerable advantages would be derived from the establishment of a uniform civil and criminal jurisdiction, extending alike to foreigners and British subjects throughout the territories of the North Borneo Company. Foreigners (excepting United States' citizens), like the natives of the country, are doubtless subject to the jurisdiction of the Company, to whom the sovereign rights of the Sultan have been transferred; but we are not aware of any precedent for the transfer by any Power of its civil and criminal jurisdiction over foreigners residing within its territory except to the States to which the foreigners respectively belong; and we think it very questionable whether such a transfer to the Queen of the Company's jurisdiction over foreigners as is proposed would be in accordance with international law. At all events it would seem open to grave objection, and the exercise of the transferred jurisdiction would be likely to be called in question by the States to which the foreigners belonged. The case of Cyprus is not a parallel one, as there the entire jurisdiction of the Sultan over the island and all its inhabitants is transferred to the British Crown.

Objections to such transfer, and to exercise of Queen's jurisdiction through officers of the Company.

The exterritorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty over British subjects in North Borneo undoubtedly exists, and might, under the Charter, be exercised by the appointment for that purpose of one or more of the Company's officers. But we should like to know, before advising such a course, whether there is any precedent for the exercise by Her Majesty of her exterritorial jurisdiction in any country through the medium of an official of that country authorized to administer justice there for and in the name of Her Majesty. There appears to us to be some serious objections to such a course.

Better to leave Company to deal with British subjects and foreigners alike.

We defer expressing a final opinion upon the question submitted to us. But, as at present advised, the better course would seem to be to leave British subjects to be dealt with like other foreigners by the Courts established by the Company, open, as this course is, to the objection that there would then be no appeal by British subjects to the Queen in Council.

War between Chile and Peru. British and French agreement as to appointment of Commission of Inquiry into claims of neutrals arising out of.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th April, 1881, he had the honour to inform us, by direction of your Lordship, that in July last the British and French Governments agreed to instruct their Representatives at Santiago to urge upon the Chilean Government the appointment of a Mixed Commission to inquire into the claims of neutrals against that Government arising out of the war between Chile and Peru.

That the most material part of the correspondence relating to the proposed Commission was comprised in the following numbers of the accompanying print:* Nos. 51, 57, 77, 88, 89, 97, 120, 125, 130, and 137.

That an account of the excesses committed by the Chilean soldiery would be found in Sir Spenser St. John's despatches Nos. 38, 41, 86, 87.

That a schedule of the British claims formed Inclosure 3 in No. 86, but that the documents mentioned in the last column, and which appeared to contain a statement of the particular circumstances under which the losses and damages were inflicted on the claimants had not been transmitted to the Foreign Office.

That full particulars, however, of one of the principal claims, that of Captain Harris, were given in No. 105, p. 84.

Assent of Chile to proposed Commission.

That we should perceive from the correspondence that although the Chilean Government assented to the proposed Commission, it had not at that time been appointed.

French views as to right to indemnity for losses occasioned by war.

Preliminary understanding proposed.

That, in the meanwhile, the late French Ambassador addressed a note to your Lordship (p. 114, No. 134), to which our particular attention was invited. That, in that communication, M. Challemel-Lacour stated that his Government desired to maintain the principle which they had always upheld that individuals who had suffered losses occasioned by war had no right to indemnity, and that they invited Her Majesty's Government to join them in coming to a preliminary understanding with the Chilean Government as to the constitution of the proposed Commission and as to the nature of the questions which it would have to deal with.

That they intended only to appeal to the sentiments of equity of the Chilean nation in regard to the indemnification of their nationals, and to assert a right.

* Confidential No. 4602.

Question of right to indemnity not to be submitted to Commission.

That they deemed it essential that the Commission should not be considered as a Tribunal of Arbitration assembled to decide on the principle of indemnity, but simply as a Commission of Liquidation, charged with the duty of examining the complaints of the parties interested, and of collecting the elements necessary for the assessment and distribution of such compensation as might be accorded to them. That they urged that a preliminary declaration should be obtained from the Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs, establishing that the question of the right to indemnity should not be put before the Commission.

That it would seem not improbable that the above communication from the French Government was prompted by the recent claims of compensation arising out of the bombardment of Sfax by the French troops, and as bearing on the question raised by the note verbale, Sir J. Pauncefote inclosed a Foreign Office Memorandum* and a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office to the Admiralty† containing suggestions for instructions to Captain Tryon, of Her Majesty's ship "Monarch," who acted as British Delegate on the Commission appointed by the French Government to inquire into the losses inflicted on neutrals by the bombardment above referred to. That your Lordship desired our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the communication of the French Ambassador.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Subject to reservations, no objection to common action with France.

That the general principle which the French Government are desirous of maintaining, viz., that foreign subjects suffering from a war have no greater title to compensation than the natives of the country where it is carried on, appears to be in accord with the views which have been entertained by the Government of this country.

There may, however, be cases where a foreign Power would have a special claim to compensation on behalf of its subjects. As, for example, in case of the wanton violation of the premises of the Ambassador or Consular buildings protected by the national flag.

There may also be cases in which excesses on the part of soldiers may have arisen in consequence of the Government they serve not having exercised due care in restraining them or in keeping them under proper command.

Subject to these reservations (in case there should be such instances) there would not seem to be any objection to Her Majesty's Government taking common action with the French Government in the course suggested.

Indeed, it would seem in the interest of British subjects who have sustained losses that such a preliminary declaration as that suggested should be obtained from the Chilean Minister for Foreign Affairs.

My Lord,

Compensation to neutrals for injuries inflicted during war.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that on the receipt of our Report of the 19th May, your Lordship addressed a letter to the French Ambassador in London, stating, in reply to the note verbale communicated by M. Challemel-Lacour on the 24th January last, that, subject to certain reservations respecting exceptional cases, Her Majesty's Government acquiesced in the general principle laid down by the French Government that "foreign subjects suffering from a war have no greater title to compensation than the natives of the country where it is carried on."

That previously to the above correspondence a Memorandum, dated the 21st February last, had been left at the Foreign Office by the Italian Ambassador, in which it was stated that the views of the French Government on the question of the claims against Chile had also been communicated to the Italian Government; that the latter took exception to those views, and desired to be informed of the opinion of Her Majesty's Government.

* Foreign Office Memorandum, December 7, 1875.
† To Admiralty, September 20, 1881.

That, accordingly, on the 17th June a letter was addressed to his Excellency by your Lordship, informing him that the general principle which the French Government were desirous of maintaining appeared to be in accord with the views which had been entertained by his Government subject to the reservations indicated in our Report of the 19th May.

That General Menabrea had forwarded to the Foreign Office a pro-memoriá, containing an exposition of the views of his Government.

Italian proposals and objections to British note.

That the Italian Government considered that the reservation of exceptional cases mentioned in your Lordship's note was far from complete, and that they maintained the proposition that a right to indemnity existed in all cases of injury and losses caused by a war to neutrals, which were not justified by force majeure or by military necessity.

That to that proposition they invited the adhesion of Her Majesty's Government, and intimated that, should it not receive the support of the other Powers, they would feel compelled to adopt such a line as would, according to their views, best protect Italian interests.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote observed that, in your Lordship's notes to M. Tissot and to General Menabrea, certain exceptional cases were mentioned exempli gratia, and that no attempt was made to define all the cases to which the reservation of Her Majesty's Government applied, and it appeared to your Lordship that it might be desirable not to commit Her Majesty's Government to any fixed rule on the subject, but to deal with those cases as they arose, according to their particular circumstances.

That, moreover, the rule laid down by the Italian Government would leave the question in a state of vagueness and uncertainty, as there would probably be not unfrequently a conflict of opinion as to whether the circumstances constituted a case of force majeure or military necessity.

That your Lordship requested our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government could properly express their adhesion to the proposition of law laid down in General Menabrea's pro-memoriá of the 3rd July, and in which the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government was invited by M. Mancini.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Italian and British views substantially similar.

That we think it probable that there is no substantial difference between the views of Her Majesty's Government and those entertained by the Government of Italy.

The exceptional cases referred to in the notes of your Lordship to M. Tissot and General Menabrea were given only by way of illustration, and not as an exhaustive statement of all such cases.

We think, too, that the rule suggested by the Italian Government would probably be found to cover the class of cases of which illustrations were given.

Rule proposed by Italy covers exceptional cases referred to, but is too vague.

But we quite concur with your Lordship in the view that it would not be desirable to commit Her Majesty's Government to any fixed rule on the subject, but that cases should be dealt with as they arise, according to their particular circumstances; and we agree, further, that the suggested rule is too vague and uncertain to be of any use in limiting international controversy with regard to matters such as those which have given rise to the present question.

Memorandum by the Attorney-General respecting the Case of the "Socrates" and "Diogenes."

"Socrates" and "Diogenes": their use against Chile should be prevented.

I THINK steps should be taken to prevent these vessels leaving English waters without some security being obtained that they will not be used against Chilean forces or commerce.

Suspicious character of vessels.

It seems almost certain that the original construction at Kiel was on Peruvian behalf. This appears to be established by the submission to the detention, on the suggestion of the Chilean Representatives, for eighteen months, without protest as far as is known.

The vessels are warlike in construction, and if employed for warlike purposes the only States likely at present to afford such employment are Peru or Chile. Some attention also must be given to the representations of the Chilean Minister.

Should issue, but not execute, warrant of seizure, except to prevent their sailing.

Therefore, on the whole, I think the Secretary of State's warrants should be issued and placed in the hands of the Custom-house officers at Southampton, but the vessels need not be absolutely seized until there is danger of their putting to sea.

Warn Mr. Lambert not to use them against friendly State.

Mr. Lambert should be communicated with and informed that the only object of Her Majesty's Government is to prevent the vessels being employed against a friendly State.

Registration of Public Companies. Reports by Mr. Reilly on draft Order in Council.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 29th November last, stating that with reference to our Report of February last, of which a copy was inclosed, relative to the proposed issue of an Order in Council for the Registration of Public Companies in China, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further Reports* by Mr. F. S. Reilly, who was engaged in the preparation of the draft Order.

That Lord Tenterden requested that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the sketch of a plan for limiting the proposed Order to British subjects contained in Mr. Reilly's letter of the 21st September.

That the papers sent to us with Lord Tenterden's letter of the 13th January† were returned therewith for convenience of reference, and that Lord Tenterden was to add an extract from the "Times" of the 24th November, in which various reasons were urged in favour of the immediate extension, to the British community in China, of the facilities which it was proposed to confer by the Order in Council under consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report:—

Remarks and proposals with regard to.

That, having given careful consideration to the further Reports by Mr. Reilly, which are now before us, we see no reason to modify the opinion expressed in our former Report, and which was in conformity with the view taken in October 1868 by the then Law Officers.

Mr. Reilly appears to us to lose sight altogether of the distinction between the jurisdiction arising from territorial dominion and the limited jurisdiction which various foreign Powers possess, by Treaty, in China.

In the former case (subject to exceptions immaterial to the present question) the territorial law binds all within the territory, subjects and foreigners alike, and governs all contracts made there. In the latter case the subjects of Treaty Powers are excluded from the operation of the territorial law, and are made subject severally to the laws of their own country, which laws alone are competent to prescribe their rights and liabilities.

No doubt, in the case of a Company, created and having its domicile in Great Britain, the rights and liabilities of all its members, as well as of other persons dealing with it, would be regulated by British law; and we agree with Mr. Reilly that by the comity of nations, foreign Courts would give effect to this law. But just in the same way, and for the same reasons, British law would govern the rights and liabilities arising out of a contract of partnership, entered into by two foreigners in this country, for the purpose of carrying on business here. And yet Mr. Reilly would not, of course, suggest that British law would determine (for example) the rights and liabilities arising from a contract of partnership between two Frenchmen or two Germans, in China, for carrying on business there. He must, we presume, admit that these rights and liabilities would be determined by French or German law, as the case might be.

We quite agree with Mr. Reilly, that a French Court in China is as much bound to regard foreign law as a French Court in Paris. But we think that neither Court would be bound to recognize a foreign law, made with reference to China, as being competent to affect any but the subjects of the country which, in exercise of its Treaty powers, enacted it; and we are satisfied that British Courts would take the same view.

Supposing, for example, that two British subjects in China were to enter into a partnership in that country, purporting to act under the provisions, and to comply with the requirements, of a French law promulgated there, and that under that law the liability of a partner were limited to the amount of capital introduced by him:—We apprehend that no effect would be given to such a limitation of liability, either by a British Consular Court in China, or by the Courts of this country, if an action were brought by a creditor of the partnership. And the same principles are applicable to a trading Company, whether founded under British or any foreign law.

We are quite sensible of the practical difficulty of empowering the creation of Companies in China, and limiting the membership in such Companies to British subjects.

But this difficulty is, we think, inevitable, in view of the limited legislative powers which we possess in that country.

With regard to the sketch of the proposed scheme for limiting to British subjects the membership in Companies incorporated in China, we have to make the following observations:—

Par. 1 (A). We concur in this proposal.

Par. 1 (B). We do not think it necessary to require the Court to examine periodically the list of shareholders. We think it would suffice to enable any shareholder or creditor, in the event provided for, to require a liquidation.

Par. 1 (C). We think it undesirable to make any distinction as regards allowing a transfer to non-British subjects between stock and fully paid-up shares and shares not fully paid-up.

Par. 1 (D and E). We suggest that provision should be made to secure that the acceptance of shares, whether on allotment or transfer, should clearly amount, apart from enactments, to an agreement to pay any calls made in respect of them. If this be done, the calls could probably be enforced even though the holder should turn out to be a foreigner. There would still be the risk that he might be held responsible beyond the limit of liability provided for, but this responsibility he may well be left to bear, if he has falsely represented himself to be a British subject.

We do not think it will be necessary to introduce the action of the Court; it would suffice, we think, if the proof that the allottee or transferee was a British subject were required to be given to the satisfaction of the Directors.

Par. 2. We doubt the necessity for such a provision. The Directors, or some of them, would assuredly be shareholders, and therefore necessarily British subjects.

* Mr. Reilly, June 30 and September 21, 1881.

Par. 3. We think this provision expedient.

Par. 4. We concur in the expediency of excluding Companies limited by guarantee, but we do not see why the power to form unlimited Companies should be excluded.

Provision should be made for the case of shares vesting, by operation of law, in non-British subjects.

Probably the best course would be to forfeit the shares, unless within a given time they were transferred to a British subject, and, in case of liquidation before this was done, to render the estate of the previous holder liable to the calls.

My Lord,

Confiscation of Mr. G. Harman's launches at Foochow for navigating the inland waters of China as passenger steamers.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 15th December last,* stating that he was to transmit to us papers relative to the seizure and confiscation by the Chinese authorities at Foochow of two steam launches, the property of Mr. George Harman, a British subject, engaged in business at that port, and that he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the action taken by the Chinese in the matter was warranted by Treaty. That Lord Tenterden was to transmit to us at the same time copies of the Treaty of Tien-tsin between this country and China of 1858, of the Treaty between France and China of the same year, and of the "Rules" of 1868 referred to in the correspondence.

We are also honoured with a letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 9th ultimo, stating that with reference to the letter from the Foreign Office of the 15th December, in which we were requested to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the legality of the seizure of Mr. Harman's launches by the Chinese authorities at Foochow, he was directed to transmit to us further papers.†

That we should perceive from the inclosures to that letter (1 and 2), that the question of the right of British subjects, under existing Treaties, to use steam launches in the inland waters of China was raised in 1879, and that Sir Thomas Wade's view that no such right could be claimed was supported by the Foreign Office.

But that it was not admitted on that occasion by Her Majesty's Government or by Sir T. Wade that the unauthorized use by a British subject, in the inner waters of China, of a steam launch, carrying no cargo, would render such launch liable to confiscation under Article XLVII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin.

That Sir T. Wade now seemed to be of opinion that Article XLVII applied to such a case, and, therefore, that in the present instance our only ground of complaint was that no joint inquiry took place, as provided by the Regulations agreed to between the two Governments in 1868 (see Mayer's "Treaties," p. 216) for determining whether a British vessel had incurred the penalty of confiscation. That Article XLVII of the Treaty was as follows:—

"British merchant-vessels are not entitled to resort to other than the ports of trade declared open by this Treaty.

"They are not unlawfully to enter other ports in China, or to carry on clandestine trade along the coasts thereof. Any vessel violating this provision shall, with her cargo, be subject to confiscation by the Chinese Government."

That Mr. Harman's launches carry no goods, and were used solely as tugs, or to carry passengers.

It appeared, therefore, to your Lordship that the case hardly came within the purview of Article XLVII of the Treaty, and if that view be correct, it followed that the Chinese authorities, while justified in stopping the launches, were not warranted in confiscating them, for, by Article XII of the French Treaty of Tien-tsin (Mayer's "Treaties," p. 62), the benefit of which could be claimed by Great Britain, under the most-favoured-nation clause, it was provided that—

"Les propriétés de toute nature appartenant à des Français dans l'Empire Chinois seront considérées par les Chinois comme inviolables et seront toujours respectées par eux."

That a similar provision existed in other Treaties between China and other foreign Powers (see Index Mayer's Treaties. Title, "Inviolability of Vessels and Property").

That the most-favoured-nation clause of the British Treaty of Tien-tsin was Article LIV.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the confiscation of Mr. Harman's launches, by the Chinese authorities, was warranted, under Article XLVII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, or otherwise, and, if not, whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government might properly demand their restoration and an indemnity to Mr. Harman for their seizure and detention.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Infraction of Treaty being doubtful, it should not be treated as a question of paramount importance.

That we entertain considerable doubt upon the point whether steam-launches employed for carrying passengers in inland waters are "merchant-vessels" within the meaning of Article XLVII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin. Whilst we incline to the opinion that they are not such merchant-vessels, yet so many considerations may be urged to support an opposite view that we think it will be well, in any representation made to the Chinese Government, to avoid treating this question as one of paramount importance.

But we can find no provision in the Treaty, which would entitle British vessels carrying passengers to navigate the inland waters of China, beyond the limits open to merchant-vessels.

Supposing, then, that there was no right to navigate the river with the steam-launches, and that Article XLVII is inapplicable, the question arises whether it is competent for the Chinese Government to confiscate vessels thus navigating in violation of the law, without an express provision to that effect in the Treaty.

Confiscation, if warranted by Chinese, not contrary to international law.

We apprehend that if the confiscation were warranted by Chinese law, there is nothing in international law to prevent the Chinese law being acted upon, unless the Chinese Government has by Treaty limited their rights in this respect.

It may be contended that such limitation may be found in Article XIII of the French Treaty, the benefit of which can be claimed by virtue of the most-favoured-nation clause in the Treaty of Tien-tsin. But we much doubt whether the 13th clause in the French Treaty applies to a case of infringement of the law in a direction beyond that contemplated by that clause, and we have to suggest that it probably will not be thought expedient strongly to base any representation to the Chinese Government upon any right to claim the benefits of the French Treaty. It also appears to us that the present case is not one of those provided for by the Rules of 1868: Nor do we think that Article XVII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin is applicable, for that Article seems to us to be directed to cases of personal controversy between British and Chinese subjects, and not to a complaint between a British subject and the Chinese Government.

Circumstances of case justify very strong remonstrance.

But assuming that there is an inherent right in the Chinese Government to confiscate British vessels navigating on inland waters, or even assuming that the XLVIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin applies, in its terms to passenger vessels navigating inland waters (which we do not admit), yet there are circumstances in this instance which, we think, will fully justify Her Majesty's Government in making remonstrances of a very strong character to the Chinese Government, to the extent of pointing out that the confiscation is a most arbitrary and unjust act.

Assuming Mr. Harman's statement to be correct, it may be represented to the Chinese Government that these launches have been permitted with the knowledge and apparent sanction of the Chinese authorities (shown by the carrying despatches and towing Government boats) to navigate the river for a long period.

Also that other launches belonging to foreigners are still permitted to do so; that the launches in question were seized on the very day that the attention of the Consul was called to the matter, and before Mr. Harman had any opportunity of complying with the wishes of the Chinese authorities; and, lastly, that one of the launches has been appropriated to the personal use of one of the officials who seized them, showing apparently that the act of seizure proceeded from personal motives rather than from reasons of public policy.

We have only further to suggest that before making such representation it may be well to direct that inquiry should be made, in order to ascertain whether Mr. Harman's statements are accurate.

My Lord,

Export duty on tea from Treaty ports. Memorial as to British right to reduction granted to Russia under Treaty of Kuldja.

WE were favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th March last, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a Memorial addressed to your Lordship by the London Chamber of Commerce, in which an important question was raised as to the right of Great Britain to claim the same reduction on the export duty on tea from the Treaty ports of China as was conceded to Russia under the Treaty of Kuldja, on the export duty on tea carried to Russia by land.

That the British Treaty with China contained the following clauses:—

"Article XXIV. It is agreed that British subjects shall pay on all merchandize imported or exported by them the duties prescribed by the Tariff, but in no case shall they be called upon to pay other or higher duties than are required of the subjects of any other foreign nation.

"Article XXV. Import duties shall be considered payable on the landing of the goods, and duties of export on the shipment of the same.

"Article LIV. The British Government and its subjects are hereby confirmed in all privileges, immunities, and advantages conferred on them by previous Treaties, and it is hereby expressly stipulated that the British Government and its subjects will be allowed free and equal participation in all privileges, immunities, and advantages that may have been, or may be hereafter, granted by His Majesty the Emperor of China to the Government or subjects of any other nation."

That the Treaty of Kuldja contained the following Article:—

"Article XVI. In future the Russian land trade will be more extensive than formerly. It would be better to fix upon a Tariff upon goods entering and leaving China, which would be done by Russia and China agreeing upon duties upon imports and exports at an average of about 5 per cent. on their value. But previous to the establishment of a Tariff, the duty on lower teas, now levied at the same rate as on higher teas, will be reduced, and the Chinese Tsung-li Yamen shall, in concert with the Russian Plenipotentiary at Peking, decide upon this reduction with one year after the exchange of ratifications."

That the contention of the memorialists was that the reduction of duty granted to Russian subjects exporting tea into Russia over the land frontier might be claimed under the most-favoured-nation clauses of the British Treaty for British subjects exporting tea from the Treaty ports of China.

Russ!a maintains principle of differential duty in favour of goods imported by land.

That from the despatch of Her Majesty's Ambassador (which was inclosed), it appeared that the Russian Government maintained that it was a recognized principle, that a different Tariff existed for goods imported by land and those imported by sea, and that that principle was not over-ridden by a most-favoured-nation clause.

That that principle, if true, would be equally applicable to export Tariffs. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to a memorandum prepared in your Lordship's Department (which was inclosed), from the cases cited in which it would appear that although such a difference of Tariff treatment might sometimes exist, and although, special advantages might in some cases have been granted to land frontier trade, yet the principle of a different treatment of land and sea frontier trade had not been recognized, as the advantages in question were found to have been specially reserved and provided for by the Powers granting them to one Power wherever they had concluded most-favoured-nation Treaties with any third Powers.

That Her Majesty's Ambassador was instructed to inform the Russian Government that Her Majesty's Government did not recognize the principle put forward by them, and to add that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the advantages, when any granted to land frontier trade applied to local traffic only, and not to the general trade of the conterminous countries (see to Lord Dufferin, No. 22, Commercial, the 23rd August, 1880).

That it did not appear, however, whether that instruction was ever carried out, and that, at any rate, no reply to the views expressed in it had been received by Her Majesty's Government from that of Russia.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote transmitted with his letter—

1. Memorial of London Chamber of Commerce, 16th January, 1882.
2. Treaty of Tien-tsin, 26th June, 1858. No. 448.
3. Treaty of Kuldja, $\frac{12}{24}$th February, 1881. Confidential No. 4476*.
4. Lord Dufferin's despatch No. 37 of the 12th July, 1880.
5. Foreign Office Memorandum thereon, 3rd August, 1880 (Sir E. Hertslet). Confidential No. 4278.
6. Foreign Office despatch to Lord Dufferin No. 22, Commercial, the 23rd August, 1880.
7. Foreign Office despatch to Sir E. Thornton (Extract), No. 4, the 26th January, 1882.
8. Sir E. Thornton's No. 12 of the 15th February, 1882.

And that he was to request us to take the above-mentioned papers into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it was open to the Chinese Government to maintain that, under the most-favoured-nation Treaty clauses of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, British subjects could only claim to export teas viâ Russia on the same terms as those accorded to Russian subjects by Article XVI of the Treaty of Kuldja, or whether British subjects were entitled, as contended by the memorialists, to claim "the application of the ad valorem reduction on teas of the Treaty of Kuldja to British exports of tea from Chinese Treaty ports."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report that the question submitted to us is one involving serious difficulties.

Difficulty of putting land and sea traffic on the same footing.

It would be highly prejudicial to the interests of this country to admit as a general principle that goods imported or exported over a land frontier could be imported or exported on more favourable terms than goods arriving or dispatched by sea without any breach of the most-favoured-nation clause. And we do not think such a contention could be maintained on a reasonable construction of the clause in our commercial Treaties. On the other hand, there are grave difficulties in the way of maintaining that when two countries have a land frontier, no exceptional provisions can be made respecting frontier traffic without a violation of the most-favoured-nation clause. It would obviously be very difficult to apply the ordinary fiscal laws in the case of such traffic, and it appears to have been a frequent practice to make a distinction in favour of frontier traffic.

We do not gather from Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum that any Power has ever maintained the position, that under the most-favoured-nation clause it was entitled to claim the more favourable treatment accorded to frontier traffic.

The provisions in the Treaties to which Sir E. Hertslet refers, excluding from the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause the favours granted to frontier traffic, do not necessarily show that in the absence of such stipulations the more favourable treatment could be claimed for other imports and exports.

It is, of course, extremely difficult to determine what are the limits within which special exemptions may be allowed to traffic passing over a land frontier without establishing a claim on the part of a nation entitled to the benefit of the most-favoured-nation clause.

Probably it is impossible to lay down any general rule, and each case must be dealt with on its own special circumstances.

There are in the case submitted to us peculiar difficulties in the way of insisting on the claim contended for by the memorialists.

In November 1860 a Treaty was concluded between Russia and China containing the following provision (see page 10 Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum):—

"Article 4. Sur toute la ligne-frontière établie par l'Article I$^{er}$ du présent Traité, un commerce d'échange, libre et franc de droits, est autorisé entre les sujets des deux pays.

1882

"Les chefs locaux des frontières doivent accorder une protection particulière à ce commerce et à ceux qui l'exercent."

At that time the Treaty of this country with China of the 26th June, 1858, was in force, which contained (Article LIV) a most-favoured-nation clause drawn in very broad terms, yet no claim appears to have been put forward by this country to the benefit of the stipulation contained in the Treaty with Russia.

The XVIth Article of the Kuldja Treaty is somewhat different to the Article quoted from the former Treaty; but having regard to what had previously taken place, we think this would not be a desirable case in which to raise the important question of the distinction between frontier and sea traffic, and in the circumstances we do not think Her Majesty's Government could successfully establish against the Chinese Government the claim put forward by the memorialists.

Advisable to advance claim.

It is a claim, in our opinion, which Her Majesty's Government would be well entitled to advance, and if it was thought probable that the Chinese Government would entertain it favourably, it might be well to seek to obtain the advantage of it. But this is a matter upon which we are of course unable to form any opinion.

No. 9.

Foreign Office, June 14, 1882.

Gentlemen,

Extradition from Hong Kong of fugitive criminals to Chinese Government.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to request that you will favour him with your opinion on the following point:—*

By Article XXI of the Treaty of the 26th June between Great Britain and China, commonly known as the Treaty of Tien-tsin, it is provided that—

"If criminals, subjects of China, shall take refuge in Hong Kong, or on board the British ships there, they shall, upon due requisition by the Chinese authorities, be searched for, and, on proof of their guilt, be delivered up.

"In like manner, if Chinese offenders take refuge in the houses or on board the vessels of British subjects at the open ports, they shall not be harboured or concealed, but shall be delivered up, on due requisition by the Chinese authorities addressed to the British Consul." (Hertslet's "Treaties on Trade," China, p. 22.)

The Extradition Clause above cited is carried out in Hong Kong under Ordinance No. 2 of 1850 and Ordinance No. 2 of 1871.

The first case which attracted public attention to the subject was that of the surrender by the Government of Hong Kong of a fugitive described as the Mo-Wong in 1865, the particulars of which will be found in the Parliamentary Paper sent herewith.

In consequence of the apprehensions entertained that fugitives surrendered to the Chinese authorities might be subjected to torture, it has been the practice of the Government of Hong Kong, in pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to decline to surrender any fugitive under the Treaty unless a promise in writing be previously given by the Viceroy of Canton to Her Majesty's Consul there, that no torture should be applied.

Promise to refrain from torture of such criminals not now observed.

This promise has invariably been given; and until recently there appeared no reason to believe that it has not been faithfully observed. Rumours, however, have been lately circulated in the public press of Hong Kong to the effect that the promise was habitually disregarded; and in August 1880 Mr. Hewlett, Her Majesty's Consul at Canton, was called on for a Report on the subject, and especially with reference to the case of thirteen prisoners who had been surrendered during the previous year, and who were alleged to have been tortured.

Proceedings in recent extradition cases.

You will perceive from Mr. Hewlett's Report, contained in his despatch No. 14 of the 29th April, 1881, that he entertains the conviction that, "in spite of the Viceroy's explicit promise to the contrary, torture in a horrible form was had recourse to in order to extort a confession from some of the thirteen criminals whom the Hong Kong Government had given up to the Canton authorities." In the meanwhile, a fresh demand had been made by the Viceroy to the Government of Hong Kong for the surrender of thirteen other fugitives charged with murder, and Consul Hewlett informed the Governor of Hong Kong that the sentence that must be passed on those accused persons, if they are convicted, is that of being put to death by the "slow and painful process," a form of Chinese torture better known in Europe under the name of "slicing into a thousand pieces." He also stated that the use of torture being prescribed by the Chinese Penal Code, no promise not to torture, even when given by so high an authority as a Viceroy, could be held to be binding. (Consul Hewlett, No. 14 of the 29th April, 1881; Colonial Office letter of the 2nd March, 1882, Inclosure, pp. 35 and 153.)

The Governor of Hong Kong then appealed to Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, and I am to invite your attention to Sir T. Wade's letter to Governor Sir J. Pope Hennessy of the 8th November, 1881 (Colonial Office letter of the 2nd March, 1882, Inclosure, p. 287), which is confirmatory of the opinion expressed by Consul Hewlett.

The thirteen prisoners were eventually released by the Supreme Court of Hong Kong on a writ of habeas corpus, by reason of some informalities in their committal by the magistrate, under Ordinance No. 2 of 1850, and in the return to the writ. (Ibid., pp. 301 and 347.)

It appears, however, that another case is now pending in Hong Kong, that of two fugitives whose surrender is claimed by the Chinese Officer Commanding at Kowloon, near Hong Kong, on a charge of piracy.

In the opinion of the Colonial Attorney-General, the piracy was committed in Chinese waters, and is not justiciable, therefore, by the Supreme Court of Hong Kong as piracy jure gentium. (Colonial Office letter of the 19th May, 1882, Inclosure, p. 37.)

The crime, therefore, is within the Treaty. (Attorney-General of Hong Kong v. Kwok-Asing, 5 Law Rep., Priv. Co., 198.) But Consul Hewlett has again reported, with reference to this particular case, that the prisoners, if surrendered, will certainly be tortured (Colonial Office, May 8, 1882), and it has become necessary to decide what action shall be taken with regard to the demand for their surrender of these fugitives, and also what course should be followed in future by Her Majesty's Government with respect to extradition under the Treaty of Tien-tsin.

In the despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Acting Governor of Hong Kong of the 10th August, 1865 (Parliamentary Paper, p. 1), reference is made to a previous despatch, in which it had been laid down that the humane administration of justice was an indispensable condition of handing over captured pirates to the Chinese Government for trial and punishment, and, as before stated, it has been the invariable practice, since the "Mo-Wong" case, to require, as a condition of the surrender of a fugitive under the Treaty, an assurance in writing that no torture will be inflicted.

This promise, however, is not claimable as of right under the Treaty, and the Viceroy, in his letter of the 12th April, 1881, to Consul Hewlett, respecting the case of the thirteen fugitives (Inclosure in Colonial Office letter of the 2nd March, 1882, p. 207), observes that "British officials are bound by unmistakable Treaty provisions to take steps for delivering up Chinese criminals who have taken refuge in Hong Kong;" and that, "as regards the non-employment of torture at the trial and investigation held subsequently to their rendition, this form of procedure was first yielded by the former Viceroy, Jui, by way of concession, and in deference to the wishes of British officials."

The Viceroy, in a further letter, dated the 19th December last, to Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Canton (Colonial Office letter of the 19th May, 1882, Inclosure, p. 5), expressed his astonishment at the release of the thirteen prisoners by the Supreme Court of Hong Kong.

The reply to this communication will be found in the Colonial Office letter of the 27th May, 1882.

Proposed suspension of Extradition Clause of Treaty of Tien-tsin.

In view of Sir T. Wade's Report, and especially of the statement therein recorded of one of the Ministers of the Yamên, that he could not understand how a Governor-General (meaning the Viceroy) should have given a promise not to do what he must have known Chinese law would require him to do, Lord Granville is disposed to think that unless and until Her Majesty's Minister at Peking shall be able to announce the conclusion of a satisfactory arrangement with the Chinese Government which will relieve Her Majesty's Government from all apprehension as to the risk of fugitives who may be surrendered by the Hong Kong Government being subjected to torture for any purpose, whether of evidence, confession, or punishment, the Extradition Clause of the Treaty of Tien-tsin should be suspended in its operation, and Chinese criminals taking refuge in Hong Kong should be expelled from the island as persons dangerous to the peace and good order of the Colony. (See Foreign Office to Colonial Office of the 18th April, and reply of Colonial Office of the 5th May.)

But before sending instructions in this sense to Sir T. Wade, I am to state that Lord Granville would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether a refusal on the part of Her Majesty's Government to carry out Article XXI of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, pending such an arrangement between the two Governments as above suggested, would give the Chinese Government the right to denounce the whole Treaty. On this point I am to refer you to the following passage in 1 Calvo, p. 734, § 613:—

> "En thèse générale, si l'on considère la Convention comme un ensemble indivisible, il faut admettre qu'un semblable refus, ne porta-t-il que sur un seul point, rend caduc le Traité tout entier, et cela en vertu de l'axiome que le principal emporte l'accessoire.
> "La non-exécution peut, d'ailleurs, ne porter que sur une clause relativement secondaire et ne pas impliquer l'intention de se soustraire des autres obligations qui découlent du Traité. Dans ce cas il n'y a pas nécessairement rupture complète et définitive, mais seulement matière à pourparlers et à négociations, en d'autres termes, un effet suspensif jusqu'à ce que les motifs de refus aient pu être appréciés en due forme."

In the event of your being of opinion that the proposed suspension of extradition under Article XXI would imperil the whole Treaty, I am to request that you will favour Lord Granville with any suggestions that may occur to you to meet the difficulty which has arisen in the present case, and as regards the course to be pursued in future with reference to this question.

Gentlemen,

Sending further papers.

WITH reference to my letter of the 14th instant, respecting the Extradition Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of Lord Granville, a Report of the Law Officers of the Crown on the same subject, and a correspondence which has an important bearing on the question submitted to you.

You will perceive from these papers that in 1869 Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Lord Derby, then Lord Stanley) decided, for the reasons stated in the correspondence, that Her Majesty's Government should be satisfied with the concession made by the Chinese Government that no torture should be resorted to in the execution of prisoners sentenced to death, where such prisoners had been surrendered by the British Government under the XXIst Article of the Treaty.

The Colonial Office, however, were dissatisfied with this solution of the question, and no fugitive is surrendered by the Governor of Hong Kong without a written assurance from the Viceroy of Canton to Her Majesty's Consul that no torture will be applied at all.

But, as stated in my letter of the 14th instant, doubts have lately arisen as to whether the promise is observed, either as regards the execution of prisoners or in their treatment during the trial for the purposes of evidence or confession.

The papers to which I am to invite your particular attention are—

1. Law Officers' Report of the 25th November, 1865.*
2. Foreign Office despatch to Sir R. Alcock of the 11th December, 1865.†
3. Sir R. Alcock's reply No. 85 of the 11th May, 1866 (first four pages MS. correspondence).

July 22, 1882.

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Suspension of Extradition Clause would imperil whole Treaty.

That, in our opinion, the proposed suspension of extradition under Article XXI would imperil the whole Treaty.

Assuming the view taken by the Attorney- and Solicitor-General in their Report of the 26th November, 1865, to be well founded, which we see no reason to doubt, in refusing to carry out the extradition provisions we should be refusing to perform an obligation we have contracted under the Treaty because we object to the consequences of fulfilling that obligation.

Under these circumstances, whatever be the abstract right of one Contracting Party to denounce the entire Treaty because the other Contracting Party refuses to comply with some of its stipulations, we think it would be impossible to maintain that the Chinese Government had not an equal right, with ourselves, to refuse compliance with any or all of the obligations which the Treaty imposes upon it.

Should come to arrangement with Chinese Government.

It is difficult to suggest any satisfactory course that can be pursued. But it would seem best to avoid, if possible, an absolute refusal to carry out Article XXI of the Treaty, and to continue the endeavour to come to some satisfactory arrangement with the Chinese Government.

We have, &c.

In the last paragraph of your Report of the 15th August last (Correspondence, Part I, p. 75, Paper A), you dealt with the claim put forward by Mr. Blaine in his despatch of the 24th June, 1881 (ibid., p. 63), to the exclusive right of the United States to guarantee the neutrality of the canal, and to determine the conditions of its use, and with his opposition to any concerted action of the European Powers for that purpose.

In accordance with the suggestion contained in your Report, Lord Granville, on the 10th November, addressed a letter to the United States' Chargé d'Affaires with reference to Mr. Blaine's despatch, pointing out that the position of Great Britain and the United States with reference to the canal, irrespective of the magnitude of the commercial relations of the former Power with countries to and from which, if completed, it will form the highway, is determined by the engagements entered into by them respectively in the Convention which was signed at Washington on the 19th April, 1850, commonly known as the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty; and adding that Her Majesty's Government relied with confidence upon the observance of all the engagements of that Treaty (Paper A, p. 96).

A further correspondence has since taken place between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States, in consequence of a desire having been expressed by the Cabinet of Washington that certain modifications should be introduced into the Convention of 1850.

This correspondence, up to the 14th January, has been presented to Parliament, and is inclosed herewith (Paper B).

Views of United States as to their Continental policy and the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

A further despatch addressed by Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell has recently been communicated to Her Majesty's Government, in which the views of the Government of the United States, with regard to their Continental policy and the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, are argued in great detail (Papers C and I).

I am to invite your attention to a Memorandum thereon which has been drawn up by Sir E. Hertslet (Paper D), together with a Memorandum alluded to therein (Paper E); also to a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet on the "Declaration" respecting British Honduras made on the exchange of the ratifications of the Convention with the United States of the 19th April, 1850, respecting Central America (Paper F). In connection with the "Monroe Doctrine" I am to inclose an extract from the "Southern Law Review" (Paper G), and to refer to Professor Woolsey's exposition of that doctrine at pp. 54-57 of his work on International Law, of which a copy is sent herewith (M). In the Confidential Print, 1881, Part I, you will find at pp. 29-47 three Memoranda by Sir E. Hertslet, with their Annexes, which have already been before you, and which deal with some of the most important points discussed in Mr. Frelinghuysen's despatch.

You will observe that Mr. Frelinghuysen, at the close of his despatch, renews Mr. Blaine's contention, that the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had reference only to the interoceanic route then in contemplation, and that Article VIII of that Treaty must be read subject to the provisions of the earlier Treaty of 1846 between the United States and New Grenada, which, as he alleges, secures to the United States the "sole Protectorate" of any transit by the Panamá route.

As regards this contention, I am to refer you to Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 6th May, 1881 (Correspondence, Part I, p. 29, Paper A), and to his Memorandum of the 28th January, 1879 (Annex B., ibid, p. 35); also to Mr. Drummond's despatch No. 326 of the 5th November, 1881 (Paper A, p. 102), transmitting an article published in the New York "Evening Post," in which Mr. Frelinghuysen's argument in support of the right of sole guarantee and Protectorate claimed by him for the United States is severely criticized.

It is also adversely criticized in an extract from the New York "Tribune" transmitted in Mr. West's despatches Nos. 252 and 262 of the 9th and 24th June last (Papers I and N); while it is supported in articles from the New York "Times" and "Herald" transmitted in his despatches Nos. 249 and 253 of the 7th and 11th June (Papers H and J).

Views of the United States in 1869 as to guarantee of the canal under Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

In conclusion, I am to draw your attention to the following incident which occurred in 1869. On the 14th January of that year the United States signed a Treaty with Colombia (unratified) providing for the survey and location of any interoceanic ship-canal anywhere within its territory, and the IIIrd Article of that Treaty appearing to be in conflict with the rights of Great Britain under Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, Sir E. Thornton, then Her Majesty's Representative at Washington, was instructed to make a representation on the subject to the United States' Government.

In his despatch to the Earl of Clarendon No. 146 of the 19th April, 1869 (Paper L), Sir E. Thornton transmitted a Memorandum which had been handed to him unofficially by Mr. Hamilton Fish, and which had been drawn up by Mr. Peshine Smith, employed in the Department of State as Examiner of Claims. Mr. Fish stated that this Memorandum contained the general views of the United States' Government upon the matter.

On reference to this document it will be found that, far from claiming the right to an exclusive Protectorate over any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Panamá, the United States' Government, at that time, recognized the VIIIth Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty as distinctly applicable to such a canal, and even maintained that, the obligations of that Article being reciprocal, they were entitled to call upon Great Britain to unite in guaranteeing its protection and neutrality.

Before replying to Mr. Frelinghuysen's communication of the 8th May last, Lord Granville would be glad to be favoured with your observations on the arguments therein contained.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

---

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received August 30, 1882.)

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That three questions are raised by the despatch of Mr. Frelinghuysen:—

(1.) As to the meaning and effect of Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

(2.) Whether acts have been done by Great Britain in violation of the Treaty so as to entitle the United States to avoid it.

(3.) With regard to the proposal made by Mr. Frelinghuysen, not only to retain and renew certain provisions of the Treaty, but to make a new Agreement defining the distance from each end of the Canal where captures may be made by a belligerent in time of war.

Meaning and effect of Article VIII of Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

1. The points relating to Article VIII are dealt with by Sir E. Hertslet in his Memorandum of the 28th January, 1879. The meaning of the Article does not appear open to much real doubt. The Contracting Parties thereby "agree to extend their protection by Treaty stipulations to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway," across the Isthmus, and especially to interoceanic communication by way of Tehuantepec or Panamá.

This is in effect an Agreement that all the prior provisions of the Treaty with reference to the protection of the particular ship-canal then in contemplation shall, in principle, be applied to any ship-canal thereafter constructed. It is none the less an Agreement, because its application to any canal thereafter made is to be carried into effect by Treaty stipulations between the two Powers.

Article VIII not inconsistent with United States' Treaty with New Granada of 1846.

There is not, in our opinion, any force in the objection that the view contended for by Great Britain is inconsistent with the Treaty of 1846 between the United States and New Granada.

We fail to see any such inconsistency or anything in that Treaty to prevent the United States from carrying out the Agreement with Great Britain jointly to protect and guarantee the neutrality and security of the Canal when completed.

The point is fully discussed by Sir E. Hertslet in his Memorandum of the 6th May, 1881, and we concur in the views there expressed, which seem to be in complete accordance with the views of the United States' Government, contained in the Memorandum transmitted by Sir E. Thornton to Lord Clarendon in his despatch of the 19th April, 1869.

British exercise of sovereignty over British Honduras does not render the Treaty voidable by the United States.

2. The ground upon which it is alleged that the Treaty is voidable at the pleasure of the United States is that Great Britain has violated, and continues to violate, its provisions by exercising sovereignty over British Honduras, and treating that territory as a British Colony. This contention appears to us wholly untenable.

It is clear that neither of the negotiators of the Treaty intended, nor did the Government of this country, that the language of Article I describing the country not to be occupied should include British Honduras. This was put upon record at the time by Mr. Clayton, coupled with the statement that the Senate of the United States "perfectly understood that the Treaty did not include British Honduras."

And after this and what took place in 1853 (see Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum of the 9th June, 1871), it seems opposed to all sound principle that the United States should now claim to abrogate the Treaty of 1850 by reason of the existence of a state of things which has prevailed, to their knowledge, ever since its ratification, to which the Treaty was never intended to apply, and notwithstanding the known existence of which they have more than once recognized the Treaty as subsisting.

It seems, indeed, to be suggested that, at the time the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was made, Honduras was only a British settlement under Spanish-American sovereignty, and that it has since been converted into a British possession, and that to this the United States has never given its assent.

The facts set out in Mr. Scarlett's Memorandum of the 31st October, 1872, entirely dispose of this point. It is clear that the sovereignty of British Honduras was acquired by conquest, and was possessed by this country, long prior to the time of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty; and the Postal Convention of the 11th August, 1869, shows that the United States recognized Honduras as a "Colony" of Great Britain.

From the information before us, we do not gather that there has been any change in the relation of this country to British Honduras since 1850.

The contention that "a settlement" has been converted into "a possession," and thereby a material change effected, in consequence of the employment of the word "possession" in the Treaty of 1859, seems to us entirely untenable.

United States' proposal as to provisions of Treaty and capture of vessels using the Canal a question of policy.

3. On the proposal made by Mr. Frelinghuysen, we have nothing to add to the Memorandum of Sir E. Hertslet of the 16th June, 1882. There would, no doubt, be advantages in defining by agreement the distance from each end of the Canal where captures may be made by belligerents; but whether an endeavour should be made to arrive at an agreement on the point is a question of policy upon which we do not feel called upon to express an opinion.

My Lord, Temple, February 1, 1882.

New Egyptian Decree for control of press.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he had the honour to inclose, by your Lordship's direction, three despatches* from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo, relative to a new Decree for the control of the press in Egypt, which had lately been promulgated by the Khedive.

That Sir J. Pauncefote called our particular attention to Sir E. Malet's despatch No. 380, and to its inclosures, from Mr. Cookson and Mr. Philip, the proprietor of the "Egyptian Gazette," describing the manner in which the law might injuriously affect British subjects who were editors of newspapers in Egypt, and contesting the right of the Egyptian Government to enforce it in such cases until it had been accepted by Her Majesty's Government. That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting against the application of that Decree to British subjects, or, whether they should content themselves with instructing Sir E. Malet to point out the objectionable character of some of the Articles, notably Articles 17, 20, and 21, and endeavour to obtain their modification.

That Sir J. Pauncefote inclosed, for convenience of reference, several printed Reports by the Law Officers and the Queen's Advocate between the years 1865–75 on questions of a supposed conflict between the Press Laws of Turkey and the privileges enjoyed by foreigners under the Capitulations.

* Sir E. Malet, No. 364 of 3rd December, No. 380 of 19th December, and No. 387 of 22nd December, 1881.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

As to power of Khedive to issue such Decree.

That we have not before us any information on the point, but we assume that the Decree of the Khedive for the control of the press was within his legislative powers, even though it should conflict with the general Ottoman Press Law.

If this assumption be well founded, we are of opinion that it is competent to the Egyptian Government either to prohibit absolutely the publication of any newspapers or other writings by a British subject, or to authorize their publication on any conditions it pleases, provided always that these conditions are not contrary to the rights secured to this country by Treaty (see Law Officers' Report of the 14th February, 1865).

It would not, of course, be competent to the Egyptian Government to prosecute a British subject for any criminal offence against this or any other law, except in accordance with the Capitulations.

But we think it is within the power of that Government to prohibit the publication of a newspaper, except on the terms that the proprietor should deposit a certain sum by way of security, and permit that sum or any part of it to be forfeited from time to time, in case, in the opinion of the Egyptian Ministers, the conditions imposed by law upon press publications in Egypt have not been complied with.

Protest against it not justifiable, but modification of objectionable Articles should be obtained.

We think, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in protesting against the application of this Decree to British subjects, but that they should content themselves with instructing Sir E. Malet to point out the objectionable character of some of the Articles, notably Articles 17, 20, and 21, and endeavour to obtain their modification.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence* relating to the Petition for pardon presented by Moussa Orgi, who was then undergoing at Malta a sentence of five years' penal servitude, passed upon him by Her Majesty's Consular Court at Alexandria on the 18th June, 1880.

That the prisoner, who was at that time 18 years of age, was convicted of receiving stolen goods, and in 1874, when about 12 years of age, was sentenced to imprisonment for a month and a whipping for larceny.

That the depositions in the latter case were very incomplete.

That Mr. Lister was to request us to be so good as to take the Petition under our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, having regard to the youth of the prisoner, or any other considerations, his punishment, or any part of it, could properly be remitted.

Temple, June 17, 1882.

My Lord,

Chartering of vessels by British Government for British refugees at Alexandria.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 15th instant, stating that the alarm caused by the recent disturbances at Alexandria among the foreign residents in Egypt was inducing a large number of British subjects to leave the country, and that it appeared from the latest accounts that they were crowding every available passenger-vessel and seeking shelter on board Her Majesty's ships.

That, in that emergency, Her Majesty's Government were chartering several large passenger-vessels in the Mediterranean, and had placed them at the disposal of Sir B. Seymour, the Admiral in command of the British squadron at Alexandria.

That that measure of precaution had been adopted in order to relieve the Admiral from the embarrassment caused to him by his inability to dispose of the numerous fugitives appealing to him for shelter.

That the presence of those vessels, however, might be interpreted by the British residents as an indication of the existence of peril, and as an invitation to leave.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether it was desirable that a public notification should be issued to the British community at Alexandria, informing them that in consequence of the over-crowding of the passenger-ships then available at Alexandria those vessels had been placed at the disposal of the Admiral, who would make such arrangements as he might think necessary, in concert with Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, to enable British subjects who might desire to leave the country to secure passengers. That your Lordship was apprehensive that, although, as your Lordship conceived, no liability could attach to Her Majesty's Government for any loss of property or other injury which might be sustained by British subjects by reason of their sudden departure from Egypt, under present circumstances a contrary impression might prevail among the British community there, and induce many to leave the country and abandon their property.

That your Lordship, therefore, desired our opinion as to whether it was desirable to issue any public notification on that or any other subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Notice as to vessels a question for British Representatives in Egypt.

That we think that the question to what extent, and in what form, a notification should be made to British subjects that the vessels have been chartered and placed at the disposal of the Admiral for the purpose of receiving British subjects desirous of leaving Egypt, must be solved by the Representatives of Her Majesty's Government in Alexandria.

Notice as to non-liability of Government for losses of refugees not necessary.

As far as we can judge, it appears to us that there is no necessity to give any intimation that Her Majesty's Government do not incur any liability to those who think it advisable, for the purpose of their own safety, to leave Egypt.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 24, 1882.

Claims for British losses through disturbances at Alexandria. Claims of Mr. R. Dobson and Mr. J. Richardson.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a letter from Mr. Joseph Richardson, and one from Mr. Robert Dobson,[*] each of them claiming 10,000*l.* from the Egyptian Government on account of the murder of his son during the recent disorders at Alexandria.

[*] Mr. R. Dobson, June 13; Mr. J. Richardson, June 19, 1882.

Earl Granville informed the Turkish Ambassador on the 17th instant that Her Majesty's Government considered that the Porte, as the sovereign Power, was responsible in ultimate resort for the serious outrages and the loss of English life and property which had resulted from the riots, and that, considering the presence of Dervish Pasha in Egypt at the time as the Sultan's Special Commissioner, Her Majesty's Government must hold the Porte to be bound to see that proper redress was made, and on the same day Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt was instructed by telegraph to let it be clearly understood that the British Government would require full reparation and satisfaction for the outrages committed during the recent disorders.

On the 20th instant Lord Granville stated in the House of Lords that, with regard to outrages on British subjects and loss of their lives or property, Her Majesty's Government had not to address other countries, but had a right to judge themselves what satisfaction or reparation they wanted; that Sir E. Malet[*] had been instructed to make it clearly understood that Her Majesty's Government would require full reparation and satisfaction for the outrages committed during the late disorders at Alexandria; that notice would be given to all British subjects in Egypt to register at the Consulate the claims they might have to put forward, and a similar notice would be given to the relatives of those who had unfortunately been killed.

The instructions which were, as thus stated by Lord Granville, addressed to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, were as follows:—

"Her Majesty's Government intend, when the proper moment arrives, to prefer a claim upon the Egyptian Government for damages and losses sustained by British subjects at Alexandria.

"Take such steps as may be necessary to call upon them to register their claims at the British Consulate, giving notice also to relatives of the killed of intention of Her Majesty's Government."

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople has also been instructed[†] to make an announcement to the Conference of the determination of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

It is probable that numerous applications of the nature of the inclosed letters from Mr. J. Richardson and Mr. R. Dobson will be addressed to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and his Lordship directs me to state that he proposes to reply to such communications in the terms of the first paragraph of the above-quoted instructions to Sir E. Malet, viz., that "Her Majesty's Government intend, when the proper moment arrives, to prefer a claim upon the Egyptian Government for damages and losses sustained by British subjects at Alexandria during the recent disorders."

His Lordship proposes to insist on payment of money to the relatives of the eight British subjects who were killed and to those who were hurt, and of damages for the destruction of property, also on the execution of the guilty parties, and on a salute to the British flag at Alexandria and Cairo.

Lord Granville is also disposed to demand compensation for loss to those who fled from Egypt to avoid violence; but before taking any further action, his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion at your earliest convenience as to the terms of the proposed reply to the letters of Mr. Richardson and Mr. Dobson, and also with any observations you may desire to offer generally on this letter.

I have, &c.

Sir J. Pauncefote to the Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 13, 1882.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of Earl Granville, an Analysis by Lord Tenterden of the papers presented to Parliament respecting Egypt from the 9th September, 1881, to the 31st May, 1882, with a Summary Account of Events from 1840 to 1881; and a Memorandum in continuation of that Analysis, carrying on the narrative of events up to the 30th ultimo. Also the Parliamentary Paper "Egypt No. 1 (1880)," and other documents noted in the accompanying List.*

Question as to liability of Egyptian Government.

The above papers are laid before you in connection with the question now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government as to the extent of the liability incurred by the Egyptian Government towards foreigners for the loss of life and property occasioned by the recent disorders in Egypt.

You are aware that the political status and the order of succession to the Viceregal Throne of Egypt were settled by the Treaty for the Pacification of the Levant between Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, Russia, and Turkey of the 15th July, 1840, and by the Sultan's Firman of the 1st June, 1841.

As observed by Sir Travers Twiss ("Rights and Duties of Nations in Time of Peace," p. 92), "the condition of Egypt may be regarded as the result of an European international compact, as, although it has been in form settled by a Firman or Edict of the Padishah of the Ottomans, that settlement was the result of an agreement between the Porte and four of the Great European Powers, and has received the guarantee of those Powers under the Treaty concluded between them and the Porte."

The privileges secured to Egypt by that arrangement were extended from time to time by various Firmans; and among the most important are the Firman of 1866, which, in consideration of an increase in the tribute payable by Egypt to the Porte, sanctioned a modification in the order of succession to the Viceregal Throne; and that of 1879, under which Tewfik Pasha, the present Khedive, succeeded to power on the abdication of Ismaïl Pasha.

The last-mentioned Firman, before being issued, was communicated to the British and French Governments, and, after some discussion, received their formal assent. (See "Egypt No. 1, 1880," pp. 1 and 33, 34, 37 and 38, 40-45.)

Under the guarantees afforded by the system of government thus secured for Egypt, the influx of foreigners and of foreign capital has been of late years most extensive. The establishment of the International Tribunals, of the Commission of Liquidation, and of the Control, gave additional security for peace and good order, and the employment of foreigners in the service of the Administrative Departments of the Government inspired public confidence, and insured the proper collection of the revenue.

Large sums have been invested by British subjects in public loans and in private industries, which have contributed largely to the development of the resources of the country.

Summary of events.

Such was the general condition of affairs in Egypt when Arabi Bey appeared on the scene as the leader of the Military party. There had been a military disturbance on the 18th February, 1879. Another took place on the 1st February, 1881, when Arabi Bey refused to obey the Minister; and a third, headed by Arabi Bey, on the 9th September, 1881. The objects of the Military party, or so-called National party, under the leadership of Arabi Bey, were subversion of the existing Constitution and of institutions created under the sanction of international engagements, and the dismissal of foreigners from the public service.

This Military party ultimately gained the ascendency in the country, and produced a terrorism under which, in February last, the Khedive was compelled to change his Ministry and to appoint Arabi Bey Minister of War, with the title of Pasha. From that date the power passed from the Khedive into the hands of the army.

On the 12th April there was an alleged conspiracy to murder Arabi Pasha, for which a large number of persons were condemned, and the commutation of their sentences by the Khedive led to renewed discussions between His Highness and his Ministry.

In May last a military despotism had become the dominant power in Egypt; and this state of things being destructive of the national prosperity, and antagonistic to the fulfilment of international engagements, as well as menacing to the safety of foreigners, the British and French Governments determined to send a combined fleet to Alexandria; and in a Circular to their Representatives at the Courts of the Great Powers they explained and defined the reasons and objects of that measure. Arabi Pasha, as Minister for War, had been warned by the British and French Agents that if order should be disturbed he would be held personally responsible. On the 14th May he stated, in reply to this warning, that he would guarantee public order and the safety of the Khedive so long as he remained Minister, but that in the event of an Anglo-French squadron arriving he could not give such guarantee; but on the 16th both he and the President of the Council gave assurances to Her Majesty's Agent of the maintenance of public tranquillity on the arrival of the combined squadrons.

* List of Papers.—Parliamentary Papers from September 9, 1881, to May 31, 1882 (Nos. 2523, 2552, 2560, and 2565); Analysis by Lord Tenterden (see pp. 3, 4, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and Summary, p. 27). Confidential, Nos. 4643 and 4644; Memorandum by Lord Tenterden (see pp. 1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13); Accounts of Riot by various eye-witnesses; Mr. Cookson's despatch No. 16 of June 20; Sir H. Elliot's despatch No. 310; Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet of June 30, 1882, as to case of French and German Consuls murdered at Salonica; Law Officers' Reports on indemnity claims.

On the approach of the fleets, however, Arabi Pasha, against the orders of the Khedive, commenced military preparations.

On the 25th May the British and French Agents presented a joint note to the President of the Council, formally advising the dismissal of the Ministry and the exile of Arabi Pasha and the military leaders of his party. The Khedive having assented to the course proposed, the Ministry resigned; but on the 27th the officers of the regiments and of the police force stationed at Alexandria telegraphed to the Khedive that they would not accept the resignation of Arabi Pasha. Violent discussions ensued, and the Khedive was compelled to yield to the threats of Arabi Pasha, and to reinstate him as Minister of War. Arabi Pasha was sole Minister of the Khedive from that date until the formation of Ragheb Pasha's Ministry on the 16th June. Upon his reinstatement he continued his military preparations, and the military leaders of his party, who had sedulously fostered a fanatical feeling against foreigners, had recourse to the following expedient:—

They circulated among the soldiers and officers of the army a false account of the purport and terms of the joint note of the British and French Agents of the 25th May, perverting it in a manner calculated to excite the greatest resentment and exasperation against Europeans.

The proceedings of Arabi Pasha as Minister of War, and of the military officers under his command, were therefore such as could hardly fail to bring about the catastrophe which shortly afterwards occurred at Alexandria on the 11th June; and though it may be difficult to prove that the outrages committed on that day against foreigners were secretly prompted by them, it is difficult to resist the inference to be drawn from the surrounding circumstances that such was the case.

On the 28th May Her Majesty's Consul at Alexandria telegraphed as follows: "All quiet here. Local authorities assure me no disorder to be apprehended. Troops have received reply from Cairo, in consequence of which they have engaged to remain quiet at present."

Nevertheless, such was the apprehension of a fanatical outbreak against foreigners, that the Swedish Consul-General, according to a telegram of Sir E. Malet to Mr. Cookson of the 11th June, had come from Alexandria to Cairo for the purpose of submitting to a meeting of the Representatives of the Great Powers a plan for a common defence of Europeans at Alexandria.

It was at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day (the 11th June) that the outbreak took place, in which Her Majesty's Consul was seriously injured, and many British subjects and Europeans were killed or wounded by the Arab mob, and European houses and shops were plundered. There is evidence to show that the riot was premeditated, and that the authorities must have had previous knowledge of the intended onslaught on foreigners. Notwithstanding the large military force at Arabi Pasha's command no proper and timely measures were taken for the immediate suppression of the threatened outbreak. The consequence was that no soldiers appeared on the scene until 7 o'clock in the evening, when the mischief had been done.

During the whole afternoon the foreigners had been abandoned to the fury of the mob, for the police force (whose officers, it should be remembered, had joined in the telegram to the Khedive of the 27th May demanding the restoration of Arabi Bey to power) displayed the most scandalous disregard of their duty, and did not interfere to protect the Europeans.

I am to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Alexandria, containing his Report of the riot, and a printed Memorandum containing various accounts of it from other eye-witnesses.

Instructions have been sent by telegram to the Governor of Malta and Her Majesty's High Commissioner for Cyprus to collect all the evidence on the subject which can be obtained from the foreign residents of Alexandria who have sought refuge in those islands.

Lord Granville is unable to concur in the view expressed by M. de Freycinet on the 12th June, that the events of the previous day arose out of a mere local riot, and agrees with Lord Lyons in the opinion that nothing of the kind would have occurred but for the military revolt and the animosity excited by its leaders against the foreign community.

The inclosed despatch from Sir H. Elliot (No. 310) shows the length of time during which disorder was allowed to prevail unchecked.

The Parliamentary Papers, and the evidence already collected, appear to establish the following conclusions of fact:—

1. That an attempt was made by Arabi Pasha, first as a military officer, and subsequently as a Minister of State, with the assistance of certain military leaders, to subvert the Constitution and the institutions of the country as established by international compact with the Sultan of Turkey and the Khedives of Egypt.

2. That Arabi Pasha, in his capacity of Minister of State, and through the instrumentality of the military leaders of his party being all Government officials, succeeded, by disseminating false reports, and by other means, in exciting and fostering among the army and among the people a fanatical hatred of foreigners.

3. That Arabi Pasha, though warned that he would be held responsible, as a Minister of State, for a breach of the public tranquility consequent on his revolutionary proceedings and the inflammatory utterances of his party, altogether failed to take proper measures for the immediate suppression of the threatened outbreak and the protection of the lives and property of foreigners, though he had ample means at his command for doing so.

4. That the police force of Alexandria was not only an insufficient protection for foreigners under the circumstances, but, being animated by feelings of hatred to the foreigner, excited among them by the machinations of Arabi Pasha and his party, and having joined in the demand on the Khedive for the restoration of Arabi Pasha to power, refused to do their duty on the occasion of the outbreak, and made no attempt to protect foreigners against the violence of the mob.

5. No complaint can be made against Tewfik Pasha of any connivance in the anti-foreign movement which led to the outbreak; but his authority as Chief of the State was completely paralyzed, and was merely nominal, the real government of the country having passed into the hands of Arabi Pasha, whose acts as a public Minister of State he was unable to control.

As regards the doctrine of international law applicable to claims of indemnity for losses and injuries sustained by foreigners in time of civil war, tumult, and revolt, I am to draw attention to the observations at pp. 413-424, vol. i, of Calvo's "International Law;" and I am to inclose a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet on the case of the murder of the French and German Consuls at Salonica in 1876, and various Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown on claims arising out of revolutionary outbreaks.

Lord Granville desires to be favoured with your opinion whether, in view of the particular facts of the present case, Her Majesty's Government are entitled, consistently with the principles of international law, to demand of the Egyptian Government compensation for the losses and injuries sustained by British subjects by the recent events in Egypt, and especially for the outrages committed on Her Majesty's Consul; and, if so, whether the liability of the Egyptian Government is limited to an indemnity for the injuries and losses directly occasioned to British subjects by the outbreak of the 11th June, or extends to indirect losses occasioned by the panic created by the revolutionary action of Arabi Pasha, resulting in the flight of British subjects, the abandonment of their property, and the ruin of their trade.

I have, &c.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the general principle in cases like the one before us is that all States are bound to give reasonable protection to the persons and property of strangers resident within their territory, and are answerable to the parent State of those residents if that obligation be broken.

This principle is stated by Kent in his "Commentaries," in these words:—"That when foreigners are admitted into a State upon free and liberal terms, the public faith is pledged for their protection."

The measure of the protection to be afforded is, in our opinion, that which a Government, using all reasonable means, and exercising all reasonable diligence for the prevention and repression of outrage or violence to persons or property, is capable of affording.

If such means have been used and such diligence exercised, and, in spite of it, injury has been sustained by foreigners resident in a country, the Government of that country could not, in our opinion, properly be called upon to make compensation. Whether the injury in any particular case is due to the Government having failed to discharge its duties is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstance of that case.

Circumstances warrant claim for direct losses,

We have not yet before us in a complete form all the facts relating to the outrages which occasioned the deaths of Mr. Richardson and Mr. Dobson; but, so far as we can judge, there was a failure to discharge the duties incumbent upon the Government of Egypt, which led to these disastrous consequences, and which would justify a claim for compensation.

but not for indirect damages.

We do not think that Her Majesty's Government could properly put forward a claim for compensation to those who have sustained damage owing to their voluntary abandonment of the country, though such abandonment was caused by the fear not unnaturally engendered by the occurrences of the 11th June.

We have, &c.

Dr. Deane of opinion that Egyptian Government is not liable for acts of the rebels.

I agree with the general principle; but I believe, from all that appears to have happened before and since the massacre, that Alexandria was held by a military force which was in opposition to, and had de facto overpowered and was in rebellion against, the de jure Government.

I cannot therefore agree that any claim for compensation can properly be made.

My Lord,

Landing of coals and munitions of war on coast of Egypt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Board of Admiralty, inquiring whether Admiral Sir B. Seymour might be instructed to prevent munitions of war and coal from being landed at Damietta and other ports on the Egyptian coast in the possession of the rebels against the authority of the Khedive.

That your Lordship presumed that the Admiral's inquiry, whether he should establish a blockade, should be answered in the negative, as such a proceeding would raise the question "belligerent rights;" but that, under existing circumstances, the Khedive might issue a Decree closing any port in Egypt, or prohibiting the import therein of coal and munitions of war, under penalty of seizure and confiscation; and might empower the British Admiral to enforce it within Egyptian waters.

That Lord Tenterden was to inclose various Reports of Law Officers of the Crown, as noted in the accompanying list; and he was to request us to inform your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, whether we concurred in the views above expressed, and to favour your Lordship with any further advice or opinion which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Blockade not expedient. Ports should be closed by a Decree to be enforced by British Admiral.

That we concur in thinking that the course of notifying and establishing a blockade should be avoided, and that the most expedient course would be for the Khedive, as suggested, to issue a Decree closing, so far as may be necessary, any port or ports, or prohibiting the import therein of coal and munitions of war, under penalty of seizure and confiscation, and empowering the British Admiral to enforce it within Egyptian waters.

Passage of British troops through Suez Canal. Liability of Company for delay caused by.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th instant, transmitting to us the following documents:—

1. Despatch of the British Directors of the Suez Canal Company (14th August, 1882).
2. Copies of two Proclamations issued by the Khedive of Egypt.*
3. Letter from the British Directors of the Suez Canal Company (No. 21 of 7th August, 1882).
4. Letter from same (No. 25 of 9th August, 1882).
5. Telegram from Lord Lyons (No. 186 of 16th August, 1882), and stating that the letter of the British Directors of the 9th August contained the text of the Articles of the Company's Concession under which the Canal was declared open to the commerce of the world as a neutral passage from sea to sea.

That we would perceive from Lord Lyons' telegram that the British Directors asked for authority to declare that Her Majesty's Government would hold the Company harmless against any claims that might be preferred by ship-owners or others on account of delay while British troops were passing through the Canal.

That if the above documents should be sufficient to enable us to arrive at a conclusion on the point, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether any such claim could legally be made against the Company for delay so occasioned to merchant-vessels, or whether the passage of the British troops being a belligerent act performed with the assent of the Khedive constituted a case of vis major which relieved the Company from liability. Further, if the Company should, in our opinion, be liable for such delay, whether Her Majesty's Government should limit their guarantee of indemnity to such damages as might be recovered by the claimants against the Company in the competent Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

British Government should not give guarantee to Company against claims.

That we are of opinion that no guarantee of the nature suggested should be given to the Suez Canal Company by Her Majesty's Government.

We cannot foresee that any legal claims can be made by any ship-owners or others on account of the traffic through the Canal being stopped in consequence of its occupation for military purposes. There is no contract on the part of the Company to keep the Canal open under all circumstances. For instance, if the passage were blocked by a sunken vessel (without negligence on the part of the Company's servants) no claim could be made against the Company by the owner of a ship which was delayed thereby.

* In Sir E. Malet's telegram No. 396 of 15th August, 1882.

Company not liable for delay.

If now the Canal is taken possession of for military purposes by the presence of a Power which the Company cannot control or contend against, no liability will arise on the part of the Company on account of its inability to allow vessels to pass through the Canal.

If the suggested guarantee be given there will virtually be an admission made on the part of Her Majesty's Government that such claims can be enforced against the Company, an admission which certainly should be avoided.

Khedive should sanction occupation of Canal.

We would suggest that any occupation of the Canal which interferes with its ordinary traffic should be expressly sanctioned by the Khedive.

Prevention of landing of coal and munitions of war in Egypt.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th instant, in regard to the steps to be taken to prevent the landing of munitions of war and coal at ports on the Egyptian coast in the possession of the rebels against the authority of the Khedive, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Proclamation on the subject, which, at the instance of Sir E. Malet,* had been issued by the Khedive, together with a letter from the Admiralty† inquiring whether any particular instructions should be given to the Commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean as to the manner in which he was to deal with ships attempting to land coal or munitions of war.

Proclamation of Khedive.

Proposed instructions.

That your Lordship proposed to inform the Admiralty, in reply, that the proper course to pursue would be to inspect the manifest of vessels entering the territorial waters, searching them, if necessary, for coal or munitions of war, and that those which carried any prohibited articles should be warned off, and, in the event of their persisting in making for an Egyptian port, that they should be seized while in the territorial waters and taken to Alexandria, there to be dealt with by the competent authorities.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request us to report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, whether we concurred in the terms of the proposed instructions.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—counter-statement of the views of Her Majesty's Government at the next meeting of the Council on the 5th September.

Proposed counter-statement of views of Her Majesty's Government.

That your Lordship having approved that suggestion, they had now submitted a draft of the proposed counter-statement in the despatch* sent therewith.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was directed by your Lordship to request us to take the draft into our consideration, and to report whether we were of opinion that it should be made in the terms submitted, or whether it would be better not to pledge Her Majesty's Government to any detailed statement of their views in regard to the question of neutrality, and to instruct the Suez Canal Directors simply to state that Her Majesty's Government did not concur in the views held by M. de Lesseps and the Council on the subject of the neutrality of the Suez Canal as declared in the Resolution of the 5th August, and that they desired to record their dissent therefrom.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Detailed statement not advisable.

Dissent from Resolution should be recorded.

That we think it will be better not to pledge the Government to any detailed statement of their views in regard to the question of the neutrality, and to instruct the English Suez Canal Directors to state that Her Majesty's Government do not concur in the views held by M. de Lesseps and the Council, as declared in the Resolution of the 5th August, and that they desire to record their dissent therefrom.

Declaration should be general.

It would probably be better to make the declaration general with reference to the views declared in the Resolution, without using the words "on the subject of the neutrality of the Suez Canal."

As to stating that action taken under sanction of Khedive does not touch neutrality of Canal.

It is worth consideration, however, whether it would not be well to add an emphatic statement that steps taken by, and under the authority of, the Ruler of Egypt against his subjects who are in rebellion, and for the purpose of restoring order and his authority throughout his dominions, in no way touch or concern the question of the neutrality of the Canal.

Should not state reasons for dissent.

Her Majesty's Government are not, in my opinion, called upon to give reasons for dissenting from the Resolution of the Council. To do so may lead to inconvenient discussion. I would therefore suggest the omission of the two last paragraphs of the above Report, with which, in other respects, I agree.

My Lord,

Claims of Suez Canal Company on account of British operations on Canal.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a despatch† from the British Directors of the Suez Canal Company forwarding a copy of a legal opinion given by the "Conseil Judiciaire" of the Company on the claims which the Suez Canal Company might have against Her Majesty's Government on account of the military operations at present undertaken by Her Majesty's forces on the Canal and its neighbourhood, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with any remarks which we might have to offer thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Neutrality of Canal not touched by recent events.

That as we have already pointed out in a former Report, the events which have taken place in Egypt have no relation to the question of the so-called neutrality of the Canal.

It seems undesirable and unnecessary, therefore, either to admit or to deny the alleged "neutrality" of the Canal, though we see no ground for supposing the contention of the Suez Canal Company with respect to it to be well founded.

Right of Khedive to use Canal during revolt.

It appears to us that even if there were nothing in the Convention recognizing such a title, there would be inherent in the Ruler of the country the right to do any acts within that country in time of rebellion which were reasonably necessary for the protection or restoration of his authority, and that it would be preposterous to maintain that such a right was either abrogated or diminished by the grant of a Concession authorizing the construction of a Canal, or any other public work.

* No. 29 of 18th August, 1882.

† Suez Canal Directors, No. 37, Political, of 21st August, 1882.

But we think the Concession does expressly recognize this right as existing in the Khedive.

Any Power invoked by him may exercise his authority.

Nor do we think there is any ground for contending that the authority which the Khedive possesses to suppress a revolt may not, either according to municipal or international law, be validly exercised by any Power or any persons whose assistance he may invoke, or whose aid may be proffered to and accepted by him.

British Government not responsible as shareholders.

There seems to us to be no ground for contending that the English Government can be made responsible to the Company, in their capacity as shareholders, for the action which they have taken.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Earl Granville.—(Received September 12.)

Temple, September 9, 1882.

My Lord,

Claim of Suez Canal Company to payment of charges for use of Canal by British forces.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, transmitting to us, by direction of your Lordship, the accompanying letter* from the English Directors of the Suez Canal Company, setting forth their views as to the liability of Her Majesty's Government to pay all the dues and charges imposed by the regulations of the Company on the ordinary traffic of the Canal in time of peace, in respect of the British ships of war, transports, soldiers, &c., forming part of the British Expedition which had entered and occupied the Canal as an act of war, performed with the authority and on behalf of the Khedive for the suppression of the military revolt in Egypt.

Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter stated that the British Commanders were acting as mandatories of the Sovereign of that country, which was in a state of civil war, and the question arose whether, as a matter of public law, the Khedive had not the right to seize and occupy the Suez Canal for the purposes of repelling hostile attacks from without, or of repressing rebellion within his territory, without incurring any legal liability towards the Company in respect of the duties, tolls, and charges which they were empowered to levy on the ordinary traffic in time of peace.

That it was conceived that the Suez Canal Company was in no better position than any other public Company in Egypt, whose lands and property might be temporarily occupied and seized as an act of State by the forces of the lawful Government for military purposes, and that there was no precedent to support the contention that Government troops in times of rebellion against the constituted authorities could not use roads or bridges belonging to public Companies, and which were required for strategical purposes without paying the tolls lawfully chargeable in time of peace on the ordinary passenger traffic.

That it was no doubt the practice of nations, after the restoration of order, to indemnify out of the public revenues all persons, whether subjects of the State or foreigners resident therein, who might have suffered losses during a rebellion, and especially those whose property might have been used for the purpose of suppressing it.

But such indemnity was not obligatory on the State, and when granted it was measured out in proportion to the injury actually suffered.

That the English Directors of the Canal Company, however, cite the Charter of the Company and its regulations as being applicable as well to an invading army in time of foreign or civil war as to the ordinary traffic in time of peace, and they supported the claim of the Company to levy their ordinary and extraordinary dues, not only on British vessels of war and transports forming part of the expedition by tonnage measurement, but on every soldier of the occupying British force at the rate of 10 francs per head.

That your Lordship doubted whether the contention could be supported. That it appeared to your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government should be prepared to make any voluntary payments to the Company to the extent of the promises which might already have been made to them, as well as any future payments which might seem equitable, but that to admit any legal obligation to pay those dues and charges under the circumstances of the case would weaken their position as regarded the right they had asserted to enter and occupy the Canal, with or without the consent of the Company, and forcibly, if necessary, as an act of war performed on behalf and with the authority of the Khedive, as lawful Sovereign of the country.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose the Parliamentary Paper "Egypt No. 6 (1876),"* containing at page 4 the Charter of the Company, and a copy of the regulations of the Company, both of which documents were referred to in the letter of the English Directors; and Sir Julian was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to whether Her Majesty's Government might properly decline to admit any legal liability on their part to pay the dues, tolls, and charges above-mentioned, and to insist on reserving for future consideration the question of any payments in respect thereof, as one of policy and equitable adjustment as between the Governments of Great Britain and Egypt and of the Canal Company.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Validity of claim depends on Egyptian law as to powers of Khedive.

That the question, whether the Suez Canal Company are entitled, in the circumstances which have arisen, to claim the ordinary dues from the transports and other vessels of Her Majesty, is one which it appears to us depends for its determination not on any principles of international law, but on the municipal law of Egypt.

If, according to that law, the Khedive would be empowered, for purposes of State such as the suppression of a rebellion, to make use of the Canal, with ships and troops, without the obligation to make payment of the dues, we think the same exemption can be claimed for the ships and troops of Her Majesty, which have occupied and used the Canal with the Khedive's assent, and for the purpose of rendering him assistance.

There can be no doubt that, according to the law of this country, Her Majesty would have a right to occupy and use a Canal or other public work, in time of rebellion, without paying the ordinary tolls.

Provisions of Charter consistent with his free use of Canal.

We have no information which affords a solution of the question, what the Egyptian law is in this respect. But judging by the light afforded by general principles of jurisprudence, we entertain little doubt that the Ruler of Egypt possesses the same general right. And if so, we think there is nothing in the Charter of the Suez Canal Company inconsistent with the existence and exercise of this general right in relation to that work.

Under all the circumstances, we think the best course will probably be not to admit any legal obligation to pay the dues, and to leave the whole question of what should be done, as far as possible, open for future determination.

Question as to jurisdiction of French Courts.

At the same time, we venture to suggest that it would be well in determining the question, what payments should be made, to bear in mind the fact that this country are shareholders in the Canal, and that consequently it is possible that, by stopping payment of the dividends upon these shares, the question of liability to the dues would be presented for determination by the French Courts.

We are not aware of the mode in which the dividends are paid, nor whether there is ground for real apprehension upon this point; but we think it well to call attention to it.

We have, &c.

Suez Canal Company.

I HAVE carefully considered the papers relative to the constitution and Concessions of the Suez Canal Company, with a view to the questions:—

(1.) Of the territorial law to which the Company ought to be regarded as subject.

(2.) Of the mutual obligations, rights, and powers of the Company and the Khedive.

(3.) Of the attitude recently assumed by the Council of Administration of the Company, and the Messrs. de Lesseps as its representatives in Egypt, towards the Government of the Khedive, and Great Britain as his ally.

(4.) Of the measures which, when the time arrives for the settlement of Egyptian affairs, it may be (in principle) open to the Khedive (or to the British Government with his concurrence) to propose, for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of similar difficulties with the Company on any future occasion.

Subject to Egyptian territorial law.

1. On the first point, I am of opinion that the territorial law to which the Company ought to be regarded as properly subject is that of Egypt.

Not only would this subjection result from the general principles of international law (the Canal and its adjuncts being immovable property, locally situate in Egyptian territory, and all the rights and privileges of the Company, under its Concessions, being derived from Acts of State by the Khedive, ratified by the Sultan), but it results also from the nature and constitution of the Company, which is not French, but Egyptian, in its essential and fundamental character.

By the original Concession to M. de Lesseps of the 30th November, 1854 ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," No. 1)*, the then Viceroy of Egypt granted to him "the exclusive power to constitute and to direct a Company" (under the name, and subject to the provisions, there mentioned) for the purposes of this undertaking, of which the Statutes were to be submitted to, and approved by, His Highness. By the 3rd Article of the Statutes, as submitted and approved (ibid., No. 4), it is provided that La Société a son siège à Alexandrie, et son domicile administratif à Paris; and, by Article 73, not that it is, or shall be, a French "Société anonyme," but that it is a "Société sous la forme anonyme, par analogie aux Sociétés anonymes autorisées par le Gouvernement Français," by the principles of which it is to be governed. Then follows the sentence: "quoique ayant son siège social à Alexandrie, la Société fait élection de domicile légal et attributif de juridiction à son domicile administratif à Paris." The next (74th) Article provides for the settlement of questions between the shareholders, and as to the Company's internal affairs, by arbitration, with an appeal to the Court of Appeal of Paris. It is, therefore, an Egyptian Company, having its "siège social" in Egypt, but electing to have its "domicil of administration" in Paris, and giving a conventional jurisdiction over its internal affairs to a French Tribunal. The intention appears to have been to make it, as far as possible, cosmopolitan, as is evident from the title "universelle," and from several Articles (7, 8, 14, and 24) of the Statutes. But, this being legally impossible, the combination of an Egyptian "siège social" with a French "domicil of administration" was adopted, I suppose, as the nearest approach to it possible. And, in order to secure the supremacy of the territorial law under this arrangement, provision was made in the Concession of the 5th January, 1856 (Article 9), for the presence, at the seat of the administration of the Company, of an Egyptian Delegate, charged with the representation of the rights and interests of the Egyptian Government, with a view to the due execution of the terms agreed upon; and also, if that seat of administration should not be in Egypt, for the representation of the Company at Alexandria by an agent, with all powers necessary to fulfil its engagements with that Government, which agent, by Article 42 of the Statutes, was to represent the Company "dans tous ses rapports avec le Gouvernement Égyptien et les tiers."

Mutual obligations, rights, and powers of the Company and the Khedive.

2. On the second point (as to the mutual obligations, rights, and powers of the Company and the Khedive), it is necessary to read together the two Concessions of the 30th November, 1854, and the 5th January, 1856, and the two subsequent Conventions of the 30th January and the 22nd February, 1866 ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," Nos. 1, 3, 10, and 11). That the Egyptian Government reserved to itself all rights and powers over the Canal and the lands granted to the Company which might be necessary for the purposes of internal administration and for the defence of the country, and that those reservations were essential terms of the Agreement is absolutely clear. The provision, in Article 4 of the original Concession (30th November, 1854), as to "the fortifications which the Government should consider it desirable to establish," and which were "not to be at the charge of the Company," shows that this was, from the beginning, contemplated; and it might, indeed, have been implied from the mere fact that there was no cession of any rights of territorial jurisdiction. But all room for dispute or controversy on that point is removed by the express stipulations of Articles I and II of the Convention of the 30th January, 1866, and IX, X, and XI of that of the 22nd February, 1866; the latter of which provide (Article IX): "Le Canal Maritime et toutes ses dépendances restent soumis à la police Égyptienne, qui s'exercera librement comme sur tout autre point du territoire, de façon à assurer le bon ordre, la sécurité publique, et l'exécution des lois et règlements du pays;" and "le Gouvernement Égyptien jouira de la servitude de passage à travers le Canal Maritime, sur les points qu'il jugera nécessaires, tant pour ses propres communications, que pour la libre circulation du commerce," &c.: (Article X) "Le Gouvernement Égyptien occupera dans le périmètre des terrains réservés comme dependance du Canal Maritime toute position, ou tout point stratégique, qu'il jugera nécessaire à la défense du pays. Cette occupation ne devra pas faire obstacle à la navigation, et respectera les servitudes attachées aux franc-bords du Canal."

* Parliamentary Paper No. 1761.

The Government (it is to be observed), which reserved to itself these rights and powers (and also those contained, for ordinary administrative purposes, in Article XI), was bound, under the same Convention, itself to maintain the Sweet-water Canal, and the supply of water thereby to its Maritime Canal; and it is unquestionable that the rights and powers so reserved were available to it for the defence of the country against domestic as well as foreign enemies; and available, not for its own forces only, but for all forces of its allies, called in by it to take part in such defence. And those rights and powers were reserved, not to the Turkish Government, but to the Egyptian: the Turkish Government, by its ratification of the Concessions, &c., assenting to such reservation; and having also, by the Firmans under which the hereditary Government of the Khedive was established, placed in the hands of the Khedive the exercise of all necessary powers of territorial Government and internal defence.

The Concessions, therefore, to the Company, being conditional on these terms, or violation of these terms by the Company, must entitle the Egyptian Government, if not to revoke the Concessions and place the Administration of the Canal for the future upon a different footing, by its own sole authority, at all events to insist (in concert with the British and any other European Governments, whose interests may have been placed in peril by such violation) that either the terms of the Concessions, or the Regulations of the Company, shall be so modified as effectually to preclude any future use of the powers and privileges of the Company to prevent or obstruct the due exercise of the authority of the Khedive for the maintenance of his own Government, and the defence of his territory.

Attitude of the Company towards the Khedive and Great Britain.

3. As to the third point (which relates to the recent proceedings and pretensions of the Council of Administration of the Company at Paris, and of M. de Lesseps, their resident agent in Egypt, expressly appointed "to represent the Company in all its relations with the Egyptian Government and third parties"), the facts appear to be that M. de Lesseps has gone very far to identify himself with the usurpation of Arabi Pasha, while in open rebellion against the Khedive; that, knowing the British forces to be engaged in assisting the Khedive to put down the rebellion, both M. Ferdinand and M. Victor de Lesseps, on the 29th July, 1882,* set up the Regulations of the Company as a bar to all naval or military operations of those formes, in aid to the Khedive, within "the zone" of water and land included in the Concessions to the Company, and threatened to oppose their disembarkation on the Canal; and that, on the 3rd August, Count de Lesseps wrote to Admiral Hoskins that he "considered the Khedive a prisoner of England," and "would not consider as regular any foreign action in the Canal, unless on the invitation and under the authority of the Sultan, approved by France." Again, on the 4th August,† after having communicated to him by Admiral Hoskins a written authority, under the hand of the Khedive, for the steps which the Admiral was taking, M. Ferdinand de Lesseps replied that "the Canal was in no danger from Arabi, who had given him many proofs of his humanity;" and that he "had determined to oppose every act of war by the Canal;" and that, "having regard to the large amount of French capital engaged in the enterprise, he would submit to nothing but a decision of the French Government on an appeal by the Company's Council of Administration."

These proceedings of their agents in Egypt were adopted, and justified by the Council of Administration of the Company at Paris, notwithstanding the protest of the Representatives of this country on that Council. On the 5th August they passed a Resolution expressly denying the authority of the Khedive, without (or even with) the concurrence of the Sultan, to take any warlike measures upon the Canal; and again, on the 19th August (four days after the Khedive had issued a Proclamation, to the effect that the Admiral and Commander-in-chief of the forces of Her Britannic Majesty were charged by him to re-establish order in Egypt, and were authorized to occupy all points which they might deem useful for military operations to be undertaken against the rebels), their "Conseil Judiciaire" denied the right of the English Government, either in its own name or as mandatory of the Egyptian Government, to do any warlike act on the Canal or its dependencies, whether with or without the authorization of the Sultan; and protested "contre l'usage que le Gouvernement Égyptien ferait au profit d'un Gouvernement étranger de prétendus droits, qui, s'ils existent, n'appartiendraient qu'à lui-même personnellement, sans délégation possible;" concluding with the pretension that the British Government, as a shareholder in the Company, was bound to abstain from taking, in this matter, any course contrary to the Resolutions of the Company's representatives, and might be held liable to the Company in damages "par les voies de droit, devant la juridiction compétente."

* Confidential No. 4717, p. 17.

In effect, this Company, "purely commercial" (as it correctly styled itself), assumed the attitude of a political power, entitled to set at defiance the authority both of the Khedive and of the Sultan in Egypt; to obstruct the action taken by the Khedive and his allies for the defence of Egypt, within the limits of the land and water included in the Concessions, against an armed insurrection, and to treat the political action of the British Government, when acting as the mandatory of the Khedive for the defence of his territory, as a violation by a shareholder of the Company's Regulations.

For these preposterous pretensions the only ground alleged is Article 14 of the Concession of the 15th January, 1856, which merely declares that the Canal and its dependent ports shall "always be open, as neutral passages, to all merchant-vessels passing from one sea to the other, without any distinction, exclusion, or preference of persons or nations," subject to the payment of the Company's dues and to the observance of its Regulations. A stipulation more irrelevant to warlike measures, taken by the Khedive or his allies for the defence of the Government of Egypt against foreign or domestic enemies, cannot well be conceived. None of the measures taken, either by the Khedive or by Great Britain, have had for their object or for their effect the closing of the Canal or its ports against the merchant-vessels of any country passing from the one sea to the other; and the words "comme passages neutres" certainly do not contemplate or intend that the Canal should be neutral ground for the enemies of the Khedive, so as to transfer (in effect) his territorial authority to the Company and nullify the stipulations of Articles IX and X of the Convention of the 22nd February, 1866.

Measures to prevent recurrence of difficulties with the Company.

4. I think it is manifest that these pretensions and proceedings of the Council of Administration and agents in Egypt of the Company are inconsistent with the terms of the Concession, with the territorial authority of the Khedive (and with the sovereign rights of the Sultan also), and with the rights of Great Britain and all other nations interested, by reason of international engagements or otherwise, in maintaining a settled Government in Egypt, and in securing the safe and free navigation of the Canal. Such pretensions having been, in fact, advanced, and having been (so far) acted upon, no settlement of the affairs of Egypt can be entirely satisfactory which does not include some security against them for the future. This security might be obtained in various ways. The Company has power to alter its Statutes, with the approval of the Khedive; and if its domicil of administration were removed to Egypt (where it already has its "siège social"), there would be no danger of any repetition of the claim to an extra-territorial character. Or, without such removal, the danger might be obviated by a Supplementary Convention in proper terms. If the Company were unwilling to agree to any such change, or to any Supplementary Convention, I think the Khedive would, in principle, be justified in revising or modifying the terms of the Concession (with the concurrence, if that should be thought necessary by this country or other European Powers, of the Sultan) by means of the legislative authority which he possesses over the Company as an Egyptian corporation, and over the territory traversed by the Canal; it being impossible that the Concession can entitle the Company at once to claim its benefits and to repudiate, or act contrary to, the obligations and reservations with which these benefits are accompanied. It will, of course, be desirable, in such a matter, that whatever is done should be done in the general interest, and (as far as practicable) with the general approval of all the Great Maritime Powers.

Trial of Egyptian rebels. Opinion as to choice of counsel by prisoners and mode of conducting the trial.

Dear Lord Granville,

IT is one thing to allow a free choice of counsel (which I still think should be done), and another to allow a trial to be protracted by either prisoners or counsel, for purposes not germane to the real defence.

It does not seem to me to follow at all, that, because English counsel are allowed to the prisoners (as to which I see no reason for making a distinction between Arabi and others), those counsel are to have their own way in the conduct of the trial.

I should assume that the prisoners will be tried upon definite charges of fact, e.g. (1), armed rebellion and insurrection against the authority of the Khedive; (2), murders; (3), incendiarism at Alexandria; (4), illegal imprisonment and torture of subjects of the Khedive (or upon some such charges). If it should be proposed to call foreign witnesses (such as Lesseps or others), and if time should be requested for that purpose, the prisoner's counsel should be asked what facts he proposes to prove by such witnesses, and the request should be disallowed if it should appear that it is proposed to call them, not to prove any fact material to the charges, but to prove such and such political reasons or motives.

Believe, &c.

Claim for demurrage for detention of "Duke of Sutherland" and "Cerigo," during the military occupation of Suez Canal.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a letter from the Board of Admiralty,* forwarding copies of claims received from the owners of the English merchant-ships "Duke of Sutherland" and "Cerigo" for demurrage, on account of the detention of those ships at the Suez Canal, during the temporary stoppage of the traffic rendered necessary at the time of the occupation of the Suez Canal by Her Majesty's forces.

Claim in similar case of the "Crimdon" rejected.

That a copy of the telegram directing the suspension of the traffic in the Canal was annexed to the Admiralty letter. That a similar claim had been addressed to the Foreign Office in September last by the owners of the steam-ship "Crimdon," but that your Lordship had declined to entertain it on the ground that the temporary stoppage of the Canal traffic was an act of State, and a measure rendered necessary by the naval and military operations undertaken by Her Majesty's Government with the assent of the Khedive of Egypt.

That our opinion was requested as to the terms of the reply which should be made to those and any other similar claims which might be made against Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Claim should be rejected, as the stoppage of the Canal was an act of State and necessary.

That we think that in answer to these and any other similar claims against Her Majesty's Government, the applicants should be informed that the temporary stoppage of the Canal traffic was an act of State, and was a measure rendered necessary by the naval and military operations which were being carried on, and that Her Majesty's Government cannot entertain any claims in respect of the detention of ships caused by such operations.

Draft Letter from Sir J. Pauncefote to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Foreign Office, November , 1882.

Sir,

I AM directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, desiring to be informed whether, in his Lordship's opinion, payments should continue to be made to the Suez Canal Company on account of transports returning from or going to Ismaïlia without troops on board, after the opinion expressed by the Egyptian Law Officers, and which was communicated to you in my letter of the 21st ultimo, that Her Majesty's Government could not be subjected to any payment of this nature.

I am to transmit to you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, a copy of the full Report of the Law Officers of the Egyptian Government above referred to, which has been received through Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo,* and I am to request that you will state to their Lordships that Lord Granville is of opinion that, as the payment of Canal dues to a large amount has been sanctioned by the Board of Admiralty up to the present time, it would seem hardly worth while to raise the whole question of liability now with reference to the comparatively small amount referred to.

It may also be urged that, peace and order being restored, and the normal relations between the Khedive and the Company re-established, the Canal dues become payable now as before the military operations were undertaken.

Should the Board of Admiralty have doubts regarding the correctness of the charges, these might be verified by the British Suez Canal Directors at Paris, and Lord Granville is of opinion that the Directors should take that opportunity of stating to the Board that Her Majesty's Government decided to pay the Canal dues as a recognition of the great assistance to their military operations which has been derived from the use of the Canal, but that they do not admit any legal obligation to pay them under the circumstances of the military occupation for the suppression of the late rebellion, in which view they are supported by the Egyptian Government; and as regards the equitable claim of the Company to payment, consideration must be given to the fact that the presence of the British forces on the Canal alone prevented the suspension of the traffic, and the consequent cessation of the earnings of the Company for a long period.

My Lord, Temple, November 15, 1882.

Payment of Suez Canal dues by British ships of war, transports, &c., during late rebellion.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report, dated the 9th September last, relative to the question of the liability of Her Majesty's Government to pay all the dues and charges imposed by the Regulations of the Suez Canal Company on the ordinary traffic of the Canal, in time of peace, in respect of the British ships of war, transports, &c., forming part of the British expedition dispatched to Egypt for the suppression of the late rebellion, he was to transmit to us correspondence* which had since taken place between the British Suez Canal Directors, the Board of Admiralty, and the Foreign Office on that subject.

Egyptian Law Officers of opinion that it could not be enforced.

That it would be seen from the Report† which had been received from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo that the Law Officers of the Egyptian Government were of opinion that, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government could not be subjected to the payment of any tax on the part of, or in favour of, the Suez Canal Company.

That payment of Canal dues to a large amount had, however, already been sanctioned by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty as a matter of policy, but that their Lordships had inquired whether, after the opinion given by the Egyptian Law Officers above referred to, your Lordship considered that the payments should continue to be made on account of transports returning from or going to Ismaïlia without troops.

Proposed draft to Admiralty. Her Majesty's Government do not admit obligation to pay.

That Sir J. Pauncefote transmitted to us draft of the answer which your Lordship proposed to return to that communication, and requested our opinion as to whether we considered the terms of it to be right and proper, especially with regard to the declaration which it was proposed should be made to the Suez Canal Company by the British Directors, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government do not admit any legal obligation to pay the charges in question under the circumstances of the military occupation of the Canal for the suppression of the rebellion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve draft.

That we consider the terms of the proposed answer to be right and proper.

British Military occupation of Egypt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a printed collection of Firmans‡ granted by the Sultan of Turkey to the Viceroy of Egypt, and to refer us more particularly to the Firman of the 2nd August, 1879 (p. 27), granted to the present Khedive, and to the notes appended thereto, with reference to the following question:—

That by a Decree of the Khedive, dated the 20th September last,§ the Egyptian army had been disbanded, and Her Majesty's Government, on whom had devolved the task of reorganizing the Government of Egypt, had decided not to withdraw the whole of the British forces at once from that country, but to maintain a sufficient force there for the maintenance of order until the Egyptian army had been reconstituted, and a body of Egyptian police had been raised.

Draft of Convention as to payment of extraordinary expenses caused by.

revenue, and with that view they proposed to invite the Egyptian Government to enter into a Convention with Her Majesty's Government, of which Sir Julian was to inclose a draft.

That a question had, however, been raised as to whether, under the terms of the Firman of 1879, above referred to, it was competent to the Khedive to enter into such a Convention, and, if so, whether such Convention was of such a nature as to require its communication to the Sultan of Turkey before being promulgated.

That on that point Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the paragraphs of the Firman relating to "Conventions" and "Finances" at p. 2, and to the note of Sawas Pasha to Sir A. Layard of the 29th July, 1879, at p. 3.

That it would seem that inasmuch as the military occupation of Egypt by the British forces was an accomplished fact, and as the proposed agreement only related to a financial matter, namely, the payment of extraordinary expenses occasioned by the further maintenance in Egypt of a contingent of British troops to insure the preservation of order in the absence of Egyptian troops, the object in view might be obtained by a mere exchange of notes; and that, though put in the form of a Convention, the transaction was within the purview of the Article of the Firman which reserved to the Khedive "la disposition complète et entière des affaires financières du pays."

Power of Khedive to conclude Convention questioned by Turkey.

That it was contended, however, by the Turkish Ambassador, that the Khedive had not power to permit or recognize the military occupation of Egypt by a foreign Power without the consent of the Sultan, and that it was with the Sultan alone that the proposed Convention could be negotiated.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to whether the proposed Convention would, under the circumstances, be within or beyond the competence of the Khedive, having regard to the terms of the Firman of 1879.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Objections to Convention.
Agreement as to expenses should be made by notes.

That it appears to us that there are many reasons why it will be preferable to avoid making the formal statement which must appear in a Convention, and to allow the object in view to be arrived at by means of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Khedive.

By taking this course all recitals may be avoided, and if the contents of the notes be confined to an undertaking on the part of the Khedive to bear the extra expense of maintaining the British troops in Egypt so long as they remain there, we think the power of the Khedive so to contract will clearly come within the financial powers exclusively vested in him by the Firman of 1879 (see p. 28).

Undertaking limiting number of British troops not necessary.

We see no reason why any undertaking should be given by Her Majesty's Government as to the number of troops to be retained in Egypt, or as to the term during which they should remain there.

It would seem sufficient to answer the purpose if it were provided that the payments should not exceed a certain sum per month, and should not continue beyond a certain time, unless an extension were agreed on.

My Lord,

Murder of Mr. Palmer, Lieutenant Charrington, and Captain Gill.
Trial of murderers.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th November last, transmitting to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the accompanying list,[*] relating to the murder of Mr. Palmer, Lieutenant Charrington, and Captain Gill, R.E., while on a journey from Moses' Well to Nakhl, undertaken on the public service.

That that outrage took place on Egyptian territory, and the first intimation of it was received in Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewitt's telegram to the Earl of Northbrook of the 24th August last, of which a copy was among the papers.

That the later particulars in the possession of Her Majesty's Government were contained in the Admiralty letters transmitted therewith.

That an expedition under Colonel Warren was dispatched by the Naval Commander-in-chief at Suez to the scene of the murder, in the hope of capturing the guilty parties, and some natives suspected of being implicated in the crime were already in custody.

That the question had arisen how the prisoners should be tried and punished. That it had been suggested that they should be tried by naval court-martial, but it seemed doubtful whether that course would be warranted by law.

That on that point Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose our Report of the 5th July last, on some proposed Admiralty instructions respecting the mode of dealing with natives on the West Coast of Africa.

That the occurrence took place at the time when the British military operations were being carried on, and no responsible Government existed in Egypt. That the outrage was committed either for purposes of plunder or as an act of hostility on the part of the Bedouins or of the Egyptian Governor of Nakhl or of El-Arish in the interests of Arabi. That in the latter case it was a barbarous infringement of the civilized usages of war, which might properly be treated as murder.

That, in either case, it appeared to Her Majesty's Government desirable that, if possible, those criminals should be dealt with by some British authority, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case could be lawfully dealt with by a naval court-martial with or without authority from the Khedive; and if not, whether there would be any objection to the trial of the prisoners by a Commission appointed ad hoc by a Decree of the Khedive (assuming such a Decree to be within His Highness' powers), and composed of an Egyptian President and British as well as Egyptian members.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether there was any other mode of proceeding which we would recommend Her Majesty's Government to adopt in that case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

by court-martial;

That, in our opinion, the case cannot lawfully be dealt with by a British naval court-martial.

by special Tribunal according to Egyptian law.

The crime having been committed on Egyptian territory, the offenders may, no doubt, be tried in any manner which is lawful according to the laws of that country. Assuming, therefore, that the Khedive has power by a Decree to create a Special Extradition of a criminal escaped from a French to a British Colony.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office* respecting the interpretation to be placed upon Article XVI of the Treaty of Extradition with France signed at Paris on the 14th August, 1876,† of which a copy was inclosed.

That a question had been raised in the course of extradition proceedings in New South Wales, whether, under Article XVI of the Treaty, a demand for the extradition of a fugitive in one of Her Majesty's Colonies could be made by the chief Consular Officer of the demanding party in such Colony when the fugitive had escaped from a Colony belonging to the demanding party, or whether it was necessary in such cases the demand should come from the Governor, or Chief Authority, of the Colony from which the fugitive had escaped,

That Sir Julian was to refer us to our Report to the Colonial Office of the 26th May, 1880 (Inclosure 2 in Colonial Office letter of the 4th instant), on a similar question which had arisen on the interpretation of section 17 (1) of the Extradition Act, 1870, and to the other inclosures in that letter, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question raised thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The demand for his extradition may be made by the French Consul, as well as by the Governor of the French Colony.

That, in our opinion, the demand for the extradition of a fugitive who has taken refuge in one of Her Majesty's Colonies can properly be made by the chief Consular Officer of the demanding party in such Colony, when the fugitive has escaped from a Colony belonging to the demanding State.

The words in the XVIth Article of the Treaty are to the same effect as the words in the Extradition Act, 1870, section 17, sub-section 1, and the provision that the requisition (in the case of a Colony or Possession of a foreign State) shall be made by the Governor or Chief Authority of such Colony or Possession, in our opinion, does not limit, but is in addition to, the earlier provision in the XVIth Article that the requisition shall be made by the chief Consular Agent.

My Lord,

Marriage of E. C. Purton, of the steam-ship "Merthyr," and Mary Cryer.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Havre,* asking for instructions as to the propriety of celebrating a marriage between two British subjects under the following circumstances:—

That Edwin C. Purton, the intended husband, was the chief engineer on board the steam-ship "Merthyr," a collier steamer running regularly to Havre about once every ten days. That Purton had had a room at Havre during the last month, and had occupied it when the steamer had been in port. That Mary Cryer, the intended wife, had been residing at Havre for two years.

That under the Consular Marriages Act, 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, the notice of marriage must contain a statement that each of the parties had resided in the Consular district during one calendar month, at the least (sect. 2), and by sect. 6 a declaration was required that the parties had had their usual place of abode within the district.

That copies of the Consular Marriages Act, and of the Law Officers' Report on a somewhat similar case which occurred in 1877, were inclosed.

That your Lordship desired our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Consul Bernal's inquiry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Hiring of room for one month, with occasional residence there, does not legally constitute one month's residence.

That we do not think the hiring a room for one month and residence there only on the occasions when the steam-ship on board which Purton is engineer is at Havre, can be said to fulfil the requirements of the law in regard to the one calendar month's residence.

J. Orger, British Chaplain at Dinan, requesting an opinion for his guidance upon the following point, viz., whether a marriage between a French citizen and his deceased wife's sister—the lady being a British subject—contracted in France in conformity with the lex loci, would be recognized as valid in England, and would confer all the rights of legitimacy upon the issue thereof. Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and, if we should consider that the question raised by Mr. Orger was one which should be answered by the Foreign Office, that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

Ought not to give answer as to legality of.

That we do not think that the question raised by Mr. Orger is one to which an authoritative answer should be given by your Lordship.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 18.)

My Lord,

Most-favoured-nation Article in Treaties of Commerce, &c.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st December last, stating that the question of the terms in which the most-favoured-nation Article in future Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between this country and foreign Powers should be worded had been lately under consideration, and that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our advice on the matter.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote inclosed, in connection with that subject, the following papers, namely:—

1. A list of the Treaties of Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and foreign Powers containing most-favoured-nation clauses, stating the period when they were terminable, and showing whether they applied to the British Colonies ("Commercial No. 27, 1879"), No. 2216.

2. The Treaty of Friendship and Commerce between Her Majesty and the Prince of Servia (7th February, 1880), No. 659.

3. The Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Her Majesty and the Prince of Roumania (5th April, 1880), No. 660.

4. The Report from the Select Committee on Sugar Industries, with the proceedings of the Committee, more particularly pp. 23 and 24, No. 2318.

5. A letter from Mr. Bateman, one of the Joint Secretaries to the Royal Commission for the French Commercial Treaty negotiations, inclosing correspondence on the subject of duties on sugar and the most-favoured-nation clause as affecting bounties on the export of sugar, 10th November, 1881. (Confidential No. 4632, p. 318.)

6. The Treaties recently concluded by France with Belgium, Italy, Austria, and the Netherlands.

7. A Memorandum on the most-favoured-nation Article in Commercial Treaties, with a draft of proposed form of Article annexed to it, 25th November, 1881. (Confidential No. 4557.)

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request our attention to the statement of the case contained in the Memorandum last mentioned, and to the proposed form of Article; and he was to ask whether, in our opinion, the proposed Article, either as it was then drafted, or with amendments which we might suggest, was sufficient to secure to this country the benefits which it was intended to provide, or whether we would recommend any other form.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to request that we would favour your Lordship with any remarks which we might have to offer on the question generally, and especially as to what form of stipulation, if any, could be proposed to foreign Governments which would meet the case of the shipping and sugar bounties, which formed the subject of our Reports of the 12th and 23rd July, 1880,* copies of which were inclosed.

That under that head Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer again to Mr. Bateman's letter of the 10th November, and likewise to the Articles relative to drawbacks contained in the recent French Treaties (Inclosure No. 6), which were also quoted in the Memorandum.

That with regard to the position of the Colonies, and to the statement contained at p. 5 of the Memorandum, it was conceived that the most-favoured-nation clause did not affect the right of this country to extend to the produce of its Colonies more favourable treatment than it accords to the produce of foreign countries, and that the question of admitting colonial produce on more favourable terms than similar produce of foreign countries with which Great Britain had entered into most-favoured-nation stipulations, under the Treaties referred to or set out in Inclosures Nos. 1, 2, and 3, was entirely a question of policy.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in that view; and he was to state in conclusion that, as the French negotiations might be resumed immediately, and as it was very important that Her Majesty's Government should be furnished with our opinion on the questions then referred to us, your Lordship would feel much obliged if we would take them into immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship with our Report thereon at our earliest convenience.

* Confidential No. 4539.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think the draft of proposed most-favoured-nation Article appended on p. 7 to the Memorandum submitted to us is sufficient (with some slight alterations) to secure to this country the benefits which it is intended to provide for.

Suggesting alterations in proposed form of Article.

We suggest that the word "third" should be inserted before the word "nation" in the fourth line of the draft.

In line 9, after "taxes," we recommend the insertion of the words "or other impositions;" and in line 10, after "privileges," the words "including the acquiring, holding, and power of disposing of property."

We think the remainder of that (1) paragraph following the word "privileges" should be omitted. It does not seem properly to form part of a most-favoured-nation clause, but to be an independent stipulation for an absolute exemption, nothing more than which could be granted to any nation.

In the next paragraph (line 14 of the draft) we advise the omission of the word "all" before the word "goods," and the inserting of the words "or in respect of;" and also the insertion, after the word "goods," of the words "of whatever description and."

In the two following paragraphs, in line 28 of the draft, after the word "on," the words "or in respect of;" and in line 33 of the draft, after the word "on," the words "or in respect of" should be inserted.

Moreover, clauses 4 and 5 of the draft should be treated as independent Articles, as they are not governed by the introductory stipulation which governs clauses 1, 2, and 3.

Mode of dealing with sugar bounties.

The case of the sugar bounties would be most satisfactorily dealt with by a stipulation relating to drawbacks similar to that inserted in the recent Treaty between France and Belgium.

Proviso as to countervailing duties on bounty-fed goods.

If it be thought expedient so to frame the most-favoured-nation clause as to leave it within the power of this country to impose countervailing duties upon bounty-fed goods, in case, at any future time, it should be deemed expedient, as a matter of policy, to do so, a proviso might be added to the 2nd clause of the proposed most-favoured-nation Article, to the effect of the stipulation suggested on behalf of the sugar industries to the Royal Commission, which is set out at p. 4 of the printed Memorandum before us.

Case of shipping bounties.

It would seem difficult to meet the case of the bounties on shipping satisfactorily in any other way than by an express stipulation prohibiting them. If it be deemed expedient to leave it open to this country to take hostile action in respect of shipping receiving bounties, it might be done to some extent by a proviso to clause 3 of the proposed most-favoured-nation Article that there should be no right to claim most-favoured-nation treatment in respect of vessels receiving bounties.

Treatment of British Colonial produce.

We concur in the view that the most-favoured-nation clause does not affect the right of this country to extend to the produce of its Colonies more favourable treatment than it accords to the produce of foreign or third countries; and that the question of admitting colonial produce on more favourable terms than similar produce of foreign countries with which Great Britain has entered into most-favoured-nation stipulations is entirely a question of policy.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received September 4.)

My Lord, Temple, September , 1882.

Passage of foreign ships of war up the Irrawaddy to Mandalay.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 31st July last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the India Office, inclosing copy of a letter from the Government of India raising the question of their right to prohibit the passage of foreign vessels of war to Mandalay up the River Irrawaddy, which was stated to flow a distance of more than 250 miles from its mouth through British territory.

That the Marquis of Hartington had expressed his desire to be furnished with an authoritative statement of international law and practice in such a case, for the guidance of the Indian Government.

Proposed rule that it should only be allowed by the permission of the Indian Government.

That the rule which the Government of India proposed to lay down was that no vessel of war should proceed beyond Rangoon or Bassein without their express permission.

That Mr. Lister was to request that we would take the case into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to the answer which should be returned to the India Office letter.

That he was further to inclose a Memorandum drawn up by the Librarian of the Foreign Office on Treaty stipulations respecting the navigation of rivers by foreign ships, and also a map of the Irrawaddy.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Proposed rule justifiable.

That, in our opinion, the Government of India are entitled to impose such conditions with reference to the navigation of the Irrawaddy within their territory by vessels of war as they may deem expedient for the safety and well-being of the State, and, consequently, that they would be justified in laying down the proposed rule.

Whether it is expedient to lay it down or to prevent foreign vessels of war as a general rule from passing up the river is a question of policy upon which we do not feel called upon to express an opinion.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received April 28.)

Temple, April 27, 1882.

My Lord,

Collision between the "James Dale" and the "Salier." Salvage case.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was to submit the following case for our opinion:—

That a collision occurred on the night of the 4th February, 1880, between the British barque, "James Dale," and the German schooner, "Salier."

That the collision was reported to the Board of Trade on the 5th February by the Receiver at Cowes, who stated that the master and crew of the "Salier" had taken refuge on board the "James Dale" after the collision, and had refused to return to their ship, and that the master of the latter had brought in the "Salier" and handed her over to him for security of his claim for salvage.

That the next day the "Salier" was arrested under a warrant of the Admiralty Court, at the suit of the salvors. That, on the 30th July, 1880, the German Consul-General asked whether an official inquiry would be ordered into certain special circumstances attending the collision, and in case any deposition had been made by the master of the "James Dale," whether the Board of Trade would furnish a copy for the use of the Maritime Court at Bremerhaven, before which an inquiry had been instituted. That the Board of Trade replied that no inquiry had been held in this country, and that no deposition under section 448 of the Merchant Shipping Act had been taken, as the collision had occurred on the high seas.

That, on the 17th September, 1881, the German Government communicated to your Lordship the Report of the Maritime Court of Bremerhaven on the case, which was to the effect that the captain and crew of the "James Dale" had been guilty of acts of violent aggression against the crew of the German ship, in having forcibly prevented the latter from returning on board their own vessel after the collision, when it was found that she was not sinking; and again, after the arrival of both vessels at Cowes, in having forcibly prevented the captain and crew of the "Salier" from landing, and an officer from the German Consulate from communicating with them. That a précis of that Report and of the evidence obtained by the Board of Trade was inclosed.

That, in view of the Report of the Court at Bremerhaven, which declared the action of the master of the "James Dale" to be illegal and unprecedented, the German Ambassador requested that for the acts of violent aggression committed by the crew of the "James Dale" against the crew of the "Salier" an inquiry might be instituted, and that if found guilty the parties might be brought to trial.

Proceedings of Board of Trade as to inquiry into case.

That upon that the Board of Trade took steps to obtain further information in the case, and ascertained that the "Salier" was kept in arrest till the 27th March, when the Court had ordered her release, and that the case had been settled out of Court by the "Salier" paying 200*l*. as salvage.

That information as to details concerning the collision and what followed it was also furnished to the Solicitor to the Board of Trade by the German Vice-Consul at Portsmouth, and an affidavit was put in on the same subject by the German Consular Representative at Cowes, to the effect that extreme coercion was used to prevent the master and crew of the "Salier" from leaving the "James Dale." That a statement of the tug "Admiral," which towed the "Salier" to Cowes, was also received.

That all that evidence was summarised in Inclosure to Board of Trade letter of the 9th February.

That the Solicitor to the Board of Trade was then instructed to procure any further evidence which might be available, and he obtained a further statement from the master of the "James Dale," dated the 18th October, 1881.

That in that statement the master of the "James Dale" declared, amongst other things, that the Receiver at Cowes had put a shipbroker on board, and directed him (the master) to keep the crew of the "Salier" on board till the following morning, pending receipt of instructions from London.

That the Receiver, under date of the 20th October, 1881, wrote to the Solicitor to the Board of Trade, contradicting that statement, saying that there was not a word of truth in it, and bringing evidence to prove that he did not see the master of the "James Dale" till after 8 P.M. on the evening of the 5th February.

Board of Trade opposed to any further inquiry.

That the Board of Trade having thus completed its inquiries, informed the Foreign Office that the evidence seemed to show that the German crew were only prevented from returning to their vessel after they had abandoned her, and that they were only delayed from seeing their Vice-Consul from the evening of the 5th till the morning of the 6th February; that it was therefore the opinion of the Board, having regard to the time which had elapsed, and to the difficulty of finding the master and officers of the "James Dale," that a formal inquiry would be attended with great expense, nor was it probable that anything conclusive would result from such an inquiry as could be held. That the Board did not, it was stated, propose to take any further steps in the matter.

That your Lordship thereupon addressed a reply in the above sense to the German Ambassador, the draft of which had previously received the concurrence of the Board of Trade (28th November, 1881).

That on the 2nd January, 1882, the German Ambassador addressed a fresh representation to your Lordship, urging that, in spite of the difficulties set forth by the Board of Trade, a formal inquiry should be instituted, and the culprits punished for their illegal treatment of German sailors.

That, on referring that note to the Board of Trade, your Lordship received a reply, dated the 24th January, to the effect that even if an inquiry were held, it could be directed only to the circumstances of the collision itself, and not to what took place afterwards, and that no punishment could be inflicted by the Court for the offence alleged. That it was observed that it was, however, open to either Government, if so advised, to institute criminal proceedings, or that the master and crew of the German vessel could bring an action for false imprisonment, but that it was added that it was in the highest degree doubtful whether any such proceedings would have any chance of success. That the Board, asserting its inability to do anything further in the matter, left the question open to your Lordship to determine as to taking further legal opinion.

That in reply to that communication from the Board of Trade, your Lordship requested to be informed whether, in the opinion of the Board of Trade, the complaint of misconduct, brought by the German Government against the master of the "James Dale," was one which could legally form the subject of an inquiry, under section 241 of the Merchant Shipping Act.

That the Board of Trade rejoined on the 9th February, observing that the alleged misconduct of the master of the "James Dale," even if proved, was not of the class contemplated by section 241 of the Merchant Shipping Act, as rendering a master unfit to discharge his duties as a master.

That they pointed out that there was, on the contrary, proof that he rendered services to foreigners in distress, and that he took possession of the foreign ship only after she was abandoned by her master and crew.

That with a prize in his hand he was naturally anxious to keep it, and that if he exceeded the bounds of courtesy in his struggle to do so, and used undue violence for the protection of his interests and those of his crew, such misconduct was a temporary misconduct, provoked by exceptional circumstances, but not such as to incapacitate him for commanding a ship, or to lead to a fear that if allowed to retain a certificate he would discredit his position.

* Treaty between Her Majesty and His Serene Highness the Reigning Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont for the Marriage of His Royal Highness Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, and Her Serene Highness the Princess Helen Frederica Augusta of Waldeck and Pyrmont. Foreign Office No. 692.

That the Board of Trade added further, that a Local Marine Board, though well able to investigate charges of drunkenness or tyranny, was scarcely adapted to consider questions involving nice ethical distinctions, and unlikely to punish a man who had given shelter to men who had abandoned their vessel through fear for conduct to them afterwards which did not involve personal ill-treatment.

That they further observed that neither the master of the "Salier" nor the German Consul appeared to have made any complaint at the time, and that the salvage question was settled out of Court without any complaint of undue influence. That there was, no doubt, a conflict of evidence between the Receiver of Wrecks and the master of the "James Dale," but that on the whole they were of opinion that no proper case had been disclosed for inquiry under the Merchant Shipping Act, as understood and administered by the Board.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether a reply might properly be returned to the further representations of the German Government in the sense of the observations contained in the letter of the Board of Trade of the 9th February.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Conduct of master of "James Dale" towards crew of "Salier" and German Consul unjustifiable.

That we are disposed to take a more serious view of the action of the master of the "James Dale" than has been taken by the Board of Trade.

We concur with them in thinking that the refusal to permit the master and crew of the "Salier" to return to their vessel in the first instance was excusable, under the circumstances; but their detention on board the "James Dale" after both the vessels arrived in port was, in our opinion, altogether unjustifiable. And the course pursued towards the German Consul's representative was, perhaps, even more reprehensible.

Though there may be some exaggeration in the version of these transactions given by the crew of the German vessel, yet there seems little or no doubt that there was an illegal detention of the crew and grave discourtesy shown to the Consular representative.

We think it is doubtful whether section 241 of the Merchant Shipping Act applies to such a case as this, and it is not improbable that, if an inquiry were instituted, the Local Marine Board would not report that the master of the "James Dale" had been "guilty of a gross act of misconduct;" and, without such a Report, the Board of Trade would have no power to deal with his Certificate under section 242.

Expediency of an inquiry.

We would nevertheless suggest the expediency, under the circumstances, of holding an inquiry, in case the attendance of the necessary witnesses can be procured.

Reply to German Government.

Should the Board of Trade concur in this view, we would suggest that the German Government should be informed of the doubts which exist as to the power to institute an inquiry from which any practical result can be obtained; and also that such an inquiry would necessitate the presence of some of the crew of the "Salier" as witnesses before the Court of Inquiry, and that it would be necessary to secure their attendance at a time when the presence of the master of the "James Dale" could also be secured; but that Her Majesty's Government would not refuse the demand for an inquiry if, notwithstanding these difficulties, it should be persisted in.

We think it might be pointed out to the German Government that the practical difficulties have arisen from the fact that no complaint was made until after the German crew had left this country; and that if, in future, the German Consul were at once to call the attention of the British authorities to any cause of complaint, through his Ambassador, the matter could be more effectually dealt with.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 31st July last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a translation of a letter from the German Ambassador at this Court, requesting information as to the constitution, procedure, and powers of Prize Courts in England.

That Count Münster's letter had been referred to the Lords of the Admiralty, and a copy of their reply was annexed.

That Mr. Lister was now to submit for our approval a draft of a letter founded on that reply, which it was proposed to address to the German Chargé d'Affaires in answer to the inquiries of his Government, and Mr. Lister was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it was proper or sufficient, or whether we had any addition or modification to suggest.

Draft of Letter from Earl Granville to M. Stumm.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Foreign Office, , 1882.

WITH reference to Count Münster's note of the 6th ultimo, requesting to be furnished with copies of information respecting the constitution and procedure of Prize Courts in Great Britain, together with all laws, regulations, or official decrees relating to the same, I have the honour to inform you that Prize Courts are called into existence in this country at the commencement of each war, in pursuance of a special Commission from the Crown to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty under the Great Seal of England. A copy of the Commission issued at the commencement of the Russian war, dated 3rd April, 1854, is herewith inclosed.

The High Court of Admiralty, now known as the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, is the only Court ever authorized to act as a Prize Court within the limits of the United Kingdom. When necessary, some one or more of the Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad are also authorized to act as Prize Courts.

The practice and procedure in Prize Courts, when so constituted, are now regulated by 27 & 28 Vict., cap. 25, copy of which I have the honour to inclose herewith. This Act contains detailed provisions on the subject, and, further, by section 53, authorizes Her Majesty in Council to make Orders from time to time for the better execution of the Act. Since the passing of that Act, however, no occasion has arisen for the exercise of that power, and it seems that no such Orders in Council have been made.

The above Statute also provides for an appeal to Her Majesty in Council from any decree of a Prize Court, and such appeal is to be heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. All ships and goods lawfully captured are condemned to the Queen, and it rests with Her Majesty to determine what portion of the proceeds of any prize shall be granted to the captors. This is usually done by Proclamation.

The Prize Court has full power to carry out or execute its own decrees, and it cannot be interfered with by the ordinary Tribunals of the country, except when it exceeds the jurisdiction conferred upon it.

My Lord,

Assault by Mr. Reid on a French subject, Quasimodo, at Marancetra.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch with its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul in Madagascar,* relative to a case of assault and wounding with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed in that island in September 1881 by a British subject named Reid on a French subject (a coloured native of Réunion) named Quasimodo.

That the scene of the alleged crime was Marancetra, which was at a considerable distance from Tamatave, where Her Majesty's Consul was stationed, and the Commissioner of the French Government had urged Her Majesty's Consul to take the preliminary steps for bringing the offender to trial at Tamatave on the information supplied by the written statements of the complainant and French witnesses addressed to the French Vice-Consul at Tamatave, in order to spare them the double journey from Marancetra, which would have entailed great detriment to their private business.

That in December 1881 the French Vice-Consul had transmitted their statements, duly legalized by him, to Mr. Pakenham, with a request that he would take action on them.

That the case had been reported by him to Mr. Pakenham as one of murder as far back as October 1881, when the recovery of the wounded man was doubtful.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to Mr. Pakenham's letter to the French Commissioner at Tamatave of the 6th January last (Inclosure 1 in Mr. Pakenham's No. 15), and to the reply thereto of the 13th (Inclosure 2).

Grounds for Consul Pakenham's refusal to take action.

That Mr. Pakenham had refused to take any action in the matter unless the French Commissioner would "file a criminal information against Mr. Reid" (the offender) under his official signature and seal, and give a written undertaking that the witnesses for the prosecution should attend before the British Consular Court at Tamatave on the day fixed for the preliminary inquiry, and, if necessary, should be produced before the Superior Court of Mauritius (see Order in Council, Article 23).

That copies of the Madagascar Order in Council of the 4th February, 1869, of the Rules and Regulations made under paragraph 27 of that Order, and of the Treaty between Great Britain and Madagascar of the 23rd October, 1817, and 27th June, 1865, were inclosed for convenience of reference.

That the case appeared to your Lordship to be one of considerable gravity, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances, Mr. Pakenham would have been justified in summoning Mr. Reid or issuing a warrant for his apprehension without insisting on any of the formalities demanded by Mr. Pakenham in his letter to the French Commissioner of the 6th January (Inclosure 1), and generally as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Pakenham in reply to the request contained in the last paragraph of his despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Mr. Reid should have been summoned, or warrant against him issued.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Pakenham has not sufficiently appreciated the gravity of the case, and that he would have been justified in summoning Mr. Reid or issuing a warrant for his apprehension, without insisting on any of the formalities demanded by him in his letter to the French Commissioner of the 6th January.

We think there was ample information before Mr. Pakenham not only to warrant, but to require that Mr. Reid should be summoned before him.

Treaties between Great Britain and Madagascar of October 23, 1817 ("Commercial Treaties," vol. i, p. 354), and of June 27, 1865. (F. O. No. 494.)

And if there were an information by the injured man or any of the witnesses on oath, we think Mr. Pakenham would be justified in issuing a warrant for Reid's apprehension.

Consul should not make conditions as to attendance of witnesses, as he is not responsible for results of their non-attendance.

It would, of course, be necessary that the witnesses should appear before the Consul and give their evidence in the presence of the accused, and that he should have an opportunity of cross-examining them. But we do not think that the Consul should make any condition with respect to this before taking the necessary steps to bring the alleged offender to justice.

If in the result the witnesses should not attend, there may be a miscarriage of justice for want of their evidence, but no responsibility for the failure to bring to justice an offender who appears to have been guilty of a gross outrage will then rest with the British authorities.

North African and Soos Trading Company.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 13th instant, transmitting papers and requesting that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion and advice on the following question:—

Established independently of Sultan.

That a Company, styling itself the North African and Soos Trading Company, was attempting to establish itself on the south-western coast of Morocco below Mogador, and had entered into agreements with the Sheikhs of Soos, independently of the Sultan of Morocco, whose claim of sovereignty over the territory in question was acknowledged by Her Majesty's Government.

Company will not be protected against Sultan.

That the Moorish Government having protested against the proceedings of that Company as an infraction of the laws of Morocco, your Lordship had caused a letter to be addressed to the Company,* informing them the territories referred to in their prospectus were within the dominions of the Sultan, and that they must not expect protection from Her Majesty's Government against measures taken by His Highness to prevent illegal trading along the coast under agreements with native Chiefs, who had no authority to enter into them.

That Her Majesty's Minister at the Moorish Court about the same time addressed a communication to Her Majesty's Consul at Mogador, instructing him to make known to all persons within his Consular jurisdiction the views of the Moorish Government in regard to the Company. That that instruction received the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

Question as to publication of notification as to.

That Sir J. D. Hay also transmitted to the Foreign Office a letter he had received from the Sultan's Minister, Cid Mahomed Barghash, requesting him to forward a notification by the Moorish Government to the same effect to the "Times" newspaper for insertion, and that he applied for instructions.

That he was informed in reply that such a communication could not properly be made to a newspaper through Her Majesty's Representative, but that your Lordship was willing to give publicity to any official note on the subject which Cid Mahomed Barghash might address to your Lordship for that purpose.

That the Moorish Government adopted that suggestion, and that your Lordship was about to consult us as to the advisability of publishing as it stands the translation of the Moorish Minister's note inclosed in the annexed despatch, when a notice appeared in the "Times" (of which a copy was annexed). That it appeared that that notice was forwarded to the "Times" for publication by Her Majesty's Consul at Mogador, without authority from the Foreign Office or from Sir J. D. Hay.

* To North African Company, December 12, 1881.

That your Lordship understood that that note had aroused the indignation of the promoters of the Company, and that Lord Tenterden invited our attention to the letter addressed to Sir Charles Dilke by Mr. Kerby, a solicitor representing one of the shareholders, and to the reply which had been returned thereto. That the notice was quite correct as regards the facts therein stated, but that Consul Payton exceeded his authority and instructions in transmitting it to the "Times" for publication. That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the steps taken by Her Majesty's Consul might be held by Her Majesty's Government, in meeting any remonstrance addressed to them by the Company, to be justified by the circumstances of the case, and whether they should therefore accept the responsibility of the notice published by him in the "Times." That your Lordship also desired to be informed whether, in our opinion, there was any objection to the publication in the usual manner of the letter from the Moorish Minister to Sir J. D. Hay of the 21st January, 1882, or whether it should be made public at once in confirmation of the notice which had appeared in the "Times."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consul Payton's notice in the "Times" justified, and Her Majesty's Government may accept responsibility for it.

That the steps taken by Her Majesty's Consul may, we think, be held by Her Majesty's Government, in meeting any remonstrance addressed to them by the Company, to be justified by the circumstances of the case, and that the responsibility of the notice published in the "Times" may be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

No objection to publication of Moorish Minister's letter.

We do not think there is any objection to the publication at once, in the usual manner, of the letter from the Moorish Minister to Sir J. D. Hay of the 21st January, 1882. But its publication will probably not add much weight to the notice which has already appeared.

My Lord, Temple, April 5, 1882.

Arbitration under the Treaty of Managua.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, copies of three Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown, dated respectively the 12th December, 1877[*]; the 13th May, 1878; and the 8th August, 1878,[†] relating to the questions then in dispute between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Nicaragua, and arising out of the Treaty of Managua.

That those questions were referred to the Arbitration of the Emperor of Austria; and that Sir J. Pauncefote also transmitted the papers laid before Parliament[*] on the subject, which contained extracts from the preliminary correspondence, the Cases and Counter-Cases presented by each Government, and the Award of His Imperial Majesty. Also a printed Memorandum[†] on that Award by Mr. F. S. Reilly, who was intrusted with the preparation of the British Case and Counter-Case. That we should observe from the correspondence, at p. 50 of the Parliamentary Paper No. 2, that Her Majesty's Government refused to proceed to Arbitration unless every question arising under the Treaty of Managua was included in the reference, and that that condition was unreservedly accepted by the Government of the Republic.

Question of duties at Greytown.

That one of the principal questions laid before the Arbitrator was that of the right of the Nicaraguan Government to levy certain export and import duties at Greytown, which duties had been paid by British merchants and others under protest, Greytown having been declared a free port by Article VII of the Treaty of Managua. (British Case, Nicaragua, No. 2, p. 22: Article VII.)

That in the British Case, p. 24, sec. 105 (4), and in the British Counter-Case, p. 105, sec. 100 (16), the Arbitrator was asked to declare "that so much of the produce of the local duties or taxes on importation and exportation, which have been heretofore levied at Greytown, as has not already been applied for the purposes of the administration or preservation of the city should now be repaid, as far as practicable, to the merchants and others from whom those duties or taxes have been levied, and that, subject thereto, the same should now be applied for the purposes of the port."

That we should observe, however, that the Award declared, by Article VIII, that the imposition of import and export duties at Greytown (except as therein mentioned) was not warranted by the Treaty, but that it was silent as to the refunding of the duties paid under protest.

That the question had arisen whether such refund could be demanded by Her Majesty's Government, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote referred us to paras. 42–45 of Mr. Reilly's Memorandum, in which the point was considered and discussed.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government were entitled, under the Award, to demand the refund of those duties by the Nicaraguan Government, or whether the merchants who paid the same should be left to prosecute their claim in the Nicaraguan Courts, as suggested by Mr. Reilly.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

These duties contrary to Treaty.

That we think the Award of the Emperor of Austria must be taken as determining conclusively that the duties in question were levied in violation of the Treaty.

But we think the Arbitrator intentionally abstained from ordering a repayment to the merchants of the duties paid by them, deciding that this was a matter of civil reclamation.

By Award, Her Majesty's Government not entitled to their repayment.

We think, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government cannot treat the Award as entitling them to insist on a refund of the duties.

Nicaraguan Government should be urged to refund.

But, inasmuch as the result of an appeal to the Courts of Nicaragua would probably be of doubtful value, we think Her Majesty's Government might properly urge the Nicaraguan Government to refund the duties, the illegality of which has been established, without compelling the merchants entitled to them to resort to legal proceedings.

We have, &c.

Import duties at Greytown.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 5th April[‡] (of which a printed copy was inclosed) on the subject of the Award of the Emperor of Austria in the Mosquito Coast Arbitration, and the claim of British merchants to a refund of the import duties illegally levied at Greytown by the Nicaraguan Government before the date of the Award, Lord Tenterden was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further despatches, and their inclosures, which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister in Central America and Her Majesty's Consul at Greytown.*

Claim of British merchants for a refund of duties levied since the publication of the Award under Treaty of Managua.

That the question which now arose was in respect of the claim of British merchants at Greytown to a refund of the import duties illegally levied since the date of the Award. That the Award was dated the 2nd July last, but that, owing to the absence of a Representative of the Nicaraguan Government in Vienna, it was not actually communicated to them for a considerable time, and it was not until the 11th February last that a Decree appeared in their "Official Gazette" abolishing the import and export duties in question, which in the meanwhile had been exacted before by the local authorities. That we would observe that, in the explanatory Report which accompanied the Award (para. v, p. 28, Parliamentary Paper, sent with letter), it was stated that "the import duty will have to make room for some other system," and that your Lordship presumed that the Nicaraguan Government were entitled to a reasonable time for introducing this change of system, which involved a recourse to entirely different sources of revenue.

That if, therefore, Her Majesty's Government should decide upon demanding a refund of those duties, the first question to be determined would be the date from which the refund was to be made.

But that your Lordship entertained considerable doubt as to whether the merchants of Greytown had really sustained any loss by the payment of those duties, though illegally levied, which would morally justify Her Majesty's Government in pressing the above demand.

That, on that part of the question, Lord Tenterden was to invite our attention to Mr. St. John's despatch No. 3, Commercial, of the 14th February, and the translation inclosed therein of a letter addressed to him by the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister, Señor Cardenas; also to Mr. St. John's despatch No 3 A of the 7th March, inclosing a copy of the Nicaraguan Decree abolishing the duties, and his correspondence with Señor Medina, the successor of Señor Cardenas.

Nicaraguan Government admits justice of claim, but asks that it should not be pressed.

That the Nicaraguan Government did not contest the strict right of Her Majesty's Government to demand the refund of the duties paid since the promulgation of the Award, but that they strongly appealed to Her Majesty's Government not to press the claim on an impoverished country, supporting that appeal on equitable grounds which appeared to your Lordship to be worthy of careful consideration.

That the grounds on which the Nicaraguan Government founded their appeal were the following:—

That the import duty of 10 per cent. complained of was, it was alleged, substituted at the desire of the Greytown community in lieu of the ordinary taxes, which would rightfully have been imposed on them for the expenses of the port, under Article VII of the Treaty of Managua (Parliamentary Paper, "Nicaragua No. 2," p. 60).

That, if the Government had not exclusively applied the proceeds of that import duty to local purposes of administration and for the maintenance of the town and harbour of Greytown, they had devoted to those objects large sums taken from the general revenue of the Republic which could not have been supplied by local taxation.

That a large portion of the goods on which the import duty of 10 per cent. had been levied was destined for the interior of the Republic, and a drawback to the full amount of 10 per cent. was allowed out of the Nicaraguan import duty payable at the frontier, so that the payment of the 10 per cent. at Greytown was thereby cancelled. That, finally, that if the merchants received restitution of the import duty levied since the Award, they would not benefit by it, as local taxation to the same amount would have to be imposed to cover the expenses of administration incurred during that period.

That the proportion of imports which found their way into the interior of the Republic, and on which a drawback was allowed, was estimated by Mr. St. John and Consul Bingham at a fourth of the total imports, and those were valued at 200,000 dollars per annum.

That on that proportion the merchants could have no claim to indemnity, and, as regarded the goods not destined for the interior of the Republic, and on which no drawback had been allowed, it was not improbable that the 10 per cent. import duty, though paid under protest, was added to the selling price of the goods.

That, if so, the merchants had no moral claim to a refund of the duty paid on those goods, any more than they had for a refund of the duty already returned by way of drawback at the Nicaraguan frontier.

That Consul Bingham, in his despatch No. 2, stated that the amount of import duties paid in Greytown since the date of the Award was 12,593 dol. 82 c.

That, if one-fourth be deducted in respect of the drawbacks allowed on the goods destined for the interior, the amount of the claim would hardly exceed 9,000 dollars, even supposing that the refund could be claimed from the date of the Award; and that therefore, looking at the objects for which taxation might be imposed under Article VII of the Treaty of Managua, it was competent to the Nicaraguan Government to have levied by local taxation an amount equal to that irregularly levied by import duties.

That the question also remained whether the merchants were able to show that they were not recouped the import duty in the increased selling price of the goods.

That, in view of the above considerations, your Lordship was disposed to think that the British merchants would find it difficult to establish a sound claim to indemnity, and that before any demand was made to the Nicaraguan Government for a refund of the duties, some inquiry should be instituted, in order to ascertain the real measure of loss sustained by the claimants.

That, if we should concur in the above views, Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in insisting upon proof of the losses alleged to have been sustained by the British merchants of Greytown, before making a demand on the Nicaraguan Government for the indemnity which they claimed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government justified in demanding proof of losses by British merchants before claiming the indemnity.

That we think Her Majesty's Government would be justified, under the circumstances, in insisting upon proof of the losses alleged to have been sustained by the British merchants of Greytown before making a demand on the Nicaraguan Government for the indemnity which they claim.

the operation of the Western Pacific Orders in Council, 1877-79, and the other liabilities incidental to the status of a British subject, by having obtained letters of naturalization as a subject of Samoa.

That a statement of the facts of the case would be found in Inclosure 2 of the Colonial Office letter of the 19th May.

That the Law Officers of the Crown advised in 1872 (Paper 2), with special reference to Fiji, that British subjects could not, by assuming the nationality of an uncivilized State, withdraw themselves from British jurisdiction, and the question now raised in the case of Mr. Hunt was whether Samoa was a "foreign State" within the meaning of section 6 of "The Naturalization Act, 1870."

That Sir A. Gordon, in a Memorandum which forms Inclosure 4 of the Colonial Office letter of the 19th May, contended that, even if Samoa were a foreign State within the meaning of the Act, Mr. Hunt's claim to be a Samoan subject was not such as to exempt him from the operation of the Western Pacific Orders in Council.

That Mr. Lister had to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in the Colonial Office letter of the 19th May, namely, whether there was any ground for the contention that Hunt could be naturalized as a Samoan subject, so as to be taken out of the High Commissioner's jurisdiction; and whether, by recognizing a native Government in the Western Pacific to the extent of concluding Treaties with it, Her Majesty's Government could be held to have bound itself to recognize its letters of naturalization granted to British subjects who resisted the Queen's authority.

That, in relation to the above points, Mr. Lister was to direct our attention to the Judgment of the Chief Justice of Fiji, which we would find at p. 25 of the printed papers forming Inclosure 3 in the Colonial Office letter of the 19th May.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Hunt not exempt from British jurisdiction.

That, in our opinion, there is no ground for the contention that Hunt was naturalized as a Samoan subject so as to be taken out of the High Commissioner's jurisdiction.

Samoa not a "foreign State" by Act of 1870.

The information before us appears to us to show that Samoa is not a "foreign State within the meaning of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," and even if it were, there appears to have been no legal act of naturalization in the case of Mr. Hunt.

Conclusion of Treaties does not bind Great Britain to recognize letters of naturalization.

We are of opinion that, by the mere fact of recognizing a native Government in the Western Pacific to the extent of concluding Treaties with it, Her Majesty's Government cannot be held to have bound itself to recognize the letters of naturalization granted by it to British subjects. The fact that such Treaties have been entered into is not, we think, conclusive that the Government with whom they have been made is the Government of a "foreign State" within the meaning of the Act of 1870.

Whether it is a "foreign State" or not must be determined by other considerations.

No. 41.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received December 1.)

Temple, November 30, 1882.

My Lord,

Case of Mr. Arsenian, a Persian, naturalized in Great Britain.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 21st instant, stating that in our Report of the 22nd November, 1881, on the case of Mr. Arsenian, we advised that there was no reason to modify the opinion we had expressed in our previous Report, that Mr. Arsenian was not exempt from the jurisdiction of the Persian Consular Court at Constantinople in a civil suit instituted against him there; but that, for the reasons stated by us, we suggested that Her Majesty's Ambassador should afford his good offices to Mr. Arsenian, and should comply with his request that an officer from Her Majesty's Embassy might attend at the Court of the Persian Ambassador when the case should come before his Excellency on appeal from the Consular Court.

Judgment given against him by Persian Court at Constantinople, with power to appeal.

That the Earl of Dufferin was instructed accordingly; and that we should perceive from his Excellency's despatch that the case was tried on the 9th January last; that a Dragoman from the British Embassy was present throughout the trial, who reported that the proceedings were conducted with perfect propriety and decorum, and that every opportunity was given to Mr. Arsenian's counsel to state their case; and that, although Judgment was given against the appellant, it was explained by the legal adviser to the Persian Ambassador that a door had been left open for Mr. Arsenian to make good his claims to a portion of the property upon the ground of his co-partnership with his father.

Mr. Thomson to assist him unofficially on his going to Tehran.

That Mr. Arsenian thereupon determined to go to Tehran to press his case with the Persian Government, and that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran was instructed to afford him such advice and assistance, unofficially, as he might think proper, inasmuch as he was a naturalized British subject, though amenable to the laws and jurisdiction of Persia, the country of his birth.

Mr. Thomson's three objections to Persian jurisdiction.

That a despatch had been received from Mr. Thomson, Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, in which, with reference to the instruction above referred to, he raised the following points:—

1. That he believes Mr. Arsenian is not of Persian, but Turkish, origin.
2. That he (Mr. Thomson) is not aware that the law of Persia requires the formal assent of the Government to a change of nationality by a Persian subject.
3. That the Russian Government protects Persian subjects naturalized in Russia, not only out of Persia, but in Persia itself, and that under the most-favoured-nation clause of the British Treaty with Persia Her Majesty's Government is entitled to the same privilege (Treaty, Article IX).

Objections 1 and 2 of no force.

That, with regard to the first point, it might be remarked that Mr. Arsenian himself had never denied his Persian origin, but, on the contrary, had affirmed it throughout, and that if he were really a Turkish subject the same difficulty would arise as to extending British protection to him in Turkey as against the Turkish authorities.

That, with regard to the second point, it was to be observed that the Persian Ambassador at Constantinople had formally affirmed that such was the law of Persia.

Third objection. Jurisdiction conceded to Russia in similar cases can be claimed by Great Britain.

Can case, after settlement in Persian, be transferred to British Court at Constantinople?

That, as regards the third point, which would appear to be the most important, it was to be presumed that if the Persian Government conceded to Russia the right of protecting officially, in Persia, Persian subjects naturalized in Russia, Her Majesty's Government should claim the same privilege in the case of Mr. Arsenian; but that your Lordship would be glad to know whether the case, having already been tried and decided by the Persian Court in Constantinople, Her Majesty's Government could demand that the property of Mr. Arsenian, confiscated by the Judgment of that Court, should be transferred to Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, as suggested by Mr. Thomson.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Thomson in answer to his despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Concur in opinion as to objections 1 and 2.

That, with regard to the first two points raised by Mr. Thomson, we concur in thinking that it would be impossible to take any action upon them in the present case.

Great Britain can claim rights of jurisdiction conceded to Russia.

As regards the third point, there can be no doubt that Great Britain is entitled to claim that the treatment of her subjects shall be placed on the footing of the treatment of the subjects of the most favoured nation. And if, as a matter of right, Persian subjects who have been naturalized in Russia, without the consent of the Persian Government, are accorded the same rights as natural-born Russian subjects, we think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in insisting that Persian subjects, naturalized in Great Britain, should receive the same treatment. But it would need to be clearly made out that the term "subjects" had, as a matter of right, been given this extended meaning, and that it was not a mere concession in particular cases.

But further information as to such concession necessary.

The information afforded by Mr. Thomson's despatch is far too indefinite to enable us to form a judgment upon the question. We would suggest, therefore, that, in order to guide the action of Her Majesty's Government in the future, inquiry should be made of Mr. Thomson whether the point has ever been distinctly raised between the Russian and Persian Governments, and in what class of cases naturalized Persians have, in Persia, received Russian protection as against Persian authorities, and whether such cases have frequently arisen.

Case cannot be transferred to British Court at Constantinople.

But whatever the result of these inquiries may be, we think that Mr. Thomson should be informed that, after what has occurred in the present case, it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to demand that the property of Mr. Arsenian should be transferred to Her Majesty's Supreme Court at Constantinople, as suggested by Mr. Thomson.

No. 42.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received July 6.)

Temple, July 5, 1882.

My Lord,

War contributions and tax on traders levied by Chile in Peruvian territory.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 14th instant, stating that the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been called to an increase in the tax on traders which was recently decreed by the Chilean authorities in Lima, in excess of the amount formerly levied by the Peruvian Government, and to an assertion of right on the part of the Chilean Secretary of State to impose war contributions on foreigners in the territories of Peru then in the military occupation of the Chilean forces.

Treaty stipulations.

That the despatches which had been received from Her Majesty's Diplomatic Agent at Lima on the subject of those exactions by the Chilean authorities were forwarded therewith, together with a copy of the Treaties between Great Britain and Chile of the 4th October, 1854, and between Great Britain and Peru of the 10th April, 1850, and a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet, from which we should perceive that both Chile and Peru were precluded by Treaty from imposing, in their respective countries, military exactions and requisitions on British subjects.* That that immunity was enjoyed also by the subjects of other Powers under their Treaties. That it appeared from Sir S. St. John's despatch No. 103 that the Representatives of the Powers in Lima demurred to the doctrine of the Chilean Government, that the latter, though belligerents in occupation of Peruvian territory, were justified in exacting war contributions in that territory from natives and foreigners alike, and they contended that such doctrine was contrary to international law, as well as to the Treaties. That although no such war contribution had yet been levied by the Chileans on foreigners in the occupied territories of Peru, the question might arise any day; and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the contention of the foreign Representatives on the above question could be supported as regarded the immunity claimed by Her Majesty's Representative for British subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

British subjects cannot claim immunity.

That we do not think the contention of the foreign Representatives can be supported as regards the immunity claimed by Her Majesty's Representative for British subjects.

* Sir S. St. John, No. 103, November 7, 1881; Mr. Graham, No. 33, April 21, 1882; Hertslet's Treaties, vol. ix, pp. 624, 952; Memorandum (Sir E. Hertslet), June 8, 1882.

No breach of Treaty with Chile, or of international law, in levying of tax by one country in military occupation of another.

Though we have not definite information before us upon the point, we understand that the Chilean army is, as a belligerent, in military occupation of a part of the Peruvian territory. This being so, the imposition there of the tax complained of is not, in our opinion, a breach of the Treaty between this country and Chile.

It also appears to us that there is no violation of international law if a tax levied by a Power in military occupation of the territory of another be levied upon foreign residents within the occupied territory.

Tax is not a "military exaction."

Even if Chile be regarded as de facto ruler of that part of Peru which is occupied by her, and as bound in respect of it by the Treaty with this country, the tax imposed on traders does not appear to us to be a "military exaction or requisition" within the meaning of the Treaty, even if some of the revenue raised by it be required for the purposes of war.

My Lord,

"City of Mecca." Collision case.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 30th ultimo,* stating that he was to transmit to us the reply of the Portuguese Government to the proposal made to them by Her Majesty's Government in October last to refer to arbitration the question whether the Judgments of the Portuguese Tribunals whereby the British steamer "City of Mecca" was held solely to blame and mulcted in the whole damages and costs arising out of her collision with the Portuguese steamer "Insulano" were compatible with the International Sailing Rules.†

That the proposal of Her Majesty's Government, and the grounds on which it was based were contained in your Lordship's despatch No. 33 of the 30th September, 1881, to Mr. Morier (Correspondence: Part II, p. 99), the draft of which had previously been submitted and approved by us in our Report of the 10th September, 1881 (Correspondence: Part II, p. 98).

That a copy of that despatch was communicated to the Portuguese Government by Mr. Morier on the 20th October last, and that their reply, which was dated the 14th April last, formed the inclosure in Sir C. Wyke's No. 21, Commercial, of the 25th April (Correspondence: Part II, p. 105).

Portugal declines arbitration.

That we should perceive that the Portuguese Government absolutely declined the proposed arbitration, and that the note of the Foreign Minister, Senhor Serpa, entered at great length on the various points raised in the case.

That inclosed was a Minute on the Portuguese reply, which concluded with some suggestions as to the substance of a rejoinder on the part of Her Majesty's Government,‡ and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the observations and suggestions contained in the Foreign Office Minute thereon, and if not, that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of the rejoinder which might properly be sent thereto.

Annex.

Extract from Minute by Sir J. Pauncefote, dated June 24, 1882.

I would suggest the following heads of a rejoinder:—

1. Express satisfaction at the disclaimer of the doctrine we objected to as to territorial waters, and state that we did not invite them to come to any agreement as to the limits of territorial waters, and it is unnecessary, therefore, to pursue that subject.

2. Express regret at refusal to arbitrate, and explain that we did not propose to reopen the suits, which are finally disposed of so far as legal Tribunals are concerned, and that it is precisely because all legal remedies are exhausted that we desired to submit to arbitration our contention that the Portuguese Judgments are incompatible with the International Sailing Rules, and constitute, therefore, a breach of an international compact between the two Governments.

3. Repudiate the charge that the action of the "City of Mecca" was cowardly and malicious, and that she failed to render proper assistance. Re-establish the facts.

4. Point out that the protest of the Portuguese captain is alone sufficient to establish our case, which does not rest on the premises stated by Senhor Serpa, but on the fact that, owing to his mistake as to the meaning of Article 14, the captain of the "Insulano" got into the way of the "City of Mecca" instead of getting out of it, and that the Portuguese Tribunals refused to recognize any fault on his part.

5. State that the Judgment has not been enforced in England, and that as regards the decision of the French Cour de Cassation, point out that it proceeds on the assumption that there were exceptional circumstances which justified the "Insulano" in departing from Rule 14, whereas there is not a vestige of evidence of any such exceptional circumstances; and unless these can be pointed out, Her Majesty's Government cannot accept that decision as any authority in support of Senhor Serpa's arguments.

6. Her Majesty's Government therefore maintain the opinion that there has been a grave miscarriage of justice; that the Portuguese Tribunals were bound by the International Sailing Rules to pronounce the captain of the "Insulano" in fault for having admittedly violated Article 14 and caused the peril, and that they were not justified under those Rules in laying the whole blame on the "City of Mecca" for not manœuvring so as to avoid the peril thus created by the "Insulano."

7. In conclusion, say that Her Majesty's Government can only repeat the expression of their regret that their friendly proposal to refer the question to arbitration has been rejected on grounds which they consider altogether unsatisfactory and insufficient.

The papers, however, should, in the first place, be referred to the Law Officers, for their observations and suggestions.

My Lord,

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 25th July last, on the case of the "City of Mecca," he had the honour to transmit to us the draft of a despatch which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon in reply to the note of the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs declining arbitration.

Draft of a Despatch from Earl Granville to Sir C. Wyke.

(No. . Commercial.)

Sir,

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the reply of the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs, transmitted in your despatch No. 21, Commercial, of the 25th April last, to their proposal to refer to international arbitration the question whether, in the case of the collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano," the Portuguese Tribunals had failed to give proper effect to the International Sailing Rules. The grounds on which that proposal was based were explained in my despatch No. 33 of the 30th September, 1881, to Mr. Morier, of which a copy was left by him with Senhor Hintze Ribeiro. In that despatch I also expressed the hope that the Portuguese Government would disclaim the doctrine laid down by their Supreme Court, that the territorial waters of Portugal extend as far as the sight can reach from her shores.

Her Majesty's Government note with satisfaction that the Foreign Minister, in his reply, clearly repudiates that doctrine. I need not follow his Excellency in his remarks as to the absence of any fixed international rule on the subject, as Her Majesty's Government did not ask that the Portuguese Government should agree to any particular rule, but only took exception to the doctrine laid down in the Judgment complained of. That question is now disposed of by the assurance given by Senhor Serpa that Portugal does not claim any greater extent of maritime territory than other nations. Her Majesty's Government, however, regret to learn that the Portuguese Government decline their proposal of an arbitration on the question of the International Sailing Rules; and it appears to them that Senhor Serpa does not correctly apprehend the nature of that proposal; for one of the grounds taken by his Excellency for declining the arbitration is that neither the constitutional law of Portugal nor the public law of Europe will allow the revival of a suit which has been definitely terminated.

On this point I have to observe that Her Majesty's Government did not ask that the Judgments should be reopened. They admit that the Judgments are final, but they contend that the Portuguese Government are liable to indemnify the owners of the "City of Mecca" for the consequences resulting to them from the disregard by the Portuguese Tribunals of the International Sailing Rules; and the only question they proposed to refer to arbitration is whether the Portuguese Tribunals had properly applied the Sailing Rules to the facts proved or admitted before them, or had failed to give effect to the international engagement therein contained to the prejudice of British subjects.

It is precisely because all legal remedies are exhausted that Her Majesty's Government desired to submit to arbitration their contention that the Portuguese Judgments are incompatible with the International Sailing Rules, and constitute, therefore, a breach of international compact between the two Governments.

Senhor Serpa, in declining this proposal, criticizes the arguments contained in my despatch to Mr. Morier, and after giving a summary of the case as therein presented, he states that "its capital grounds or essential premises" are as follows:—

1. That the original cause of the collision was that the "Insulano" did not alter her course as soon as she saw the "City of Mecca."

2. That the Portuguese Courts, "by not imputing the fault to the 'Insulano,'" failed to carry out Article 14 (British) of the Sailing Rules.

I desire to point out, however, that both these statements are inaccurate.

As regards the first, the contention of Her Majesty's Government was not that the "Insulano" did not alter her course "as soon as she saw the 'City of Mecca,'" but that she failed to do so in time to get out of the way of the "City of Mecca," as she was bound to do by Article 14.

As regards the second, Her Majesty's Government have only contended that the Portuguese Court, by relieving the "Insulano" from any blame whatever, and imputing the whole blame to the "City of Mecca," have failed to give effect to Article 14.

Senhor Serpa goes on to argue that Article 14 does not require the steamer which is bound to get out of the way to alter her course the moment she sights the other steamer, and that as the appreciation of the proper moment for doing so is a difficult matter, Article 14 is made subordinate to Article 19 (British), which prescribes a departure from it when special circumstances render it necessary to avoid immediate danger; that the "City of Mecca" was bound to avoid the danger, and did not; and that the misinterpretation by the Portuguese captain of Article 14, far from constituting such a grievous mistake as Her Majesty's Government endeavour to make out, was quite excusable under the circumstances.

As regards this last statement, I would observe that it is hardly possible to conceive a more dangerous violation of the Sailing Rules than that of a steamer wrongfully attempting to cross the bows of another when bound to get out of her way, under Article 14, especially where (as in the present case) the captain of the offending steamer is under the mistaken impression that he is doing his duty, and obeying the Sailing Rules, instead of violating them, and is the more likely, therefore, to persevere in his blunder.

The protest of the master of the "Insulano" is most important on this point. He stated that, as the "City of Mecca" did not get out of the way, she being bound to do so, while it behoved the "Insulano" to keep her course, "he sheered to the southward to see if he could thus avoid the collision, which was then imminent."

It is admitted that the vessels were crossing within the meaning of Article 14, and that it was the duty of the "Insulano," and not of the "City of Mecca," to get out of the way.

Nevertheless, Senhor Serpa argues that the mistake of the captain of the "Insulano" was immaterial, as he wore off to the south when the danger was immediate and evident, and the collision would not have occurred had the "City of Mecca" taken steps to avoid it, as bound to do by Article 19.

It is clear, however, that the "Insulano," owing to the mistake of her master, did not wear to the southward in time to get out of the way, as she was bound to do under Article 14, and the jury expressly found that, had she altered her course at a proper distance, the collision would have been avoided. (British Underwriters' Suit; Answers 30 and 31.) It cannot be denied, therefore, that the imminent danger which the "City of Mecca" is blamed for not avoiding was created by the wrongful navigation of the "Insulano," and, in fact, that the "Insulano" got in the way of the "City of Mecca," instead of getting out of her way, as bound to do by Article 14.

It has never been pretended throughout the whole proceedings that any special circumstances existed which justified a departure from that important Sailing Rule. Its violation by the captain of the "Insulano" was unquestionably the primary cause of the collision. Yet he was exonerated by the Portuguese Tribunals of all blame for the consequences of his grave mistake.

The ground assumed by Senhor Serpa appears to Her Majesty's Government to have really tbe effect, when applied to such a state of facts as that of the present case, of reducing to a nullity the international agreement contained in Article 14. "The absolute rule of navigation," his Excellency says, "the supreme and immutable precept imposed by the Regulations upon every ship, is that whenever a danger is impending they should regulate their course, or steer in such a manner as to obviate such danger, although it may be necessary for the purpose to act contrary to, or to break, the Rules laid down in the foregoing Articles." This principle, which can have no application except when it is already too late for safety to be obtained by adherence to the Rules, is here apparently extended so as to leave it in all cases of "impending danger" to the discretion of the masters of ships to "act contrary to, or break, the Rules."

To the contention of Her Majesty's Government, that even assuming that there was blame on the side of the "City of Mecca," the Court should have held that the "Insulano" was also in fault for not having obeyed Article 14, and that each party should have been ordered to bear his own losses, as provided by Article 1568 of the Portuguese Code, Senhor Serpa replies that the jury did not find that the "Insulano" had been guilty of a fault in the sense and for the purposes of Article 1568; and further, that the owners of the "City of Mecca" did not ask the Court to apply Article 1568 of the Code, but only to find the "Insulano" solely to blame, and that the Court could only decide according to what is petitioned, and he cites a Municipal Law in support of this objection.

This is a new argument, now raised for the first time, and the force of which Her Majesty's Government are unable to recognize. They apprehend that this rule of procedure cannot possibly relieve the Court from giving effect to a positive enactment like Article 1568 of the Code on the law of collision—an enactment founded on such obvious principles of justice that it has found its place in some form or other in the jurisprudence of all civilized States.

Senhor Serpa then proceeds to state that one of the Portuguese Judgments has been enforced in France and another in England; that the French Tribunal entirely concurred in the Portuguese decision and its application of the Sailing Rules to the case, and that it is impossible that all these suits and Judgments should now be reopened.

I have already explained that it is not proposed to reopen any Judgments. I may mention, however, that, as regards the enforcement in England of the first Judgment in favour of the English underwriters, no such proceeding took place, the Order obtained for that purpose in the Court of Admiralty, under the impression that the Judgment was in rem, having been set aside on appeal.

As regards the enforcement in France of the second Judgment in favour of the French underwriters, it is to be observed that in its "Arrêt" the Court of Cassation approves the view of the Court of Rouen that, if Article 14 was not obeyed by the "Insulano," "c'est que les circonstances particulières, autorisant aux termes de l'Article 19 du même Décret une dérogation à ces Règles, se présentaient dans l'espèce." But there is nothing whatever to show what were the "circonstances particulières" which justified the "Insulano" in departing from Rule 14. Not a vestige of them is to be found in the evidence throughout the whole proceedings, and unless these can be pointed out, Her Majesty's Government cannot accept that decision as any authority in support of Senhor Serpa's arguments.

I regret to observe that his Excellency cites a passage from one of the Portuguese Judgments in the case implying that the "City of Mecca," in a cowardly manner, and "out of mere caprice," ran into the "Insulano" because the latter, for some reason, did not keep from her bow.

I am glad of this opportunity to give the most emphatic denial to those imputations, which are unsupported by the evidence, and most unjust towards the officers and crew of the British vessel. That juries, in cases of this kind, should be carried away by strong feelings of national prejudice can well be conceived, and no more striking instance can be cited than that which occurred in the third suit against the "City of Mecca," where the jury, in order to set at rest once for all the competency of the Portuguese Courts of Justice, decided, in opposition to the declarations of the parties, and in the face of the reports of the captains of the two ships, and in the face of everything that was stated in the pleadings, that the accident occurred at a distance of 3 miles from the coast.

But that imputations of cowardice and inhumanity should have been so lightly and inconsiderately made from the Judicial Bench against the officers and crew of the British vessel cannot fail, when the whole case is published in this country, to excite feelings of painful surprise.

Again, Senhor Serpa urges that the "City of Mecca," instead of rendering assistance to the "Insulano" after the collision, steamed away at full speed, and only stopped after she had discovered that her own damage compelled her to put into Lisbon, and two guns of distress had been fired by the "Insulano," for which misconduct alone the "City of Mecca" would have been held solely to blame by a British Court under section 16 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1873."

That section, it is true, provides that in every case of collision it shall be the duty of the master of each vessel, if and so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew, and passengers, to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel such assistance as may be practicable and necessary; and that if he fails to do so without reasonable cause, the collision shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his own wrongful act, neglect, or default.

But on this part of the case his Excellency, unintentionally, no doubt, does injustice to the Commander of the "City of Mecca," and it becomes necessary to re-establish the facts.

This charge of misconduct against the English captain was originally made in the suits brought against the "City of Mecca," but it was entirely contradicted by the English crew, and the condition of the "City of Mecca" after the collision, as well as the declarations of some of the witnesses on the side of the "Insulano," attest the humane conduct of the English captain, who succeeded, notwithstanding the perilous state of his own vessel, in rescuing the crew and passengers of the "Insulano," and landing them safely at Lisbon.

After the collision the Portuguese steamer had no holes that were visible, and that showed her to be in a dangerous and sinking condition, so much so, that whereas the accident took place at 1 P.M. she only foundered at 2·45 P.M. The passengers of the "Insulano" considered their steamer to be in less danger, because after they had jumped on board the "City of Mecca" they returned to the Portuguese ship, thinking themselves safer there. And even the Portuguese captain himself thought that his ship was in a better condition, as he was the first to call on her passengers, who had jumped on board the British steamer, to return to the "Insulano."

On the contrary, the British steamer, after the two ships had got clear of each other, was found to be in great danger, with her stern wrung away from the plates, with a hole of 3 inches, as far as could be seen, under water, with her head twisted to starboard, with 18 inches of water in her forehold, while the compartment that had been struck was filling rapidly; and the English captain, thinking that the Portuguese steamer had suffered no damage that placed her in so great a danger, ordered the engines to go at full speed, so as to hasten his entrance into the bar of Lisbon. But he had not gone far when, a signal of distress from the "Insulano" having been reported to him, he immediately stopped and lowered boats.

The condition of the British ship was so dangerous that, having sent three boats, each in charge of a mate, in order to save, conjointly with the boats of the "Insulano," the people wrecked from that steamer, she had only time to hoist one into the ship, and she had to tow the other two, and when one of these got loose, the hawser having parted, she could not pick it up, and the mate cried out to a schooner that was near to pick it up, there being at the time 24 inches of water in the fore-hold. With her compartment full of water, she only arrived at Belem at 6 P.M., and would have foundered at sea if the forty soldiers whom she saved from the "Insulano" had not rendered assistance by working the pumps, in order to empty the compartment that had been struck.

As regards the complaint made against the captain of the British steamer that it was necessary to fire two guns for him to make up his mind to render assistance to the shipwrecked people, his statement that the first gun was not heard on board the "City of Mecca" until after the boats had been lowered, is confirmed by the deposition of the Captain of the 2nd Regiment of Artillery, Manuel Rodrigues d'Oliveira, who commanded the detachment on their way to Madeira, and who swore that some efforts were made to fire a few shots from a small piece of artillery on board the "Insulano," but the guns could hardly be heard, because the powder was already wet.

I have dwelt at some length on this part of Senhor Serpa's note, on account of the gravity of the charge brought against the British vessel and of its injustice.

After full consideration of the various arguments adduced by Senhor Serpa, Her Majesty's Government are unable to modify their views of the case as expressed in my despatch to Mr. Morier of the 30th September, 1881. They maintain the opinion that there has been a grave miscarriage of justice; that the Portuguese Tribunals were bound by the International Sailing Rules to pronounce the captain of the "Insulano" in fault for having admittedly violated Article 14 and caused the peril, and that they were not justified under those Rules in laying the whole blame on the "City of Mecca" for not maœuvring so as to avoid the peril thus created by the "Insulano."

In conclusion, I can only repeat, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, the expression of their regret that their friendly proposal to refer to arbitration the question of the liability of Portugal for the consequences of the Judgments rendered by her Tribunals in this case has been rejected on grounds which they consider altogether unsatisfactory and insufficient.

I have to instruct you to place a copy of this despatch in the hands of the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 19.)

Temple, January 17, 1882.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that, by your Lordship's direction, he transmitted to us the correspondence marked in the margin of his letter,* from which we would perceive that two firms, Messrs. Lipman and Co. and Messrs. Weiss, Brothers, consigned some goods to certain forwarding agents in Russia; that those agents being indebted to the Russian Customs on general account, the authorities had detained the goods in question to secure the payment of their claim.

Seizure by Russian Customs of goods consigned to agents by Messrs. Lipman and Messrs. Weiss, on account of debts of agents.

That Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh was instructed to represent to the Russian Government the hardship of making foreign merchants responsible for the debts of their forwarding agents, with whose liabilities they had no concern; but the reply of M. de Giers (inclosure in Mr. Wyndham's No. 82 of the 5th October) was to the effect that, under their Customs Regulations, the consignee and not the consignor is deemed the owner of the goods, and that, as there were no other goods of the agent in the Customs sufficient to cover his liability, the shipments in question could not be released.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us also to the further note from M. de Giers (Inclosure 3 in Sir E. Thornton's No. 88), in which he justified the action of the Customs.

That in the covering despatch (No. 88), Sir E. Thornton reported his conversation with M. de Giers, who expressed a desire to know what was the practice in England in such cases, and, in reply to the inquiry whether, on proof of the property in the goods being in the shippers, they would be released, replied that the question was one for a lawyer to answer.

Correspondence with Russian Government.

That, under those circumstances, your Lordship instructed Sir E. Thornton to obtain a legal opinion on the question whether the consignor could, by Russian law, recover his goods on proof that they were his property and not that of the agent.

That the opinion of the legal adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburgh, inclosed in Sir E. Thornton's No. 92, Commercial, of the 7th ultimo, showed that, although the consignor, on proving his title to the goods seized for the debt of the forwarding agent, was entitled to recover them, the practical difficulties were so great that the consignor had but little chance of success, and in the present cases, more than three months having elapsed since the date of the seizure by the Customs, it would seem that the remedy of the shippers, such as it might be, in the Courts of Law was no longer available.

That it appeared to your Lordship, under all the circumstances, that it might be desirable that Her Majesty's Ambassador should ascertain for what sum the Customs authorities would release the goods, in view of the other securities in their hands (see M. de Giers' note of the $\frac{\text{21st September}}{\text{3rd October}}$, inclosed in Mr. Wyndham's despatch No. 82, Commercial, of the 5th October), and to suggest to Messrs. Lipman and Messrs. Weiss that they should endeavour to effect a compromise with the Customs in order to free their goods, reserving their remedy against the agent.

Suggesting payment for release of goods, and compromise with Customs.

That before taking any further step in the matter your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion on the above suggestion, and generally as to the course which should be pursued; also as to what answer should be returned to M. de Giers' inquiry respecting the practice in this country in similar cases. Your Lordship presumed that Sir E. Thornton might be instructed to state that where the property in the goods consigned had not passed to the agent, the consignor, on proof of his title, would recover them, subject to the agent's lien thereon and to the payment of duties to which the goods were liable.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's communication of the 10th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That whether the views expressed by M. de Giers or the opinion of M. Cieszkowski in relation to the legality of the action of the Russian Government be correct, the result appears to be that Messrs. Lipman and Messrs. Weiss have no power to obtain the restoration of their goods by legal process. Notwithstanding that the extreme hardship of the case is apparent, we cannot say that the action of the Russian Government is so repugnant to justice as to justify Her Majesty's Government in insisting upon the release of the goods; for although, as is shown by the letter from the Customs Department of the 7th instant, the practice of the Department would prevent any such seizure in this country, yet a similar hardship might arise here if, under our law of distress for rent, the goods of a consignor were seized on the premises of an agent.

Approving suggested course.

We therefore think that the course suggested by your Lordship is the best that can be pursued, and that Messrs. Lipman and Messrs. Weiss should be informed that, the above views being entertained, Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh will be instructed again to represent the hardship of the case, and to learn from the Russian Government what is the smallest payment (in view of the fact that the goods of other consignors are in their possession) by which the release of Messrs. Lipman's and Messrs. Weiss' goods can be secured, and those gentlemen should also be informed that they will best consult their own interests by arriving at a compromise with the Russian authorities, reserving their remedy against the agent.

Practice in England in similar cases.

The letter of the 7th January, above referred to, affords the information which will enable your Lordship to reply to M. de Giers' inquiry respecting the practice in this country in cases similar to the present.

My Lord,

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn, a British Jew, from Russia.

WE are honoured with Lord Tenterden's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that in our Report of the 15th December relative to the case of Mr. Lewisohn, we suggested that a fuller Report should be obtained from a legal authority in St. Petersburgh upon the point whether his expulsion was in accordance with Russian municipal laws as applied to native Jews.

M. Cieszkowski's Report.

That Lord Tenterden had the honour to transmit the accompanying despatch* from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, inclosing the Report called for from M. Cieszkowski, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour him with our observations upon it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Expulsion contrary to Russian law. Should make representations to Russian Government.

That the Report of M. Cieszkowski appears to establish that Mr. Lewisohn was compelled to leave Russia in a manner not justified by the law of that Empire. And we think the Report affords the materials upon which that view of the case may well be urged upon the Russian Government.

My Lord,

Reduction of Chinese export duties on tea under Treaty of Kuldja.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Charles Dilke's letter of the 11th instant, stating that in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 28th March last, submitting for our opinion a question arising out of the Treaty of Kuldja between Russia and China it was stated that the Chinese Government had undertaken to lower the export duty on certain teas exported from China to Russia over the land frontier; that the Russian Government maintained that it was a recognized principle that goods imported by land received a different Tariff treatment to that adopted for sea-borne goods, and that consequently Her Majesty's Government could not claim similar reductions of duty on tea exported by British subjects from China by sea.

New Russian Tariff Regulations.

That Sir Charles Dilke, by your Lordship's direction, then transmitted to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh,† from which it appeared that the Russian Government had recently issued new Regulations (of which a translation was inclosed in Sir E. Thornton's despatch No. 19 of the 27th March), whereby, with the exception of tea, muslin, and indigo dye, the importation of Anglo-Indian goods—as well as European, Persian, and Turkish goods—into Russia, through the frontier of the Central Asian Khanates, was prohibited; and a duty was imposed on tea imported through that frontier, greatly in excess of that charged on tea imported by sea. That Sir Charles Dilke was also to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the India Office,‡ and the accompanying copy of the Treaty of the 12th January, 1859,§ between Great Britain and Russia; and he was to request us to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in remonstrating against the Regulations in question, as being inconsistent with the IInd and Xth Articles of the Treaty of 1859, or with any other Articles of the Treaty; or whether Russia, not being bound by any particular Tariff, might, so long as the most-favoured-nation treatment was accorded to Great Britain, increase the existing Tariff on goods imported into Russia through that portion of the frontier of the Empire contiguous to the Central Asian Khanates, or absolutely prohibit the importation of goods through that frontier.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

English goods by Treaty entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment.

That, under Article XI of the Treaty of 1859, the Emperor of Russia has in express words contracted "that no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the dominions and possessions of His Majesty of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions or possessions than are or shall be payable on the like article the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the importation of any article, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions or possessions of either of the two Contracting Parties into the dominions and possessions of the other which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like articles, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other country."

In answer to your Lordship's questions put to us in the letter of Sir Charles Dilke, we are of opinion that Russia consistently with the words which are cited above, cannot increase the existing Tariff on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Majesty's possessions, and imported into Russia through the frontier of Russia contiguous to the Central Asian Khanates, so as to cause the duties thereon to exceed those imposed on the importation of the like articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country, whether imported by land or sea-borne.

Differential Tariff treatment of goods imported by land and sea maintained by Russia cannot be upheld.

The principle maintained by Russia that goods imported by land received a different Tariff treatment to that adopted for sea-borne goods, seems to us not susceptible of argument when attempted to be applied to a country like Great Britain under such circumstances as the present.

Such a principle, if admitted, would defeat the intention of the most-favoured-nation clause in almost all, if not all, the Commercial Treaties contracted by Great Britain.

Russia may consistently with the Article of the Treaty of 1859 absolutely prohibit the importation of goods, but that prohibition must equally extend to the like articles being the produce, growth, or manufacture of any other country.

No. 48.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Earl Granville.—(Received October 18.)

Temple, October 16, 1882.

My Lord,

British vessel "Trevilley."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he had to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list* relating to a dispute concerning a certain sum of 5,000 roubles, deposited in the hands of Her Majesty's Consul at Taganrog under the following circumstances:—

Judgment against for breach of charter-party.

The British vessel "Trevilley," on her return to Taganrog last April, was arrested in pursuance of a Judgment obtained against the master for 5,000 roubles in a suit for breach of charter-party.

Release of vessel on deposit of 5,000 roubles with British Consul.

That the case had been tried by the Commercial Court of Taganrog in the previous November. That the defendant, however, gave notice of appeal to the Superior Court at St. Petersburgh, and in order to obtain the release of the "Trevilley," the Directors of the Ship-owners' Mutual Protection and Indemnity Association intrusted their agents at Taganrog to deposit the sum of 5,000 roubles, which they did, and the vessel was released. That the deposit was made in the hands of Mr. Wooldridge, the British Consul, who gave a receipt in writing in the following terms:—

Terms of receipt for deposit.

"Received from Captain Beckerly, of the steamer 'Trevilley,' through Mr. Godfrey M. Hoyland, the sum of 5,000 roubles, as security for the claim of Mr. Berthold Smith, of Taganrog, upon Captain Hain, of the English steamer 'Trevilley,' recently adjudicated upon by the Commercial Court of Taganrog, which deposit is to lie in the British Consulate at Taganrog until the case in question is settled by final decision according to the Russian laws; and if that decision is in favour of Mr. Berthold Smith, I, or my successor in the Consulate, undertake to pay over to Mr. Berthold Smith the above amount of 5,000 roubles. If, at the expiration of six months, the present sentence of the Court in favour of Mr. Berthold Smith is not reversed, I am to consider the case as finally settled, and am bound to hand over the amount hereby deposited to Mr. Berthold Smith."

Dispute as to agreement respecting deposit.

That the Consul asserted that the terms of the receipt were adopted with the consent of both parties (see his letter of the 20th July). That the Association, however, contended that the real agreement was not expressed in the receipt, as it was the intention of the parties that the deposit should remain in the hands of the Consul for such reasonable time as would allow of the appeal being heard (see letter of Mr. Adamson of the 10th July, and of Mr. Mitcalfe of the 20th September), and they had requested that Her Majesty's Consul should be instructed to hold the sum deposited with him until the conclusion of the proceedings on appeal.

That your Lordship then telegraphed to Consul Wooldridge, inquiring whether he could not obtain an order from the Court to pay the 500*l.* into Court, and thus free himself from the whole business. That the Consul had telegraphed, in reply, that the President of the Court would not make any order, but that he would accept the money, if offered, on the understanding that it might be paid to the party in whose favour the Senate decided. That, on the other hand, the plaintiff, Mr. Berthold Smith, protested against the action of the Consul in communicating with the Commercial Court here respecting money deposited under an agreement mutually made by the agents for the "Trevilley" and himself, and declared his intention of holding the Consul responsible for any violation of his undertaking in the matter.

That he would probably institute a suit against Mr. Wooldridge, if the latter refused to pay him the money on the 8th of this month, when the period of six months would expire.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether Mr. Wooldridge should be instructed to retain the money provided the Association undertook to indemnify him against all legal proceedings in respect thereof, and to defend such proceedings, or, in the event of their refusing to do so, pay the money to Mr. Berthold Smith, or what other course the Consul should be instructed to adopt under the circumstances.

* This list was not forthcoming when these Reports were printed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consul should retain deposit on obtaining an indemnity.

That we think that if an indemnity can be obtained from the Ship-owners' Association, Mr. Wooldridge should retain the 500*l.* until the appeal has been heard. If such indemnity is not given, Mr. Wooldridge must bear the responsibility of acting according to his knowledge of what the circumstances of the case really are.

If he is certain as to agreement, he should pay the money to Mr. B. Smith.

If Mr. Wooldridge is certain that the receipt given by him truly sets out the terms of the deposit, and that those terms were acquiesced in by the depositors, we think he should pay the money to Mr. Berthold Smith, and run the risk of proceedings being taken against him by the other parties interested. It seems difficult to suppose that the receipt does not correctly set out the terms upon which the deposit was made.

My Lord,

Expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn, a British Jew, from Russia.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that in our Report of the 17th March last (copy of which was inclosed) relative to the case of Mr. Lewisohn, we stated that, in our opinion, the Report of M. Cieszkowski appeared to establish that Mr. Lewisohn had been compelled to leave Russia in a manner not justified by the law of that Empire, and that it afforded materials upon which that view of the case might well be urged upon the Russian Government.

Further representation to Russian Government, and their reply.

That Sir Julian had now the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the instruction* which was in consequence addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, directing his Excellency to make a further representation to the Russian Government on the subject, as well as the reply† which had been received from that Government, in which it was argued that the expulsion of Mr. Lewisohn was carried out without unnecessary harshness, and that it was not in contravention of Russian law with regard to foreign Jews.

That, upon receipt of that reply, Sir Edward Thornton was instructed to obtain from the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Embassy a Report upon the contention of the Russian Government.

That that Report‡ had now been received, and Sir Julian was to transmit it to us, with a request that we would take it into our consideration, and would favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

That the previous Reports§ obtained from M. Cieszkowski relative to Mr. Lewisohn's case were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Unreasonableness of Russian views.

That the view put forward by M. de Giers appears to us to be highly unreasonable.

It is admitted that the Russian Consul in London has authority to grant a visa to the passports of British Jews, though he is under an obligation, when he does so, to communicated the fact to the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Lewisohn, therefore, entered Russia with a passport duly visé by a competent authority, and which, so far as he knew, was a valid one.

But it is urged that Mr. Lewisohn was bound to know the provisions of the Russian law with regard to foreign Jews, and that it was his duty to communicate to the Russian Consul the fact that he was a Jew; that, in the absence of such communication, the Consul was entitled to assume that he was a Christian, and therefore he either led to the passport being visé erroneously, or ought to have known that it was not valid so far as he was concerned.

We think the contention is not a sound one, and should certainly not be accepted without protest. It seems to us most unreasonable that British subjects should be required to know the distinctions drawn by the Russian laws between different creeds, and that if the law, and passport regulations under it, drew such a distinction, it is the duty of the Consul to see that the law and regulations are observed. He ought, we think, either to give distinct notice to applicants for a visa of their passports of the fact that there are special regulations affecting Jewish subjects, or to require from applicants a statement as to their creed, or a declaration that they are not of the Jewish persuasion.

If the Consul-General omits to take such steps and grants an applicant a visa without inquiry, we think a British subject so obtaining it is entitled to rely on its validity, and ought not on his arrival to be subjected as Mr. Lewisohn was to immediate expulsion.

But beyond this, if Mr. Lewisohn was to be regarded as having entered Russia with a visa which the Russian Consul ought not to have given without communicating the fact to the Minister of the Interior, we think that Mr. Lewisohn should have been afforded an opportunity of applying to the Minister of the Interior, to whom the right of finally dealing with the petitions of foreign Jews in such matters is assigned, and by his expulsion within twenty-four hours he was substantially refused any such opportunity.

The Russian laws and regulations to which attention has been called contain no provisions for the expulsion of a foreigner arriving boná fide with a visa on his national passport in Russia on the mere ground that he belongs to the Jewish confession.

Expulsion not warranted by Russian law.

And we think that the expulsion was not, under the circumstances, warranted upon a sound and rational view of the provisions of the Russian law taken in connection with the Treaty between this country and Russia, and with general principles of international obligation and courtesy.

No. 50.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received April 6.)

Temple, April 5, 1882.

[The Law Officers recite the instructions addressed to them by Sir J. Pauncefote on the 27th March, 1882, as follows:]

Proposed Treaty with Siam.

"I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of Earl Granville, the draft of a proposed Treaty between Her Majesty the Queen and His Majesty the King of Siam for the promotion of commercial intercourse between British Burmah and the adjoining Siamese territories of Chiengmai, Lakon, and Lampoonchi, together with the correspondence relating thereto;* and I am to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether any of its provisions are open to objection. The general relations of peace and commerce between Great Britain and Siam are regulated by the Treaty of 1855 (Paper A, p. 1), and the Supplementary Agreement of 1856 (Ibid., p. 10); and in 1874 a special Treaty was concluded between His Majesty the King of Siam and the Government of India to promote commercial intercourse between British Burmah and the adjoining Siamese territories before mentioned (Paper B, p. 30).

"This special Treaty of 1874 has not worked satisfactorily, and in March 1880 the India Office transmitted to the Foreign Office a despatch from the Government of India suggesting the negotiation of a new Frontier Treaty in substitution for the existing one (India Office, 24th March, 1880, Paper C). This suggestion was adopted, and the Government of India were requested to furnish the draft of Articles which, in their opinion, were required to carry out the object in view.

"In June 1881 the India Office transmitted to the Foreign Office a despatch from the Government of India, inclosing a printed correspondence on the subject, and the draft of certain Supplementary Articles which they proposed should be appended to a new Convention between Great Britain and Siam, then in course of negotiation with a Siamese Envoy in London (India Office, 8th June, 1880, paper D).

"This new Convention, though provisionally agreed to, was subsequently abandoned, and it was thereupon decided that the draft Articles transmitted by the Government of India, with such amendments as might be deemed expedient, should be embodied in a new Frontier Treaty, in substitution of the Frontier Treaty of 1874.

"The draft proposed by the Government of India forms Inclosure 2 in the India Office letter of the 8th June, 1880 (Paper D), and a duplicate copy is sent herewith for convenience of reference, marked 'E.'

"You will observe that the draft was, in some particulars, amended by the India Office, as appears from the alterations in red ink.

"The draft was referred to Mr. Gould, of the Bangkok Consular Establishment, who is now in this country, and has accepted the post of Vice-Consul at Chiengmai; and, in consequence of his Report (14th October, 1881, Paper F), which was communicated to the India Office, further alterations were suggested by them in their letter of the 19th January, 1882 (Paper G). It was then decided that a new revised draft should be prepared in the Foreign Office. This was accordingly done, and I am now to invite your attention to that revised draft, which is marked "H," and more especially to Articles VII, VIII, and IX. By Article VII the British Vice-Consul at Chiengmai will be invested with the Consular jurisdiction conferred by existing Treaty arrangements on Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bangkok, and which, under the most-favoured-nation clause, Her Majesty's Government are entitled to claim for British Consular officers in any part of Siam. But, for reasons explained in the correspondence, it is deemed expedient to allow civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects in Chiengmai, Lakon, and Lampoonchi to be exercised by a Siamese Special Commissioner and Judge, subject to the right of the British Vice-Consul to be present at the hearing, and to be furnished with notes of the proceedings, and, if necessary, at any time before judgment, to demand that the case be removed to the British Consular Court.

"The Government of India propose that the British Consular officer at Chiengmai should not have power to exercise jurisdiction, and that cases removed from the Siamese Court should be tried at Bangkok. But the journey occupies several months, and having regard to the difficulty and cost of sending the witnesses, and other considerations, Lord Granville is of opinion that such cases, when removed, should be disposed of on the spot by the British Consular officer, who is accordingly invested in the present draft with the necessary jurisdiction.

"Mr. Gould in his Report having suggested the risk of torture being applied by the Siamese Judge, it is proposed to caution the Siamese authorities, and to instruct the Vice-Consul to remove at once to his own Court any case in which he may have reason to believe that torture will be applied under the provisions of Siamese law or otherwise. At present, native Indian subjects of Her Majesty alone resort to the frontier territories in question, but in consequence of the establishment of a British Consulate at Chiengmai, it is possible that European British subjects may be attracted there, and it is not desirable, nor does it appear to have been the intention of the Indian Government, to submit the latter to Siamese jurisdiction. The British Vice-Consul would no doubt have power to remove all such cases to his own Court, and therefore in the Foreign Office draft no distinction has been made between the two classes of British subjects, and they are all made amenable alike to Siamese jurisdiction. If, however, there should not be, in your opinion, any constitutional objection to the distinction being made, Lord Granville would prefer that the jurisdiction surrendered by the proposed Treaty to the Siamese authorities should be expressly limited to Indian native subjects of Her Majesty.

"Article IX deals with appeals from the decisions of the Siamese Commissioner and Judge, and it is conceived that these appeals should lie in every case (where leave has been granted) to the Siamese authorities at Bangkok, and in no case to Her Majesty's Consul-General, as proposed in Article IX of the draft of the Government of India (Paper E), the case having originally been submitted to and dealt with by a Siamese Court according to Siamese law.

"The other Articles of the draft are mostly reproductions of the provisions contained in the existing Frontier Treaty of 1874 (Paper B, p. 30), and call for no special remark.

"I am to request that you will favour Lord Granville with your Report on the draft, and on the points above mentioned, at your earliest convenience."

[The Law Officers then proceed to say:]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Suggesting alterations in various Articles.

That, with reference to Article XIII* of the proposed Treaty, we are not aware of any precedents for making such a distinction as is suggested between different classes of Her Majesty's subjects in Treaties negotiated with foreign Powers; and we think there are grave constitutional objections to such a course.

It would at first sight appear to be more fitting that appeals from the local Siamese Commissioner and Judges should lie to the Siamese authorities than to the Consul-General at Bangkok. At the same time, we would submit for consideration whether the right of the British Consul-General to intervene in such appeals and the authority which he is to exercise should not be better defined.

To provide merely that these Appeals shall be disposed of by the Siamese authorities, "in consultation with Her Majesty's Consul-General," appears to us not unlikely to give rise to grave misunderstandings.

We are not aware how far the impartial action of the Siamese judicial authorities at Bangkok can be depended upon, but, unless it can be, the protection afforded by the supervision and control of the British Consul at Chiengmai might be seriously detracted from. For an Appeal by a Siamese subject against a Judgment obtained by a British subject can, in all cases, be allowed by the Siamese Judge; and the control given to the Consul-General in relation to the Court of Appeal is, we have pointed out, of a very indefinite character.

We presume the right of Appeal given by Article IX is intended to be confined to civil cases.

This appears to be the construction of the Article, as drawn; but we would suggest the expediency of so altering the wording as to [sic] the intention beyond the possibility of question.

Confinement of three engineers, British subjects, on the "Leon XIII" at Aden.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the India Office* forwarding copy of a letter from the Governor of Bombay, with inclosures, relative to the confinement of three engineers, British subjects, on board the Spanish steamer "Leon XIII" during the stay of that vessel in Aden harbour from December to February last, and stating that as the case involved questions of international law, Lord Hartington would be glad to learn your Lordship's views concerning it, and especially as to the propriety or otherwise of the procedure of the late Resident at Aden, to which exception had been taken by the Governor of Bombay.

That the facts were clearly stated in General Loch's letter to the Governor of Bombay of the 24th February last, and subsequent correspondence, and the question raised appeared to be whether it was the duty of the local authorities at Aden to ascertain whether the three British engineers who were under arrest on board the "Leon XIII" in the harbour of Aden on a charge of insubordination, had any due ground of complaint, or "what circumstance was wanting to constitute a case for interference and inquiry."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the inquiries made by Lord Hartington.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

They were amenable to Spanish, and not to local, jurisdiction.

That there is no doubt that, according to international law, the British engineers, who had voluntarily become part of the crew of the Spanish ship, were subject to the law of Spain whilst on board that vessel, and in respect of acts done by them there. And they were not amenable, nor were the master or other members of the crew, to the jurisdiction of the local authorities at Aden.

The Resident could not legally interfere.

We think, therefore, that the Resident was under no legal obligation to inquire into the circumstances in which they were placed under arrest, or to any cause of complaint they may have had. Whether the Resident should have made further inquiries with a view to using, if necessary, his good offices on their behalf (for more than this he could not have done) is a matter which it is not within our province to consider.

Arrest of deserter from the Spanish man-of-war "Don Jorge Juan," and his transmission for surrender through United States by Governor of British Honduras.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office,† forwarding copy of a despatch from the Officer administering the Government of British Honduras, relating the circumstances under which, in accordance with the advice tendered by the Acting Attorney-General of the Colony, he had acceded to a request made by the Captain of the Spanish man-of-war "Don Jorge Juan," for the arrest and surrender of a deserter from that ship.

Neither "The Foreign Deserters Act," 1852,‡ nor any other Act of Parliament, authorizes the surrender of deserters from foreign ships of war in Her Majesty's dominions. That, nevertheless, it appeared that the deserter from the "Don Jorge Juan" having been found in the Colony after the departure of the ship, was arrested and sent by the Acting Governor in custody, through the United States, to Havana, for the purpose of being there surrendered to the Spanish authorities.

That it appeared to your Lordship that the action of the Colonial Administrator should be disapproved, not only as regarded the arrest and surrender of the deserter, but also as regarded his transmission through the territory of the United States.

That before replying to the letter of the Colonial Office your Lordship desired our opinion on the case, and as to the instructions which should be sent to the Administrator of British Honduras in this matter for his future guidance.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Arrest of Master of the "Léon XIII" at Singapore.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he transmitted two despatches* from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid relating to the arrest, imprisonment, and liberation of the master of the Spanish steamer "Leon XIII," when at Singapore, in March last.

That the facts of the case were clearly stated in Mr. Morier's note to the Spanish Minister of the 17th June last, a copy of which would be found in his despatch No. 62, and the reply of the Spanish Government in his despatch No. 112, together with Mr. Morier's comments thereon. That the draft of an instruction was inclosed, which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. Morier; and that we were requested to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether such instruction was right and proper under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approving instructions to Mr. Morier.

That, in our opinion, the instruction is right and proper under the circumstances.

View of Spanish Minister as to proceedings of Court at Singapore founded on a misapprehension.

But, as there is some plausibility in the view put forward by the Spanish Minister, that if the Court at Singapore had proceeded to inquire into the charges made by the master against the engineers, they would have been assuming jurisdiction in a case in which the jurisdiction really rested with the Spanish Courts, we suggest that it would be well, in answer to the reply of the Spanish Government, again to point out specifically that this view is founded upon a misapprehension.

If the master of the "Leon XIII" had produced the prisoners in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus, and had shown the Court that he was detaining them in custody upon the charge of an offence committed on board his vessel whilst on the high seas, with a view to their being tried by the Spanish authorities at the port to which he was proceeding, the Court at Singapore would no doubt have remitted them to his custody, in order that they might so be dealt with according to law, the only question raised upon the writ of habeas corpus being whether they were lawfully in custody.

(No. .) Foreign Office, , 1882.

Sir,

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your despatch No. 112 of the 15th ultimo, forwarding copy and translation of the reply returned by the Spanish Government to your note of the 17th June last, respecting the case of the "Léon XIII," of which a copy accompanied your despatch No. 62 of the 20th of the same month.

Her Majesty's Government concur in the observations upon the reply of the Spanish Government which you make in that despatch. It appears to them quite unnecessary to enter into any argument on the question of jurisdiction to try the offence with which the engineers were charged, as no attempt was made to put them on their trial.

The captain of the Spanish steamer being within the waters of the Colony, and not enjoying any immunity from the process of the local Courts, was bound to obey the writ of habeas corpus, which was issued by the Supreme Court, as was clearly explained to the Spanish Consul, solely for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of the imprisonment of the British engineers within British jurisdiction, and the refusal of the captain to obey the writ was a grave contempt of Court, for which he was justly punished.

* Mr. Morier, No. 62, June 20; No. 112, September 15, 1882.

If he had produced the prisoners in obedience to the writ, and had shown the Court that he was detaining them in custody upon the charge of an offence committed on board his vessel whilst on the high seas, with a view to their being tried by the Spanish authorities at the port to which he was proceeding, the Court at Singapore would no doubt have remitted them to his custody, in order that they might so be dealt with according to law, the only question raised upon the writ of habeas corpus being whether they were lawfully in custody.

The action of the Spanish Consul in encouraging him to disobey the writ was also an act of disrespect towards the Court.

The case of the "Creole," which occurred at Nassau in 1841, as you observe, has no bearing on the present case, in which the action of the Supreme Court was limited to the issue of a writ of habeas corpus, and as regards the statement in the Spanish Minister's note that the Court at Aden refrained from issuing such a writ, I have to observe that the reason was that none was applied for.

With regard to the concluding paragraph of his Excellency's note, I have only to state that, while Her Majesty's Government are most anxious to avoid any conflict of jurisdiction or any legitimate ground of complaint on the part of the commanders or crews of Spanish vessels frequenting British ports, they cannot hold out any hope that any restriction will be placed on the exercise of the remedies afforded by the law of habeas corpus in Her Majesty's dominions, which, of all the constitutional safeguards of the liberty of the subject, is the one most highly prized by the Government and people of this country.

You will, accordingly, address a communication to the Spanish Government in the above sense, adding that Her Majesty's Government adhere to the views expressed in your note to the Spanish Minister of the 17th June last, and regret that the Spanish Government should fail to perceive that no question of jurisdiction over the offence has arisen in the case, but only of the liability of a Spanish ship-captain, while in a British Colony, to obey a writ of habeas corpus issued by the competent authority.

Cuban refugees. Views as to liberation;

Dear Sir Julian,

I QUITE agree that spontaneous liberation would be entirely satisfactory, and that if a note, such as Sir R. Morier contemplates, would be likely to interfere with that solution (and if there is otherwise any reasonable prospect of it), the note ought not to be written, or (at all events) ought to be postponed.

and note suggested by Sir R. Morier.

I must observe also that, if any such note were written, I do not think it would be dignified to say that the Spanish Government "would place both Her Majesty's Government and the British nation under a real obligation." Those, surely, would not be wise diplomatic words.

I should infer from Sir R. Morier's despatch that he does not at all expect spontaneous liberation.

Arrest by Spaniards of Cuban refugees expelled from Gibraltar.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us papers* relative to the expulsion from Gibraltar, by the local police, of three Cuban refugees, at the request of the Spanish Consul, under circumstances which had attracted the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and which were, at the present time, the subject of a searching inquiry on the spot. That the facts of the case, so far as they were known, were detailed in the despatch of the Governor of Gibraltar of the 2nd October, a copy of which was inclosed in the Colonial Office letter of the 19th October last, and in the Petition of J. R. Castillo and C. Roderiguez to the Earl of Kimberley, which formed Inclosure 4 of the same letter. That the petitioners, and a third person named Maceo, were ex-officers of the Cuban rebel army, and had, according to their statement, been confined (under sentence of transportation) in the fortress of Cadiz, from which they effected their escape on the 15th August. That on the 16th August the Spanish Consul at Gibraltar informed the Colonial Secretary of the escape of Maceo, and asked that he might be expelled should he enter the fortress.

That the Colonial Secretary apparently treated the application as one for the surrender of a fugitive in the event of his being found in the Colony, and he instructed the acting police magistrate "to facilitate his apprehension."

That the three prisoners had first sought refuge in Tangier, and afterwards, on the 20th August, they crossed in a British steamer to Gibraltar, intending to proceed from thence to the United States.

That on arrival at Gibraltar they were arrested by the police on the ground that they had no passports, and were liable, therefore, under the "Aliens Order in Council," to be expelled from the garrison.

That the police magistrate and police officers were under the impression that the instructions of the Colonial Secretary meant that the fugitives were to be expelled under the "Aliens Order in Council," in order to facilitate their apprehension by the Spanish police outside the British lines. That, accordingly, the Inspector of Police communicated to the Spanish Consul, and, notwithstanding the protest and declaration of the fugitives that they were political prisoners and refugees, they were conveyed in carriages out of the garrison, and put outside the British lines, where they were arrested by the Spanish police, who had been posted there for the purpose.

That copies were inclosed of the "Aliens Order in Council," of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Spain, and also Confidential Print, communicated to the Foreign Office by the Colonial Office, containing the whole correspondence which had passed on the subject.

That the Report of the Commission of Inquiry then sitting at Gibraltar would be laid before us as soon as it was received.

That, in the meanwhile, your Lordship desired our opinion as to whether the facts disclosed in the correspondence were such as to warrant a demand by Her Majesty's Government for the restoration of the prisoners to British jurisdiction.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Facts of case do not warrant a demand for their restoration; but strong representations should be made owing to conduct of the Spanish Consul.

That we do not think the facts disclosed in the documents transmitted to us are such as to warrant a demand, as of right, for the restoration of the prisoners to British jurisdiction. But we think it is a case in which very strong representations may be made to the Spanish Government that this course ought, under the circumstances, to be pursued by them. Although the British officials who practically delivered up the prisoners to the Spanish authorities were primarily to blame, yet their action was manifestly induced by the letter of the Spanish Consul requesting the expulsion of the escaped prisoners. The Treaty between Great Britain and Spain points out the mode in which the surrender of criminals escaping into British territory is to be obtained. And that Treaty expressly excludes those whose offences are political. This being the case, it may well be urged on the Spanish Government that the Spanish Consul ought not to have requested the expulsion of the escaped convicts, suppressing the fact that the offence of which they were convicted was political. And that this mistake of his having led to the error of the British officials, the proper course would be that advantage should not be taken of the mistake arising through the Spanish Consul's action.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received December 9.)

"Leon XIII," a Spanish vessel. Refusal of master to obey writ of habeas corpus in case of imprisonment of British Engineers when at Singapore.

My Lord, Temple, December 8, 1882.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 21st September last, and of the 11th instant, relating to the case of the Spanish mail-steamer "Leon XIII," he was to inform us that a question had been put in the House of Commons as to whether Her Majesty's Government would demand compensation from the Spanish Government, on behalf of the three British engineers of the "Leon III," on the ground that they were "forcibly carried off" in that steamer from Singapore pending the return to the writ of habeas corpus served on the master of that vessel, ordering him to produce the men before the Supreme Court of the Colony, for the purpose of inquiring into the legality of their imprisonment on board the steamer in the harbour of Singapore. That, in our Report of the 11th ultimo, on the proposed instruction to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, in reply to the views put forward by the Spanish Government in the case, we advised the addition in the draft of the following paragraphs:—

"If the master of the "Leon XIII" had produced the prisoners in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus, and had shown the Court that he was detaining them in custody upon the charge of an offence committed on board his vessel whilst on the high seas, with a view to their being tried by the Spanish authorities at the port to which he was proceeding, the Court at Singapore would no doubt have remitted them to his custody, in order that they might so be dealt with according to the law, the only question raised upon the writ of habeas corpus being whether they were lawfully in custody."

That the offences with which the three engineers were charged were insubordination and violence towards the officers of the ship, and were committed in the harbour of Aden. That, in our Report of the 21st September last on the question raised by the Government of India as to whether the Resident at Aden had failed in his duty by reason of his having taken no measures to investigate the ground on which the engineers were placed in confinement on board the "Leon XIII," we advised that "According to international law the British engineers, who had voluntarily become part of the crew of the Spanish ship, were subject to the law of Spain whilst on board that vessel, and in respect of acts done by them there," that "they were not amenable, nor were the master or other members of the crew, to the jurisdiction of the local authorities at Aden," and that "therefore the Resident was under no legal obligation to inquire into the circumstances in which they were placed under arrest, or into any cause of complaint they may have had."

That it would seem to follow, therefore, that the custody or imprisonment of the engineers on board the "Leon XIII," during her stay at Singapore was lawful, and that the fact of their having been "forcibly carried off" to the port of destination, with a view to their being tried there by the Spanish authorities, did not entitle them to compensation, however unlawful and reprehensible might have been the conduct of the captain in refusing to obey the writ of habeas corpus, and the conduct of the Spanish Consul in giving him aid and advice to resist and defeat the action of the Supreme Court.

That moreover the act complained of was that of the officer in command of the "Leon XIII," who was not an officer of the Spanish Government, and even if a claim for damages could be supported against him, it would seem difficult to charge the Spanish Government with responsibility on account of the bad advice given to the captain of the ship by the Spanish Consul,

That Sir Julian Pauncefote requested our opinion as to whether, under all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in preferring a claim for compensation against the Spanish Government on behalf of the engineers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Cannot claim compensation from Spanish Government.

That, under all the circumstances of the case, Her Majesty's Government would not, in our opinion, be justified in preferring a claim against the Spanish Government on behalf of the engineers.

We have, &c.

No. 56.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 13.)

Temple, January 12, 1882.

My Lord,

Enfida estate.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports on the Enfida case of the 19th and 22nd July, the 8th and 27th August, and the 27th October last,* he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the further correspondence which had since taken place on the subject.†

That the position of the case at the date of our last Report of the 27th October was as follows:—

Circumstances of case and state of negotiations.

Mr. Levy, according to his Petition of the 12th August last, having been summoned to appear before the Meliki Court to which the case had been transferred from the Hanafi Court, by order of the Bey, protested against the jurisdiction and refused to appear, insisting on his right to have the case tried in the British Consular Court, conformably with Article XXIV of the Treaty of 1875.

That his protest, however, was disregarded, and the Meliki Court issued a Decree ex parte directing the authorities to put the Marseillaise Company into possession of the Enfida estate.

That in our report on those proceedings, we stated that the information furnished in the papers, submitted to us, was insufficient to enable us to pronounce an opinion, whether the Meliki Court had acted without jurisdiction. That we pointed out that, under certain circumstances, which we indicated, the intervention of Her Majesty's Government might be called for or warranted, and we suggested that an arbitration would be the best solution of the difficulty.

That Mr. Reade had telegraphed on the 24th September that, nothwithstanding the "illegal sentence" of the Meliki Court, Mr. Levy's possession was still undisturbed, and, under all the circumstances, no further action was deemed necessary.

That on the 14th November, however, Mr. Reade telegraphed that the Marseillaise Company had obtained from the Bey an order direct to the Cadi of Hamamet, to execute the Decree of the Meliki Court by letting all the Enfida lands to Arabs, on their own account. That on receipt of that Report Lord Lyons was instructed to move the French Government to stop at once the threatened further action in that case, pending the receipt of a communication from Her Majesty's Government. That that request was duly made, but declined on the ground that the French Government could not obstruct the execution of a judicial decision, and that Lord Lyons in his despatch No. 1073 of the 1st ultimo reported his conversation on the subject with M. Gambetta, who promised to communicate to Her Majesty's Government the information whhich he had received from Tunis, in answer to his call for a Report, and which, he said, established the legality of the proceedings. That on the 2nd ultimo a despatch was addressed to Lord Lyons, in which, after a résumé of the case and a remonstrance against the course pursued, it was proposed that the dispute should be referred to arbitration, all further action in the matter being suspended in the meanwhile.

That in pursuance of the instructions contained in that despatch, Lord Lyons addressed a letter to M. Gambetta, dated the 4th ultimo, of which a copy was inclosed in his despatch No. 1086 of the same date. That Mr. Reade had, in the meanwhile, urgently pressed for instructions, and, on the 7th ultimo, he was informed by telegram that the French Government had promised the communication of a Report showing that the proceedings were legal, and that pending its receipt Her Majesty's Government could give him no further instructions.

That, on the 8th ultimo, Mr. Reade's No. 118 of the 30th November was received, in which he transmitted a Petition addressed to him, on behalf of Mr. Levy, protesting against the intended execution of the Decree of the Meliki Court, and that on the 10th, 12th, and 14th ultimo Mr. Reade's telegrams Nos. 114, 116, and 117 were received, reporting the forcible ejectment of Mr. Levy's employés from the Enfida estate· That that announcement was followed by Mr. Reade's despatches Nos. 122 and 123 of the 14th ultimo, transmitting two further protests from Mr. Levy, which contained full particulars of the action of the Tunisian authorities in carrying out the Decree of the Meliki Court.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to invite our attention to Lord Lyons' despatch No. 1124 of the 15th ultimo reporting a further conversation with M. Gambetta, and to his despatch No. 1130 of the 16th ultimo transmitting a copy of M. Gambetta's reply to Lord Lyons' letter of the 4th ultimo.

That we should perceive from that reply that the French Government maintained that the right of the Bey to transfer the case from the Hanafi Court to the Meliki Court was vested in him by the law of the country, and was indisputable; that the proccedings of the Meliki Court did not dispose of the case on its merits, but were only of a preliminary character, and that Mr. Levy did not think proper to show cause against them, and the application made to the Court by his opponents to be put into possession was therefore unopposed; that the Tunisian authorties could not refuse to carry out the orders of the Court; that the French Government and their Resident and other Agents in the Regency had scrupulously abstained from exercising any influence or pressure in the matter, but that the case had followed the course of law, and that the French Government could not, without grave prejudice to the vested rights of French subjects, arbitrarily suspend the right of possession which the Marseillaise Company had legally acquired, and thus deprive them of the benefit of the Judgment of the local Tribunal in their favour, in order to subject them to to the risks and delays of an arbitration which, moreover, there was no power to impose on them.

That it would be observed that M. Gambetta, in his reply, avoided all reference to the question of jurisdiction under existing Treaties.

That the following questions arose:—

1. Had any native Tribunal jnrisdiction to deal with the case in view of the existing Treaties?

2. Had the Bey the right to transfer the case from the Hanafi to the Meliki Court?

3. Was the Meliki Court justified in disregarding Mr. Levy's protest and his demand that the case should be transferred to the British Consular Court, as provided by the existing Treaties?

That, as regarded the 1st and 3rd questions, Sir J. Pauncefote referred us to our Report of the 27th August, in which we advised that, inasmuch as Mr. Levy had himself instituted proceedings in one of the local Tunisian Courts, he had rendered it difficult for Her Majesty's Government to maintain his right to have the case heard only in the British Consular Court.

That, on the other hand, the transfer of the case from the Hanafi Court, in which he had instituted proceedings, to the Meliki Court, was effected against his will, and that, in our Report of the 19th July, we expressed the opinion that, if cited to appear before the Meliki Court, "he would be entitled to insist that the case should be taken before the Consular Court, to be tried there in the ordinary way."

That, as regarded the second question, no further information had been received by the Foreign Office since the date of our last Report on the case, which contraverted the assertion contained in M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire's note of the 24th July, and in M. Gambetta's note of the 14th ultimo, that the transfer of the case from the Hanafi to the Meliki Court was within the constitutional powers of the Bey.

That Mr. Levy, in his protest of the 13th ultimo, complained of the illegality of the proceedings "according to the local laws," and referred, in support of that complaint, to M. Santillana's Memorials on his behalf, which had already been submitted to us.

That, in his protest of the 14th December, Mr. Levy complained that no sort of Judgment was signified to him through the channel of Her Britannic Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, "as ordered by Treaty," but that, on reference to the Treaties, it did not appear that they contained any such stipulation.

That that despatch was followed by Mr. Reade's No. 124.

That, from the explanations furnished by the French Government, it would appear that, whereas Mr. Levy, being previously in possession of the estate, under the order of the Hanafi Court, was in the position of defendant in the suit. The Decree of the Meliki Court shifted his position to that of plaintiff by placing the Marseillaise Company into possession of the estate in his stead, but that no Judgment had then been pronounced on his claim.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to state that Sir Adrian Dingli, of Malta, was now in Tunis on a special mission of inquiry, on behalf of the Foreign Office, respecting certain Consular matters, and that if we should deem it advisable, he could be instructed to report on any point arising in the present case, as to which we required further local information.

That, in the meanwhile, Sir J. Pauncefote requested that we would take all the papers transmitted therewith into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case, as it then stood, called for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the case, as it now stands, does not call for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Levy's resort to local Tribunals precludes complaint as to their jurisdiction.

As to Mr. Levy's protest against Bey's right to transfer suit, and further action in case.

In answer to the first question mentioned in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, we have to repeat that Mr. Levy, having himself resorted to the local Tribunals, cannot call upon Her Majesty's Government to complain of the exercise of any ordinary jurisdiction by such Tribunals. Whether the Bey had the right to transfer the suit from the Hanafi to the Meliki Court is a question of procedure and jurisdiction upon which we are still without sufficient information to express an opinion, and we therefore think it will be well that Sir Adrian Dingli should be instructed to report whether the Bey has, or has not, legal power to transfer such a case as the present from the Hanafi to the Meliki Court. If he has such power, Mr. Levy's protest can avail him nothing; but if it should be found that the transference has been an arbitrary and illegal act, further steps may then be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received February 4.)

My Lord, Temple, February 3, 1882.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers* relative to a claim brought by Mr. T. L. Smith, a British subject residing at Mater in Tunis, against the French Government, for damage done to his crops by the French troops in May last.

That Sir Julian was in the first instance to refer us to the copy of the despatch No. 74 of the 26th May from Her Majesty's Agent at Tunis, from which it would be seen that the French authorities began by accusing Mr. Smith of inciting the Arabs against their proceedings, and requesting his removal from Mater, and that although those accusations turned out to be groundless Mr. Smith did, on Mr. Reade's recommendation, though at great inconvenience to himself, consent to remain absent from his farm for some time.

That Mr. Reade's proceedings as reported in that despatch received your Lordship's approval. That from Mr. Smith's own account of what occurred, it appeared that he requested the General in command to restrain his troops from destroying the crops, &c., and that that officer offered him compensation, which he declined at that time. But that on finding that the soldiers persisted in their conduct, he formulated a claim for indemnity in a letter to Mr. Reade of the 1st July, of which a copy (inclosed) was privately communicated to your Lordship, but was not sent home by Mr. Reade at the time, as he was anxious, as stated in his despatch No. 119, to obtain before doing so the consent of Mr. Smith to submit it to the French Legation.

That to that suggestion Mr. Reade received no decided reply until the 10th ultimo, when a claim for the sum of 364*l.* was sent in by Mr. Smith for damage to his property and losses through his absence from Mater.

Rejection of claim by French Minister.

That that claim had been rejected by the French Minister on the ground that it was a stale demand, and that the lapse of time since the alleged damage was committed would prevent a proper assessment from being made, and that Sir Julian was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the circumstances would justify Her Majesty's Government in pressing the matter further.

* Mr. Reade, No. 74, May 26; No. 75, June 6; and No. 119, November 30, 1881.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it would appear that Mr. Smith did sustain some damage to his crops, and that at one time there was a willingness on the part of the French authorities to make him some compensation.

Difficulty caused by delay in pressing claim. No ground for abandoning it.

No doubt the delay which has taken place interposes considerable difficulty in the way of pressing his claim. It may be admitted that this delay renders it less easy to estimate the damage with accuracy, and that so far as it has involved a doubt, that doubt must be resolved against Mr. Smith so as to ensure that he shall receive no more than compensation.

But it hardly seems a ground for altogether and at once abandoning the claim, having in view the answer of the French Minister.

Should urge compensation or arbitration.

We would suggest, therefore, that the French authorities should be urged to reconsider the matter, and afford some compensation, or to refer the claim to arbitration.

As to action in case of refusal of compensation.

Should compensation be again refused, it may be matter for further consideration whether sufficient ground exists to justify further interference by Her Majesty's Government.

Alleged violation of Consular domicile at Hamamet. Arrest of Miftale Dardouri, Consular Agent Cacchia's gardener.

My Lord, Temple, February 25, 1882.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, by direction of your Lordship, he had the honour to transmit to us two despatches* from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis regarding the arrest of Miftale Dardouri, an Arab gardener in the employ of Mr. Cacchia, the British Consular Agent at Hamamet, and his execution by the French military authorities.

That the Arab was accused of having fired at the French troops from a garden rented by Mr. Cacchia.

That the facts of the case, as stated by Mr. Cacchia, appeared in Inclosure 2 of Mr. Reade's No. 2, and that it would be seen that he charges the Vice-Governor of Hamamet with a violation of domicile, in having effected the arrest of Dardouri in that garden.

That it did not appear from Mr. Reade's Report whether the garden was an isolated piece of ground, or was attached to the residence which (as stated in his No. 3) Mr. Cacchia inhabited at Hamamet during the summer months.

That the evidence of the witnesses examined in the case would be found in Inclosure 1 in No. 2 and 3 in No. 3.

That it was not denied by the local authorities and by M. Roustan (Inclosure 1 in No. 3) that if the arrest did take place in the garden in question there was a violation of domicile, though General Elias Musalli (Inclosure 3 in No. 3) suggested at the examination of the witness Mohamed Tourki, that the place of arrest was not the house or garden of Mr. Cacchia, but "simply a piece of ground hired by him in order to sow corn."

That the witness Tourki declared that he and the others charged with the arrest merely told Dardouri that the Cadi wanted to see him; that he was ploughing in Mr. Cacchia's garden at the time, and handed the horses to a neighbour and followed them without opposition. He was handed over to the Khalifa at the gate of the town.

That there was too much reason to believe that the unfortunate gardener was innocent, and that his life would have been spared if the Consular Agent had been apprised of his intended arrest, and had had the opportunity of protecting him against the inhumanity of the Khalifa, who was charged with having handed him over to the French authorities in order to screen the real offender.

That a Memorandum† by Sir E. Hertslet on the Inviolability of Premises attached to British Consular Houses in Tunis was transmitted therewith; and that Lord Tenterden was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under all the circumstances, the case called for further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, what was the measure of redress which could properly be demanded by Her Majesty's Government, in case the violation of Mr. Cacchia's Consular privileges should be established by reason of the arrest of Dardouri in his garden.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No further action called for.

That, in our opinion, under the circumstances, the case does not call for further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

According to the rules of International Law, a Consul or Consular Agent has, apart from Treaty, no claim to absolute inviolability in respect of his house or premises.

By the IInd Article of the Convention with Tunis of the 19th July, 1875,* it is provided that the "houses and families of British Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents shall be safe and protected."

No breach of Treaty.

But we do not think it can be contended that the arrest of a native servant, in the place and under the circumstances described, was a breach of this Article of the Treaty. And we do not find any other Treaty applicable to Tunis which would entitle Her Majesty's Government to insist on redress.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received April 11.)

Temple, April 11, 1882.

My Lord,

Concession of Esparto grass district to M. Duplessis.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence† on the subject of the grant by the Bey of Tunis of a concession to a French subject named Duplessis, giving him the exclusive right to collect and dispose of all esparto grass, being the produce of certain portions of the Regency.

That a translation of the concession was inclosed in Mr. Reade's despatch of the 22nd ultimo, and that he stated that in his opinion it amounted to a virtual monopoly of the esparto trade in the southern portion of the Regency.

That Messrs. Perry, Bury, and Co., and Mr. Levy, who were interested in the trade, had addressed letters to your Lordship, calling your Lordship's attention to the subject, and that it appeared from the account given by the last-named gentleman that esparto, which was largely used in the manufacture of paper in this country, was not a cultivated plant, but grew wild, and was gathered by the Arabs, who brought it down to the seaboard for sale to the exporting merchants.

That Mr. Reade, in his No. 7 of the 2nd ultimo, mentioned that the Representatives of Messrs. Perry and Bury's firm had been informed by the Franco-Tunisian Governor of Southern Tunis of the existence of the concession, and that he had hinted that they should put themselves in communication with the concessionaires.

That it might be presumed therefore that the rights conceded to M. Duplessis were exclusive so far as the districts mentioned in the concession were concerned.

That a copy of the Convention of the 19th July, 1875,* between Her Majesty and the Bey of Tunis, was annexed, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to call our special attention to Articles IV and IX, which provided that British merchants or their agents and brokers shall be permitted to purchase at all places within the Regency, whether for the purposes of internal trade or of exportation, all articles, without any exception whatsoever, being the produce or manufacture of the said Regency, and that the purchaser shall be free to remove his goods, when purchased, from one place to another, without any attempt being made on the part of the Local Governors to interfere with them. And further, that the Bey formally engaged to abolish all monopolies of agricultural produce, or of any other articles whatsoever, save and except tobacco and salt.

That Article XLI moreover provided that in case of doubt as to the interpretation or the application of any of the stipulations of the Convention the interpretation most favourable to British subjects shall be given in Tunis, subject to the explanatory additions contained in the Article.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the concession to M. Duplessis constituted an infraction of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the Bey, and, if so, that we would suggest the terms of the protest which Mr. Reade should be instructed to address to the Tunisian Government.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 30th ultimo, inclosing a further despatch* from Her Majesty's Agent at Tunis, on the subject of the alleged esparto grass monopoly.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The Bey, if competent to grant concession, has not created a monopoly under Treaty of 1875.

That we have not before us complete information with regard to the rights which the Bey possesses over the mountains, the esparto from which has been granted to the French Company, nor with regard to any rights which the public may possess to gather the esparto so grown.

We observe that M. Lequeux, in his despatch of the 20th March, states: "Le Gouvernement a simplement disposé à titre de seul et légitime propriétaire des produits de terrains qui lui appartiennent." If this be a correct statement, and if it was competent for the Bey, without derogating from the right of the public, to make the grant, we do not think it amounted to the creation of a monopoly within the meaning of Article IX of the Treaty of 1875.

And we do not think it would involve a violation of any other of the rights accorded to Great Britain by the Articles of that Treaty.

Points on which further information is necessary.

We would suggest, therefore, that fuller information should be obtained on the following points: whether the mountains named in the concession are the property of the Bey of Tunis; whether the public had any, and, if so, what right (as distinguished from mere license or permission), to gather the esparto growing on those mountains; and whether it was competent for the Bey, apart from any question of Treaty engagements, to grant a concession of the exclusive right of gathering esparto grown there.

Objection to production of official correspondence.

We also think that, on principle, there is grave objection to the correspondence between two Departments of the Government being produced in support of litigation between private persons. It does not occur to us that such correspondence could be given in evidence in the existing suit, and, unless it be quite clear that injustice would result from the non-production of the letters addressed to the Admiralty, we think that they ought not to be produced. This view does not extend to Mr. Watson's letter of the 4th May, 1877.

Pitts v. La Fontaine. Course recommended in Report of the 21st September, 1881, as to the reinstatement of Mr. Pitts, should be followed.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st September last respecting the case of Pitts v. La Fontaine, of which a printed copy was inclosed,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch which had been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, forwarding a copy of a communication addressed by the Porte to Her Majesty's Consul-General in that capital in reply to Mr. Fawcett's request for the reinstatement of Mr. Pitts in his property.

That in that communication the Porte, after expressing the opinion that the Ottoman Tribunals had acted in that matter in conformity with the provisions of the Ottoman law relating to real property, and that it would be inadvisable to recall the decisions already arrived at, stated that Mr. Pitts, should he consider himself wronged, was at liberty to have recourse to the Ottoman Tribunals, who were alone competent to grant him redress if his complaints appeared well founded.

That Sir Julian was to inform us that your Lordship, under those circumstances, proposed, with our concurrence, to follow the course indicated in the last paragraph of our Report of the 21st September last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we concur in your Lordship's view, that the course indicated in the last paragraph of our Report of the 21st September last should be followed.

Sir J. Pauncefote to the Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 22, 1881.

Surplus revenue of Cyprus. Question as to appropriation of.

EARL GRANVILLE has had under his further consideration, in communication with the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, the question dealt with in your Report of the 6th January last (Print A, p. 46), of the right of Her Majesty's Government to retain the surplus revenue of Cyprus, as part of the general revenues of the Ottoman Empire, in satisfaction of the arrears due by the Porte in respect of the Turkish Loan of 1855, the interest on which is guaranteed by Great Britain and France under the Convention of 1855.

On receipt of your Report of the 6th January,† it was decided to call upon the Porte to give to Her Majesty's Government the benefit of the special securities, namely, the customs of Smyrna and Syria, which are specially charged with the payment of the interest on the loan and the sinking fund under the Convention, and

Mr. Goschen, then Her Majesty's Special Ambassador at Constantinople, was instructed accordingly in the Foreign Office despatch No. 148 of the 3rd March, 1881 (Print A, p. 66).

The French Government were invited at the same time to send similar instructions to their Representative at Constantinople, and you will perceive from their reply, transmitted in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 300 of the 1st April, 1881 (Print A, p. 77), that while agreeing to send such instructions they expressed the opinion that it would be preferable to recommend to the Porte to assign the surplus revenue of Cyprus permanently to the payments in question.

Mr. Goschen carried out Lord Granville's instructions in a note to the Porte dated the 30th April, a copy of which was transmitted in his despatch No. 338 of the 2nd May (Print A, p. 86).

Shortly afterwards Mr. Goschen, in his despatch No. 374 of the 10th May (Print A, p. 86), transmitted a note he had received from Assim Pasha (the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs), dated the 7th May. This note was not in reply to Mr. Goschen's note of the 30th April, but in reply to a previous communication, and it stated that, under a Convention made (22nd November, 1879) through the "Administration of the Six Indirect Contributions," between the Porte and the Imperial Ottoman Bank and certain Bankers at Galata, the Ottoman Government had pledged the Cyprus revenues for the payment of interest on the General Public Debt, and, therefore, that they could only apply to the Loan of 1855 such portion of those revenues as had accrued due before the date of that Convention.

The text of that Convention, and of the Decree confirming it, will be found in Sir H. Layard's despatches No. 1035 of the 25th November and No. 1056 of the 1st December, 1879 (Print C, pp. 98 and 100).

The Earl of Dufferin, who in the meanwhile had succeeded Mr. Goschen, was thereupon instructed in the Foreign Office despatch No. 485 of the 14th July (Print A, p. 109) to call the attention of the Porte to the communication addressed to it by Sir H. Layard in January 1880 [see Foreign Office despatch No. 1514 of the 23rd December, 1879, Print C, p. 109, and Sir H. Layard's No. 79 of the 17th January, 1880, M.S.], in which it was stated that Her Majesty's Government declined to recognize the assignment of the Cyprus revenues to the Banks under the Convention of the 22nd November, 1879, and further that "Her Majesty's Government could not accept or recognize the transfer to any other person of the Sultan's right to receive this payment, nor could they admit any liability, immediate or contingent, to pay it to any person except the Sultan."

Lord Dufferin was instructed in the same despatch to inform the Porte that Her Majesty's Government had decided, in order to maintain the prior claim of the guaranteeing Governments, to instruct the High Commissioner of Cyprus to suspend any further payments on account of the surplus revenue.

The instructions sent to Lord Dufferin in that despatch were submitted to you, and in your Report of the 30th June last (Print A, p. 106) you expressed your concurrence therein.

Copies of two notes addressed by Lord Dufferin to the Porte in accordance therewith will be found in his despatch No. 671 of the 9th August (MS.).

About the same time Lord Dufferin, in his despatch No. 496 of the 13th June (MS.), transmitted a copy of a letter from certain British creditors of the Porte claiming the right to attach the surplus revenue of Cyprus in the hands of Her Majesty's Government. This despatch was referred to you in the Foreign Office letter of the 13th July last, and with your concurrence [see your Report thereon of the 1st August, Print B, Section No. 31], Lord Dufferin was instructed in the Foreign Office despatch No. 562 of the 9th August [Print B, Section No. 31] to inform the British creditors that "Her Majesty's Government claimed to be entitled to retain such surplus revenue in satisfaction of debts due to them by the Porte, and that they could not admit the right of any other creditors of the Porte to attach that surplus in their hands, or the right of the Turkish Government to dispose of the same until its pecuniary obligations towards Great Britain had been liquidated."

On the 5th September the French Ambassador in London, in a verbal communication to the Foreign Office, stated incidentally that in the opinion of his Government the surplus revenue of Cyprus ought to be attached in satisfaction of the arrears of the 1855 Loan; and on the 7th September Lord Dufferin (telegram No. 360) telegraphed that the French Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, in referring to the Guaranteed Loan, appeared to assume that the Cyprus surplus was a security upon which France had as much right to count as England.

In the meanwhile, Lord Dufferin, in his despatch No. 630 of the 30th July (MS.), had transmitted the long-deferred reply to Mr. Goschen's note to Assim Pasha of the 30th April (Print A, p. 86), calling upon the Porte to give to the Governments of Great Britain and France the benefit of the special securities, namely, the Customs of Smyrna and Syria, to which they were entitled under the Convention of 1855. This reply, which is dated the 28th July last, was laid before the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. (Foreign Office to Treasury, 16th August.)

Their Lordships have now caused the inclosed draft of a letter to the Foreign Office (marked D) to be prepared, and have submitted it privately to Lord Granville for his concurrence in the course of action therein recommended.

Lord Granville feels some hesitation in expressing his concurrence in that part of the draft (pp. 8-11) which deals with the proposed communication to the French Government.

In view of your Report of the 6th January, his Lordship apprehends that it may be open to question whether Her Majesty's Government are entitled to treat the enforcement, on the surplus revenue of Cyprus, of the charge created by the Convention of 1855, as a remedy so entirely within their control that they can resort to it and abandon it at their discretion, without reference to the claims of France under the Convention.

The British claims which Her Majesty's Government are desirous, if possible, to satisfy out of the surplus revenue of Cyprus, are the following :—*

(a.) The claim in respect of Colonel Synge's ransom (10,000*l.*).
(b.) The claim in respect of Mr. Suter's ransom (15,000*l.*).
(c.) The claim in respect of the Loan of 1855.

[The amount of this claim, up to the 6th April last, for interest and expenses, but exclusive of sinking fund, which is in arrear since 1875, is 142,754*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* (Print A, p. 81).]

The first claim (Colonel Synge's ransom) is admitted by the Porte.

The second claim (Mr. Suter's ransom) is not admitted by the Porte. (See Law Officers' Report on the case.)

As regards the third claim, the guarantee of Great Britain and France under the Convention of 1855 is "joint and several," according to the French text, though the words "conjointement et solidairement" are translated in the English version by the word "conjointly" alone.

By the Declaration of the same date between the British and French Governments relative to the loan (in which the same discrepancy is observable), it is agreed that the sums to be advanced by the British and French Governments "shall be proportionally repaid to them out of any funds which may be remitted by the Turkish Government to the British Government."

The following questions arise :—

1. Have the French Government the right to demand payment to them by Her Majesty's Government, subject to the equal rights of Great Britain, of the surplus revenue of Cyprus, by way of enforcement, for their benefit, of the charge created in favour of Great Britain and France on the whole revenues of the Ottoman Empire by the Convention of 1855; and have they such right, whether or not Her Majesty's Government also resort to the same remedy for their own benefit?

2. If the preceding question be answered in the affirmative, is the claim of the French Government confined to the surplus revenue of Cyprus received by or payable to Her Majesty's Government, after the formal notification of their demand?

3. So far as the claim of the French Government does not attach to any portion of the surplus, are Her Majesty's Government entitled to apply that portion pro tanto in satisfaction of Colonel Synge's ransom and Mr. Suter's ransom, or either of them, or in discharge of the British share of liability under the Convention of 1855?

As regards the ransoms, and with reference especially to the concluding paragraph of your Report of the 6th January last, I am to draw your attention to Sir H. Layard's protest on behalf of Her Majesty's Government against the assignment by the Porte of the Cyprus surplus to the Bankers, under the Convention of the 22nd November, 1879; and I am to add that before that Convention was signed, the

France should participate equally with England in appropriation of surplus to Loan of 1855.

That, in our opinion, any portion of the surplus revenue of Cyprus which Her Majesty's Government may determine to apply to the liquidation of the debt owing from the Porte under the Convention of the 27th June, 1855, should be regarded and dealt with as if it had been remitted in accordance with Article III of that Convention.

If this view be correct, it follows that the French Government ought to receive equal benefit in common with Her Majesty's Government from the application of such funds. But still no right of "attachment" of or interference with the ascertainment of the amount, or the destination of the Cyprus revenues, can be claimed by the French Government except to the extent of requiring (as we have above pointed out to be equitable), that any surplus revenue which Her Majesty's Government should think right to apply for the purpose of discharging the liability of the Porte under the Convention should enure to the benefit of both Governments alike.

Treasury draft should be modified.

We therefore submit, for your Lordship's consideration, whether the communication to the French Government suggested by the Treasury should not be of a more limited character, merely reserving to Her Majesty's Government the sole control over the Cyprus revenue, but intimating that your Lordship's present view is, that the French Government should equally participate with Her Majesty's Government in any appropriation of the surplus revenue to meet the liabilities of the Porte under the Convention which Her Majesty's Government may think it right from time to time to make.

As to French notification.

We also think that these views ought not to be in any way affected by the giving by the French Government of any formal notification, or by the absence thereof.

More expedient to assign surplus to loan than to special debts such as the ransoms.

In relation to the ransoms, we still incline to think that the views expressed in the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 6th January, 1881, are worthy of your Lordship's consideration, and, inasmuch as the protest against the assignment of the surplus revenue to the Galata Bankers must be based upon the charge created by the Convention of 1855 upon the general revenues of the Porte in favour of Her Majesty's Government, we think it would be more expedient to devote such surplus revenue to the discharge of the liability of the Turkish Government under that Convention than to meet a special indebtedness, although by so doing the French Government would participate in the benefits arising from the application of the funds.

"Originaires" of territory ceded to Greece domiciled in Turkey.

Claim of Greek Government to inscribe them as Greek subjects.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 24th instant, stating that the Greek Government had addressed to the Greek Chargé d'Affaires in this country a despatch, of which a copy had been communicated to your Lordship, complaining that the Turkish Government refused to recognize the right of Greek Consuls in the Ottoman dominions to inscribe as Greek subjects and take under their protection "originaires" of the districts lately ceded to Greece, who, having a Turkish domicile, may desire to adopt Hellenic nationality.

That Mr. Lister had the honour to transmit therewith a copy of the despatch* from the Greek Government, and the Parliamentary Paper† which contained the Convention for the settlement of the frontier between Greece and Turkey of the 24th May last, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform you whether the terms of the XIIIth Article could be held to give to the Greek Government the rights to which they laid claim, or whether independently of the terms of the Convention the Greek Government could claim for "originaires" of the ceded provinces, who were settled in Turkey at the time of the cession, the right to elect between Turkish and Greek nationality.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Claim not valid either under, or independently of, the the Convention.

That, in our opinion, the terms of the XIIIth Article cannot be held to give to the Greek Government the right to which they lay claim.

That Article only provides that natives of the ceded territories, or persons domiciled there, may, by transferring their domicile to Turkey, retain their Turkish nationality. But it does not, in terms, nor as we think, by implication, provide that "originaires" of the ceded provinces domiciled in Turkey may elect to become Greek subjects.

We are of opinion that the Greek Government is not entitled, independently of the terms of the Convention, to make such a claim. The cession provided for by the Convention would thereafter subject to the laws of Greece all persons within the ceded territory; but in the absence of any stipulation to that effect in the Convention, it would not, in our opinion, affect the nationality of persons domiciled in Turkey, even though "originaires" of the ceded territory.

Russian claim to Bulgarian tribute as security for war indemnity.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st January last, stating that he had again to refer to us on the subject of the claim advanced by Russia to the Bulgarian tribute as security for the war indemnity imposed upon Turkey by Russia.

That, in his despatch from Berlin of the 13th July, 1878,‡ transmitting a copy of the Treaty signed that day, the Marquis of Salisbury stated that, from the declarations made in Congress with regard to the war indemnity, it resulted that Turkey "is not internationally bound and cannot be compelled to pay any portion of the indemnity until the claims of all the creditors of loans anterior to the war have been paid in full."

That from the Decree§ which Sir Julian Pauncefote inclosed, we would perceive that the bondholders of Turkey had now accepted a special hypothecation from the Porte in which the Bulgarian tribute was not included, but that by Article 20 of that Decree they had had reserved to them the right to have recourse to the general hypothecation originally granted to them in the event of the failure of the special securities then assigned to them.

That the Russian Government had expressed their willingness that the Bulgarian tribute should be paid to Commissioners or to a bank or other public establishment at Constantinople, who should hold it as a security for the war indemnity.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether, having regard to the legal rights of all parties, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in admitting the rights of the Russian Government as second incumbrancers, and in agreeing that the Bulgarian tribute should be held as a security for the war indemnity, subject to the prior lien of Great Britain and France under the Convention of 1855, and that of the Turkish bondholders, should they ever have occasion to resort thereto by reason of the failure of the special securities respectively assigned to them.

That, for convenience of reference, Sir Julian Pauncefote returned therewith our Reports* of the 13th and 30th December, and the previous papers on the subject, and he also inclosed a copy of the Parliamentary Paper which contained the despatch from Lord Salisbury of the 13th July, 1878, thereinbefore mentioned.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, assuming the Bulgarian tribute to be paid by direction of the Porte to Commissioners or to a bank or other public establishment at Constantinople, to be held as a security for the Russian war indemnity, we think that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in admitting the rights of the Russian Government thereto, and agreeing that the Bulgarian tribute should be held as a security for the war indemnity subject to the prior lien of Great Britain and France under the Convention of 1855, and that of the Turkish bondholders, should they ever have occasion to revert thereto by reason of the failure of the special securities respectively assigned to them.

That our previous Report of the 20th September last† was returned therewith, and that Lord Tenterden was directed to request that we would favour your Lordship with our further opinion in the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it appears, from the Report of Consul Dennis, to have been usual, in some parts of Turkey, to treat machinery affixed to real property as enhancing its value for the purposes of taxation.

Whether this course is lawful must be determined by Turkish law.

Smyrna quays.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Charles W. Dilke's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he had the honour to request, by your Lordship's direction, that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following point:—

That in 1867 the Ottoman Government granted a Concession to a Company for the construction of a quay at Smyrna.

Conditional retrocession of certain parts to Company.

That on its being represented to Her Majesty's Government that the quay would interfere with the rights of British and other merchants, under the Capitulations, by preventing the landing of goods at the custom-house except on payment of heavy dues, a remonstrance was addressed to the Porte, and that the latter ultimately agreed to reserve free to commerce a space of 100 pics, or about 250 feet, which formed the then existing Custom Quay.

That the history of the negotiations which led to that arrangement would be found in Consul Dennis' Report of the 27th November, 1879, at p. 34 of the printed correspondence‡ (which was inclosed).

That the Tariff of dues imposed by the Company for the landing of goods at the new quay was so excessive that the bulk of the trade of Smyrna passed over the free space, to the great loss of the Company.

That the latter consequently offered to reduce their charges if the free space were given up to them.

That after considering a Report on the subject from a Committee of the mercantile community of Smyrna, Her Majesty's Government signified to the Porte their willingness to consent to the retrocession of the 100 pics on certain conditions, which were set out in Consul Dennis' Report at p. 36 of the printed correspondence.

That those conditions were accepted by the Porte, and some of them were carried out, but that the first and most important one, relating to the reduction in the Tariff of quay dues, was not fulfilled.

Condition as to reduction of Tariff not carried out.

That it had been agreed that the Tariff would "be reduced in such a manner as should satisfy all parties concerned;" but that the Porte, after handing over the free space of 100 pics to the Company, permitted them to put into force, from the 1st May, 1880, the new Tariff complained of, without having previously submitted it either to the British Embassy or to the Smyrna merchants.

That Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople protested against that proceeding, and declared that Her Majesty's Government would hold the Porte responsible for the consequences.

That Her Majesty's Consul at Smyrna also protested, and stated that, "in the name of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, he held the Ottoman Porte responsible for all losses, damages, and interest, of whatever description, that might accrue to British merchants or to British commerce."

That Sir A. H. Layard's and Mr. Consul Dennis' protests would be found at pp. 78 and 81 respectively of the printed correspondence, and the approval of Mr. Dennis' action at p. 86.*

Question as to liability of Her Majesty's Government for excess of dues paid by British subjects.

That in the last paragraph of a despatch of the 10th February, 1882, which would be found at p. 220 of the printed correspondence, Mr. Dennis spoke of the repayment of the quay dues arbitrarily exacted by the Porte, under the new Tariff, since the 1st May, 1880, as having been guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government to the British merchants.

That he was accordingly requested to explain to what guarantee by Her Majesty's Government he referred, and that his reply would be found in his despatch No. 3, Commercial, of the 17th March last, at p. 229 of the printed correspondence.

That in that despatch he stated the grounds on which he contended that the repayment of the dues in question was guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government to the British merchants, and that he stated that the latter had always regarded the matter in that light.

That your Lordship, however, was unable to perceive that there was anything in the above-mentioned protests addressed to the Porte, or in those mentioned in Mr. Dennis' despatch, or in the correspondence, which could constitute any guarantee on the part of Her Majesty's Government towards the British merchants that they should be repaid the sums which they claimed.

That apart from the question of liability incurred by Her Majesty's Government, it was questionable whether, on the whole, the improvements effected by the Company did not afford advantages to commerce equivalent to the increased dues levied under the new Tariff; and, further, that it seemed highly improbable that the merchants should not have taken those increased dues into account in fixing the selling price of their goods.

That the recent transfer of the Concession to a British Company presented an opportunity for an equitable settlement of the question, and it appeared to your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government should deal with it on the principle laid down by the Earl of Derby in his despatch No. 35 of the 31st May, 1875 (printed correspondence, p. 26), namely, to secure to British merchants the advantages to which they might be fairly entitled without unduly interfering with a work of public utility.

That the contention of Consul Dennis as to the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government towards the British merchants of Smyrna for the repayment of the dues in question, if admitted, would create a most inconvenient precedent, and that Sir Charles W. Dilke was to submit the draft of a reply which it was proposed to return to his despatch No. 3 of the 17th March, and to request we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in its terms.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve draft to Consul Dennis.

That we concur in the terms of the proposed reply to the despatch of Consul Dennis, No. 3, of the 17th March.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to Consul Dennis.

(No. . Commercial.)

Sir, Foreign Office, , 1882.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 3, Commercial, of the 17th March, in which you state the grounds on which you base your contention that Her Majesty's guaranteed to British merchants in Smyrna the repayment to them of the duties levied by the Quay Company since the 1st May, 1880.

Protests of Her Majesty's Government do not constitute a guarantee of indemnity.

I am now to inform you that, in the opinion of his Lordship, there is nothing in the protests addressed to the Porte in this matter, or in the correspondence which has taken place, which constitutes any guarantee on the part of Her Majesty's Government towards the British merchants that they shall be repaid the sums which they claim by way of indemnity in respect of the higher quay duties levied since the 1st May, 1880; nor are there any circumstances which distinguish the present case from any other in which Her Majesty's Government have had occasion to warn the Turkish Government that they would be held responsible, in certain events, for losses occasioned to British subjects in consequence of the threatened breach of Treaty engagements. The settlement of such questions is an act of State in which Her Majesty's Government, however anxious to secure full justice for the British subjects aggrieved, incur no obligation towards them individually, and must be guided not only by the particular facts of the case, but also by considerations of public policy and convenience.

I am, &c.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a copy of a telegram received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, stating that Mr. Pitts, the plaintiff in the suits Pitts v. La Fontaine and Pitts v. Fawcett, which cases had already occupied our attention,* had applied to his Excellency to have a translation of a Turkish document, which he had obtained through Lord Dufferin's instrumentality, legalized at Her Majesty's Embassy, as he was anxious that Consul-General Fawcett, who was the defendant in the second suit above mentioned, should not have cognizance of it.

As to legalization of a document at Embassy at Constantinople instead of in Consular Court.

That in our Report of the 10th March, 1881, we advised, with reference to the question of the legalization of papers at Her Majesty's Embassy, that as there was at Constantinople no difficulty in swearing affidavits, &c., in the Consular Court before the officer duly appointed for the purpose, instructions might, in our opinion, properly be sent to Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople to decline in future, unless under exceptional circumstances of emergency, to swear persons to affidavits to be used in proceedings pending before the Supreme Consular Court there, and instructions to that effect were, on the 25th March, addressed to Mr. Goschen. That in the present case the document was not required in any proceedings pending before the Consular Court, but in proceedings pending in this country against Mr. Fawcett; and under the peculiar circumstances of the case, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether Lord Dufferin should accede to Mr. Pitts' application, or inform him that he should apply in the ordinary course to the Consulate-General for the necessary legalization of the document in question.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir J. Pauncefote, dated the 28th instant, inclosing a copy of a telegram received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, pressing for a reply to the above question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

May be so legalized.

That we think that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, Lord Dufferin should accede to Mr. Pitts' application.

My Lord,

Charge against Captain Grenfell and marine, Moore, for shooting at murderers of Captain Selby.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th August last, stating that by direction of your Lordship he had to transmit to us the correspondence, noted in the margin of his letter,* relating to the following incident which had arisen out of the prosecution before the Turkish Courts of the Albanians at whose hands the late Captain Selby met with his death.

Grounds for claiming their immunity from local jurisdiction:—1st. As belonging to ship of war; 2nd. As belonging to "stationnaire" attached to Embassy.

That we would observe that, as reported in Lord Dufferin's No. 284, the Turkish authorities preferred a counter-charge against Captain Grenfell and the marine, Moore (who were with Captain Selby at the time of the attack made on him), for having fired at and wounded his retreating assailants. Lord Dufferin thereupon claimed immunity for Captain Grenfell and the marine, Moore, from the jurisdiction of the Turkish Courts, on the ground that such immunity was enjoyed under the law of nations by the officers and crew of vessels of war in foreign waters, and also that the vessel of war to which Captain Grenfell and the marine belonged was attached to the Embassy as a "stationnaire," and by custom the officers and crew of such vessels were exempt from the local jurisdiction.

That Lord Dufferin, in his despatch No. 380, reported that the Porte had assented to the above views. He was informed in the Foreign Office despatch No. 292, that the doctrine that the officers and crew of all foreign vessels of war enjoyed such immunity while on shore in respect of offences committed there could not be supported, but he was requested to report on the local custom applying to "stationnaires."

That in his despatch No. 688 Lord Dufferin transmitted a Report on that subject, from which it appeared that the immunity in question, in regard to the officers and crews of "stationnaires," was claimed by the Embassies of Austria, France, Germany, Italy, and Russia.

That in his despatch No. 741 Lord Dufferin transmitted the Reports of the Law Advisers of the Porte, who avoided expressing any opinion as to the privileges of a "stationnaire," but maintained that the officers and crew of any vessel of war in foreign waters enjoyed by international law immunity from the local jurisdiction in respect of all offences, whether committed on shore or on board.

That your Lordship apprehended that the law on the subject was correctly laid down in the inclosed extract from Ortolan, Book 2, cap. 13, p. 268, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Lord Dufferin might be instructed to that effect while claiming for Captain Grenfell and the marine, Moore, the immunity from the local jurisdiction accorded by local custom to the officers and crews of "stationnaires" and claimed by other Embassies.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Statement of law by Ortolan correct.

That we think the law is correctly laid down in the inclosed extract from Ortolan, and that Lord Dufferin may properly be instructed to that effect while claiming for Captain Grenfell and the marine, Moore, immunity from local jurisdiction as an officer and member of the crew of the "stationnaire."

Sounder to base immunity of those belonging to "stationnaire" on ground that they are attached to Embassy than on local custom.

We think, however, it would be a sounder view not to base the immunity of the officers and crew of the "stationnaire" merely on local custom, but on the ground that they are attached to the Embassy and share the immunity accorded by international law to all persons attached to the Embassy, the local custom serving merely to define their position as members of that body.

My Lord,

Charge against Captain Grenfell and the marine Moore for shooting at the murderers of Captain Selby.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st August last, stating that, by direction of your Lordship, he had to transmit to us therewith a further despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople relative to the counter-charge brought by the Turkish authorities against Captain Grenfell and the marine Moore in connection with the murder by Albanians of the late Captain Selby.†

That in the note from the Porte which accompanied that despatch it was stated that during the course of the preliminary examination of the persons accused of the murder of Captain Selby, Captain Grenfell and the marine were found to have incurred the penalties prescribed in Article 179 of the Ottoman Penal Code for having fired upon the assailants of Captain Selby without due justification, and the Porte requested that those penalties might be applied to them.

That the former papers in the case were already before us in connection with the question as to the privileges of officers and crews of "stationnaires" which was referred to us in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo.

That the Porte disclaimed jurisdiction over the offence alleged to have been committed by Captain Grenfell and the marine Moore, and yet asked that the penalty imposed by Turkish law for that offence should be imposed on them by the British authorities, and apparently without previous trial.

Proposed instructions to Lord Dufferin: They are amenable to British law, and cannot be subjected to Ottoman Penal Code.

That your Lordship proposed to instruct Lord Dufferin to inform the Porte, in reply to the note of Saïd Pasha, that even if the Turkish Tribunals had jurisdiction over the case, no punishment could be inflicted without previous trial and sentence; but it was admitted that the Turkish Tribunals had no jurisdiction in the case; Captain Grenfell and the marine Moore were therefore amenable only to British law and jurisdiction, and the request contained in the note that they should be subjected to the penalties prescribed by Article 179 of the Ottoman Penal Code could not be entertained.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the proposed instruction was right and proper under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve instructions.

Murder of J. H. Tunstall. Proposed reference of case to the Court of Claims.

My Lord, Temple, May , 1882.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Tenterden's letter of the 1st March last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 9th May last, relative to the claim of Mr. J. P. Tunstall, a British subject, for compensation for the loss sustained by him through the murder, in New Mexico, of his son, Mr. J. H. Tunstall, and the plunder of his property, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a despatch from Mr. West,* inclosing copy of a note addressed to him by the United States' Secretary of State, in reply to a communication addressed to the United States' Government by Sir E. Thornton in May last, founded on our Report above referred to.

That in that reply Mr. Frelinghuysen proposed that the case should be referred for adjudication to a competent judicial Tribunal, provided that the sanction of Congress to that course could be obtained.

That Lord Tenterden was to request that we would take that proposal into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it might properly be acceded to by Her Majesty's Government.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Lord Tenterden, inclosing a despatch addressed by your Lordship to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,† instructing him to make certain inquiries as regards the Court to which the case would be brought, together with Mr. West's reply, and that Lord Tenterden requested that we would take those papers into consideration with those then before us, which were transmitted in his letter in my letter of the 1st March last.

That the Act of Congress was inclosed to which reference was made.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we presume it is proposed that the Court of Claims should have jurisdiction given to it by the reference of this claim by Congress under section 1,059 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Objections to such a course.

If the liability of the United States were admitted, subject to the facts being established after judicial inquiry, we should see no objection to this course.

But the Court of Claims as constituted hardly appears to be a suitable Tribunal to which to refer so delicate and important a question as that which has been raised by the United States in the present case.

We think Her Majesty's Government could not reasonably be expected to consent to be bound upon such a point by the determination of such a Tribunal as the Court of Claims.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. West.

(No. .)

Sir, Foreign Office, June , 1882.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your despatch No. 43 of the 31st January last, conveying the proposal of the Government of the United States to refer Mr. J. P. Tunstall's claim for adjudication to a competent Judicial Tribunal, provided Congress shall be willing to confer the necessary jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, or to make some other like provision in regard to the matter. They have also considered your further despatch No. 158 of the 6th April transmitting a correspondence with Mr. Frelinghuysen, in which the Secretary of State explains that the functions of the Court of Claims in dealing with the case would not be limited to a judicial inquiry into the facts, but that the Court would be called on to determine whether on general principles of international law a valid claim exists against the United States.

I have now to state to you that, if the liability of the United States were admitted, subject to the facts being established after judicial inquiry, Her Majesty's Government would have no objection to the course proposed by Mr. Frelinghuysen.

The Court of Claims, however, as constituted, hardly appears to be a suitable Tribunal to which to refer so delicate and important a question as that which has been raised by the United States' Government in the present case, and Her Majesty's Government could not reasonably be expected to consent to be bound by its decision upon such a point.

I have to instruct you to address a communication to the United States' Government in the above sense, and to express the hope that they will be able to meet the views of Her Majesty's Government in this long-pending matter, and suggest some other mode of disposing of the case.

My Lord, Temple, June , 1882.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that we were probably aware that Her Majesty's Government had endeavoured at various times to come to an agreement with the Government of the United States which should put a stop in the ports of either country (but more especially in the ports of the United States) to objectionable practices which caused considerable loss and annoyance to masters and owners of trading vessels.

Suits against masters: Desertion, &c.

That those practices might be shortly described as the encouragement of desertion among the ships' crews and of the institution of suits against the master, which would come to nothing if proceeded with, but which had so often to be compromised to the detriment of the interests of the ship in consequence of it being impossible for the master to remain long enough in port to defend the action.

Proposed Convention with United States. (Consular Convention.)

That the whole case was fully stated in the accompanying printed paper,* and that Sir J. Pauncefote referred us more particularly to the Board of Trade letter of the 14th February, 1882, and to Mr. Buckley's Memorandum thereon, which set forth the proposed remedies for the state of things complained of. That it would be observed that one of the suggestions is that certain clauses of the British Merchant Shipping Acts should be applied to United States' ships in British ports on condition of the corresponding clauses in United States' Acts of Congress being applied to British ships in United States' ports.

That under 39 & 40 Vict., cap. 80, Her Majesty could, by Order in Council, apply any of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1876, or of any Act amending the same, to the ships of any foreign country, the Government of which desired that the provisions of those Acts should be so applied, with or without limitation.

But that the Act 39 & 40 Vict., cap. 80, did not expressly sanction any arrangement by which British subjects would be liable to be proceeded against and punished in the Courts of a foreign country.

As to reciprocal application of British and United States' Merchant Shipping Acts, by Convention.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government had power, without the express sanction of Parliament, to enter into a Convention with the United States' Government, for the reciprocal application of certain clauses of the Merchant Shipping Acts of each country to the seamen belonging to the ships of the other under which British subjects would be liable to be proceeded against and punished in and by the Courts of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Act of Parliament necessary for punishment in United States of offences committed outside that country.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government have not the power, without the express sanction of Parliament, to enter into a Convention with the United States' Government for the reciprocal application of certain clauses of the Merchant Shipping Acts of each country to the seamen belonging to the ships of the other under which British subjects would be liable to be proceeded against and punished in the Courts of the United States in respect of offences committed outside that country.

Temple, October 19, 1882.

My Lord,

Claim of Mr. Young, trustee under bankruptcy of A. Collie.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was to submit to us papers† relating to the claim of Mr. Young (as trustee under the bankruptcy of Alexander Collie) to the restitution by the United States' Government of the proceeds of some cotton belonging to the bankrupt which was seized and sold by them at Savannah in 1864, under the provisions of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act of the United States' Congress of the 12th March, 1863.

For recovery of proceeds of cotton seized by the United States' Government in 1864.

That the claim for the recovery of the proceeds of the cotton in question had been the subject of a protracted litigation in the United States, and that the final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the Court of Claims was against the right to recover the same.

That the case of Mr. Young was stated at great length in a voluminous Memorial transmitted by him to your Lordship on the 3rd July last, and which contained, in the Appendix, a copy of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal. That an epitome of that Memorial would be found in Mr. Young's letter of the 11th ultimo, which also contained a brief statement of the case. That the principal facts were as follows:—

By the Captured and Abandoned Property Act of 1863, persons whose property had been seized under its provisions were entitled to recover the proceeds on proof of ownership, and that the claimant "had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion." That it was admitted that Collie carried on a great trade in contraband of war and blockade-running, and gave "aid and comfort to the rebellion." But on the 25th December, 1868, a General Proclamation was issued by the President, granting full pardon to all persons engaged in the rebellion or otherwise guilty of any crime or offence in connection therewith. That the pardon extended, without reservation, to all persons, and granted full restitution of all rights.

Claim rejected by United States' Courts on the ground that Mr. Collie, being a British subject, was not guilty of any offence against the United States, and therefore could not claim benefit of pardon proclaimed in 1868.

That, nevertheless, the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, confirming the Judgment of the Court of Claims, held that "Collie's acts were 'aid and comfort' to the rebellion within the meaning of section 3 of the Act of the 12th March, 1863; and that inasmuch as such acts were not offences against the United States or the law of nations, such acts, and the consequence thereto annexed by the said Act, could not be affected by the general pardon of the President of the 25th December, 1868, and therefore the memorialist could not recover under the said Act.

That it was adjudged that the Act furnished no remedy for the recovery of the proceeds of the cotton; and that the cotton was subject to seizure and confiscation as "booty of war," without power in the Judicial Department of the State to order its restitution (Epit., para. 34).

That Mr. Young solicited the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in support of his claim to restitution of the proceeds of the cotton. That he contended that that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was in violation of the principles of international law and of justice and equity, as it made discrimination in favour of rebels and traitors to the United States and against Her Majesty's subjects, and laid down the doctrine that the cotton was liable to seizure on land as "booty of war."

That it appeared that that was the only case of the kind which had occurred in which cotton seized at Savannah had not been returned to the owner (Epit., para. 33).

Rejected by Mixed Commission.

That Collie's claim was rejected by the Mixed Commission as not being within its jurisdiction.

Mr Young's objections to decision of United States' Courts.

That it had been rejected by the Tribunals of the United States on technical grounds, and, as Mr. Young contended, contrary to the manifest intention of the Act of Congress and of the President's pardon. That the Supreme Court, however, in its Judgment, held that the cotton had been purchased in exchange for contraband of war which had escaped capture; that it was the intention of Congress to exclude from the benefit of the Statute all persons giving "aid and comfort" to the rebellion, though owing no allegiance to the United States; and therefore to exclude from right of recovery "proceeds realized by exchange of goods run through the blockade" (Epit., para. 40).

That the Supreme Court not only decided that the proceeds of the cotton could not be recovered under the Act, but it declared also that the cotton had been lawfully seized as "booty of war."

That on that point it was urged that by the law of nations the only penalty which attached to the carriage of contraband of war was seizure at sea and confiscation.

That there was no pretence for saying that Collie, at the time of the seizure of the cotton on land, was an enemy of the United States. That it was contended, therefore, by Mr. Young that the seizure as booty of war of Collie's cotton, the private property of a neutral, non-resident at the time in the United States, was illegal by international law (Epit., paras. 38, 39, and 40).

That our opinion was requested as to whether any, and, if so, what, action should be taken by Her Majesty's Government on Mr. Young's Memorial.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Nothing in Judgment inconsistent with diplomatic intervention.

That there does not appear to be anything in the Judgment of the Supreme Court inconsistent with the propriety of diplomatic intervention on behalf of Mr. Young. It seems clear that, whatever ground may exist for diplomatic intervention, the United States could only be liable to legal process to recover the value of the cotton seized by virtue of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act. It is equally clear that, under the provisions of that Act, the claimant could only recover on proof that he never gave aid or comfort to the rebellion. The Supreme Court have held in several cases that the general pardon of 1868 was equivalent to conclusive proof by any person within its operation that he had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion, however treasonable his conduct in point of fact. But in the present case they came to the conclusion that Mr. Collie was not within the terms of the Proclamation, inasmuch as he had owed neither permanent nor temporary allegiance to the United States, and that therefore he had not committed any of the offences pardoned by it, and could not avail himself of it.

There was consequently nothing to relieve him from the effects of the proof (of which there was ample) that he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion, which was a complete bar to his recovery under the Act.

Not proper to canvass correctness of decision of United States' Courts.

In our opinion, it would not be proper for Her Majesty's Government to canvass the correctness of this decision. But whilst it is by no means clear that the Judgment is erroneous, yet the result is startling and anomalous.

All the principal offenders in the treasonable acts, and even British subjects who by residence owed temporary allegiance to the United States, are restored to the possession of their property, whilst confiscation of private property is enforced only in the case of British subjects not guilty of any legal offence against the United States, and who owed them no allegiance. The grounds upon which the seizure of the cotton, in the first instance, is justified do not appear to us very satisfactory. But looking at the length of time which has elapsed, and the circumstances which have intervened, we do not think it would be expedient to rest any intervention which may be determined upon on this alone.

It seems to us, however, that, seeing that whatever the propriety of the original seizure, the value of the cotton seized has been restored to all United States' subjects engaged in the rebellion, it is neither equitable nor reasonable that an exception should be made to the detriment of a British subject, who assisted them, and that the loss of property should fall upon him alone.

Her Majesty's Government might intervene on grounds (1) of restoration of value of cotton seized to United States' citizens in similar circumstances; (2) of circumstances of original seizure.

We think, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government might properly, on this ground, and also on account of the circumstances of the original seizure, use their good offices with the United States' Government in support of Mr. Young's claim. At the same time, it must be remarked that the facts proved with reference to the transactions between Mr. Collie and the Confederate Government are not calculated to incline the Government of the United States to regard the claim favourably.

Claim of Mr. Young, trustee under bankruptcy of A. Collie, for cotton seized in 1864.

My Lord, Temple, November 11, 1882.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 19th ultimo, he was to transmit to us the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. West, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, directing him to use his good offices with the Government of the United States in support of Mr. Young's claim (as trustee under the bankruptcy of Alexander Collie) to the restitution by that Government of the proceeds of some cotton belonging to the bankrupt which had been seized and sold by them at Savannah in 1864, under the provisions of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act of the United States' Congress of the 12th March, 1863.

That we were requested to inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the terms of the draft despatch.

Approve draft to Mr. West in favour of claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we concur in the terms of the proposed draft.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. West.

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1882.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith the papers noted in the margin,* relating to the claim of Mr. Young (as trustee under the bankruptcy of Alexander Collie) to the restitution by the United States' Government of the proceeds of some cotton belonging to the bankrupt which was seized and sold by them at Savannah in 1864 under the provisions of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act of the United States' Congress of the 12th March, 1863.

The claim for the recovery of the proceeds of the property in question has been the subject of a protracted litigation in the United States, and the final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal from the Court of Claims, is against the right to recover the same.

The case of Mr. Young is stated at great length in a voluminous Memorial transmitted by him to this Department on the 3rd August last, and which contains in the Appendix a copy of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal.

An epitome of that Memorial will be found in Mr. Young's letter of the 11th August last, which also contains a brief statement of the case. The principal facts are as follows.

By the Captured and Abandoned Property Act of 1863 persons whose property had been seized under its provisions were entitled to recover the proceeds on proof of ownership, and that the claimant "had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion."

It is admitted that Collie carried on a great trade in contraband of war and blockade-running, and gave "aid and comfort to the rebellion." But on the 25th December, 1868, a general Proclamation was issued by the President granting full pardon to all persons engaged in the rebellion, or otherwise guilty of any crime or offence in connection therewith.

The pardon extended without reservation to all persons, and granted full restitution of all rights.

Nevertheless, the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, confirming the Judgment of the Court of Claims, held that "Collie's acts were 'aid and comfort' to the rebellion within the meaning of section 3 of the Act of the 12th March, 1863, and that inasmuch as such acts were not offences against the United States or the law of nations, such acts and the consequence thereto annexed by the said Act could not be affected by the general pardon of the President of the 25th December, 1868, and therefore the memorialist could not recover under the said Act."

It was adjudged that the Act furnished no remedy for the recovery of the proceeds of the cotton, and that the cotton was subject to seizure and confiscation as "booty of war," without power in the Judicial Department of the State to order its restitution. (Epitome, para. 34.)

Mr. Young solicits the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in support of his claim to restitution of the proceeds of the cotton. He contends that this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is in violation of the principles of international law and of justice and equity, as it makes discrimination in favour of rebels and traitors to the United States and against Her Majesty's subjects, and lays down the doctrine that the cotton was liable to seizure on land as "booty of war."

It appears that this is the only case of the kind which has occurred in which cotton seized at Savannah has not been returned to the owner (Epitome, para. 33). Collie's claim was rejected by the Mixed Commission as not being within its jurisdiction.

It has been rejected by the Tribunals of the United States on technical grounds, and, as Mr. Young contends, contrary to the manifest intention of the Act of Congress and of the President's pardon.

The Supreme Court, however, in its Judgment, held that the cotton had been purchased in exchange for contraband of war which had escaped capture; that it was the intention of Congress to exclude from the benefit of the Statute all persons giving "aid and comfort" to the rebellion, though owing no allegiance to the United States; and, therefore, to exclude from right of recovery "proceeds realized by exchange of goods run through the blockade (Epitome, para. 40).

The Supreme Court not only decided that the proceeds of the cotton could not be recovered under the Act, but it declared also that the cotton had been lawfully seized as "booty of war."

On this point it is urged that, by the law of nations, the only penalty which attaches to the carriage of contraband of war is seizure at sea and confiscation.

There is no pretence for saying that Collie, at the time of the seizure of the cotton on land, was an enemy of the United States. It is contended, therefore, by Mr. Young, that the seizure as booty of war of Collie's cotton, the private property of a neutral non-resident at the time in the United States, was illegal by international law (Epitome, paras. 38, 39, and 40).

The facts of the case, as above stated, have been laid before the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion as to whether any, and if so, what action should be taken by Her Majesty's Government on Mr. Young's Memorial.

I have now to state to you that I have been advised that there does not appear to be anything in the Judgment of the Supreme Court inconsistent with the propriety of diplomatic intervention on behalf of Mr. Young. It seems clear that whatever ground may exist for diplomatic intervention, the United States could only be liable to legal process to recover the value of the cotton seized, by virtue of the Captured and Abandoned Property Act. It is equally clear that under the provisions of that Act the claimant could only recover on proof that he never gave aid or comfort to the rebellion.

The Supreme Court have held in several cases that the general pardon of 1868 was equivalent to conclusive proof, by any person within its operation, that he had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion, however treasonable his conduct in point of fact. But, in the present case, they came to the conclusion that Mr. Collie was not within the terms of the Proclamation, inasmuch as he owed neither permanent nor temporary allegiance to the United States, and that, therefore, he had not committed any of the offences pardoned by it, and could not avail himself of it.

There was consequently nothing to relieve him from the effect of the proof (of which there was ample) that he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion, which was a complete bar to his recovery under the Act.

It would not be proper, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, to canvass the correctness of this decision; but whilst it is by no means clear that the Judgment is erroneous, yet the result is startling and anomalous.

All the principal offenders in the treasonable acts, and even British subjects, who by residence owed temporary allegiance to the United States, are restored to the possession of their property, whilst confiscation of private property is enforced only in the case of British subjects not guilty of any legal offence against the United States, and who owed them no allegiance. The grounds upon which the seizure of the cotton in the first instance is justified, do not appear to Her Majesty's Government to be very satisfactory; but, looking at the length of time which has elapsed, and the circumstances which have intervened, they do not think it would be expedient to rest their intervention on this alone.

It seems to them, however, that seeing that, whatever the propriety of the original seizure, the value of the cotton seized has been restored to all United States' subjects engaged in the rebellion, it is neither equitable nor reasonable that an exception should be made to the detriment of a British subject who assisted them, and that the loss of property should fall on him alone.

On this ground, therefore, and also on account of the circumstances of the original seizure, I have to request that you will use your good offices with the United States' Government in support of Mr. Young's claim.

I am, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, Temple, November 25, 1882.

Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. Continental policy of United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 17th instant, stating that your Lordship had had under your consideration our Report of the 30th August, relative to the questions raised by Mr. Frelinghuysen in his despatch to Mr. Lowell of the 8th May last, in which he explained the views of his Government with regard to the Continental policy of the United States and to the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. That Sir J. Pauncefote was to transmit to us a draft of a despatch to Mr. West, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, which had been drawn up in reply to the arguments adduced by Mr. Frelinghuysen in support of the views held by his Government on that question.

Draft to Mr. West.

That we should observe that in the proposed draft reference was made to the Memorandum drawn up by Mr. E. Peshine Smith and communicated unofficially to Sir E. Thornton by Mr. Hamilton Fish on the 19th April, 1869.

Ought unofficial Memorandum by Mr. E. Peshine Smith to be referred to?

That that document, though communicated unofficially, was handed by Mr. Fish to Her Majesty's Minister in reply to the representations which the latter had been instructed to address officially to the Government of the United States; and that Mr. Fish stated at the time that it contained the general views held by his Government.

It had, therefore, been used in support of the arguments contained in the proposed reply, but that, if it should appear to us that it could not properly be referred to, the draft would be amended accordingly.

That with regard to the second point raised by Mr. Frelinghuysen as to the position of this country in regard to British Honduras, Sir J. Pauncefote stated that the views laid down in the draft despatch, pp. 8-13, had been submitted to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, who had expressed his concurrence in them.*

That Sir J. Pauncefote requested that we would take the proposed despatch to Mr. West into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer upon it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered the proposed despatch to Mr. West.

Statement of "general principle" and General Cass' admission not in accord.

It occurs to us that the statement of the "general principle" established by Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty contained in the first paragraph on p. 3 of the draft, is not precisely in accord with the admission by General Cass, referred to in the next paragraph. Unless there is a reason for this variation, it would seem desirable, for the strength of the argument, that the statement should be in as close accord as possible with the admission.

Importance of Memorandum. Cannot decide as to propriety of referring to it.

With regard to the reference made to the Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Peshine Smith, we would observe that it is a question of diplomatic propriety and precedent whether it can properly be relied on. If it can be used, it is certainly an important document in support of the argument urged in the despatch. But if any reasonable diplomatic objection could be taken to its use, we think the reference to it had better be omitted.

We are not in a position to judge in what light a document is regarded which is unofficially communicated in answer to official representations.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to Mr. West.

(No. .)

Sir, Foreign Office, , 1882.

YOU have already received, with my despatch No. 186 of the 17th June last, a copy of the despatch addressed by Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell on the 8th May, by whom it was communicated to me on the 31st of that month, in which the views of the Government of the United States are expressed in great detail respecting the traditional Continental policy of that Government, and the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

Her Majesty's Government have not failed to give their most careful consideration to the important questions discussed in Mr. Frelinghuysen's communication, and I now proceed to convey to you the following remarks upon some of the principal points.

You will have observed that three questions are raised by Mr. Frelinghuysen:—

1. The meaning and effect of Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty;
2. Whether such acts have been committed by Great Britain in British Honduras in violation of the Treaty as would entitle the United States to denounce it; and
3. The proposed conclusion of a fresh Agreement between the two countries, having for its object the retention and renewal of certain provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and the definition of the distance from either end of the proposed canal beyond which captures might be made by belligerents in time of war.

As regards the first point, Mr. Frelinghuysen renews Mr. Blaine's contention, that the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had reference only to the interoceanic routes then in contemplation, and that Article VIII of that Treaty must be read subject to the provisions of the earlier Treaty of 1846 between the United States and New Grenada, which, as he alleges, secures to the United States the sole Protectorate of any route across the Isthmus of Panamá.

Her Majesty's Government are unable to accept that view. The routes in contemplation at the date of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty were those by way of the River San Juan and either or both of the Lakes of Nicaragua and Managua; and Article I of the Treaty no doubt applied only to those routes. By that Article it was declared that neither the one nor the other of the High Contracting Parties would ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over any ship-canal which might be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, by the way of the River St. Juan de Nicaragua and either or both of the Lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean.

But by Article VIII the High Contracting Parties, after declaring that they not only desired in entering into the Convention to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, agreed "to extend their protection by Treaty stipulations to any other practicable communications (that is to say, other than those mentioned in Article I), whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America; and especially to the interoceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panamá."[*]

This is, in effect, an agreement that all the prior provisions with reference to the protection of the particular ship-canal then in contemplation shall, in principle, be applied to any interoceanic ship-canal thereafter constructed. The contention of Mr. Frelinghuysen, that Article VIII "relates only to those projects now (1850) proposed to be established," is opposed to the terms of the Article, which expressly refers to any communications other than those mentioned in Article I, and especially to those then projected. It is also contended that Article VIII "contemplates some future Treaty stipulation." But it is none the less an agreement because its application to any canal thereafter made is to be carried into effect by Treaty stipulations.

The general principle established by Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was that all communications by canal or railway between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, "across the isthmus which connects North and South America," should be established on the broad basis that they should be for the general benefit of mankind, and that no country should, on any pretence whatever, reap an advantage which was not enjoyed by all who should be willing to extend their protection to such enterprises.

This "general principle" was not only fully admitted by General Cass in his note to Lord Napier of the 8th November, 1858, as pointed out to you in my despatch of the 14th January last, but it was actually carried out both by Great Britain and the United States in their subsequent Treaties with Honduras and Nicaragua, in which they respectively agreed to extend their protection and guarantee to the interoceanic communications therein mentioned, in order to insure equal treatment to all nations across those public highways, and to prevent the imposition of unfair discriminating duties in matters of commerce, or of unequal transit dues.

I refer to the Treaties between Great Britain and Honduras of the 27th August, 1856,[†] and between Great Britain and Nicaragua of the 11th February, 1860,[‡] and to the Treaties between the United States and Honduras of the 4th July, 1864,[§] and between the United States and Nicaragua of the 21st June, 1867,[‖] which show that Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had reference to the protection and guarantee to be extended to all interoceanic communications, and not to any one particular scheme or schemes.

Moreover, the United States, in their Treaty with Nicaragua, not only "agreed to extend their protection to all such routes of communication (between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans), and to guarantee the neutrality and innocent use of the same," but did further "agree to employ their influence with other nations to induce them to guarantee such neutrality and protection."

The Government of the United States having, therefore, since the conclusion of its Treaty of 1846 with New Grenada, entered into Treaties of a more recent date with Great Britain and other Powers, carrying out the "general principle" established by the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, which is opposed to all idea of exclusive advantages in any interoceanic communication which may be constructed, they can hardly now appeal, without inconsistency, to their Treaty with New Grenada, as giving them exclusive rights of protection over the projected canal across the Isthmus of Panamá.

Moreover, there is nothing in the terms of the Treaty of 1846 which confers on the United States any exclusive right of protection,[¶] or which is inconsistent with the joint protection of Great Britain and the United States; and in the view, therefore, of Her Majesty's Government, the guarantee given by the United States to New Grenada in the Treaty of 1846 meant no more than the guarantee given by the United States, jointly with this country, in the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of 1850,[*] or the guarantees given by this country, by France, and by the United States in their separate Treaties with Honduras and Nicaragua.[†]

That such was also the view entertained by the United States' Government, not many years ago, appears from the following incident:[‡] On the 14th January, 1869, a Treaty was signed between the United States of America and the United States of Colombia (which was not ratified), providing for the survey and location of any interoceanic ship-canal within its territory. The IIIrd Article of that Treaty appearing to be in conflict with the rights of Great Britain under Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, Sir E. Thornton, at that time Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, in accordance with his instructions, made a representation on the subject to the United States' Government; and on the 19th April of that year Mr. Hamilton Fish unofficially communicated to Sir E. Thornton a Memorandum which had been drawn up by Mr. E. Peshine Smith, employed in the Department of State as Examiner of Claims. This Memorandum, Mr. Fish stated, contained the general views of the United States' Government upon the matter, and it was conceived in the following terms:—

"Bureau of Claims, April 15, 1869.

"It is referred to me to examine the IIIrd Article of the proposed Darien Ship-Canal Treaty with Colombia, in connection with the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and report if there be any conflict.

"The Treaty with the United States of Colombia, signed January 14, 1869, after providing for the survey and location of an interoceanic ship-canal anywhere within its territory, provides in the IIIrd Article as follows:—

"'Article III. The United States of Colombia stipulate and agree not to undertake or allow the opening of any other interoceanic canal, or of any new railway, through or across their territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, without the express consent of the United States of America being first obtained.' The existence of one, the Panamá Railway, is recognized in the Treaty, and provisions made for securing the rights of the Company owning it.

"The Treaty with Great Britain of the 19th April, 1850 (9th Statutes, 995), recites that the two Governments were desirous of setting forth and fixing in a Convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship-canal which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the way of the River San Juan de Nicaragua, and either or both of the lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean. The first seven Articles of the Treaty relate only to such a canal, and obviously have no reference to any canal which may be constructed within the territories of Colombia. The VIIIth Article, however, declares that 'the Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired, in entering into this Convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by Treaty stipulation, to any other practicable communication, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the interoceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by way of Tehuantepec or Panamá.'

"The discrepancy between the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty and the recent one with Colombia, if any such exists, must be found in the Articles just cited.

"It is to be remarked in the first place that the obligation exacted by the IIIrd Article of the Treaty with Colombia rests exclusively upon that Republic, which, not being a party to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, cannot be guilty of a violation of it; and if it could, it would not concern us except as being accessory to such violation, we might contravene obligations which the Government had assumed to that of Great Britain. The most we have done is to make the construction of more than one canal, and the existing railway across the isthmus, impracticable without the consent of this Government. That consent we are at all times at liberty to give, if good faith or policy shall require it.

"I can see no other discrepancy between the two Treaties than in the supposed effect of the latter one to prevent the construction of interoceanic routes of commerce, which would be otherwise practicable, and may be supposed to be contemplated by the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, but I do not think that the agreement between this Government and that of Great Britain, that they will 'extend their protection by Treaty stipulations to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus,' imports anything more than that they shall give to such communications, when established and in operation, the same protection which they stipulate to extend to the specific route through Nicaragua, which was the principal subject of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. That protection consists in the engagements of both Governments to defend the persons and property employed in making said canal from unjust seizure and violence, and protecting the canal itself, when completed, from seizure and confiscation, and guaranteeing its neutrality and security.

"Our stipulations for protection, neutrality, &c., in the recent Treaty with Colombia, are in fulfilment of the obligation we contracted to Great Britain by the VIIIth Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. That obligation being reciprocal, the effect of the Article seems to be to entitle us to call upon Great Britain to unite in guaranteeing such protection and neutrality.

"I conclude that there is no present conflict between the two Treaties. If one can arise, it will be when a third canal or railroad across the territory of Colombia being proposed, and the Government of Colombia being willing to allow its construction, their Government, invoking the IIIrd Article of our Treaty, shall refuse its consent and thus obstruct the enterprise. I do not concede, nor think, that we will be bound to grant our assent, but it is sufficient that, if such be our obligation, we have done nothing to impair our ability to discharge it. The construction of one canal and of one railroad is doubtless to some extent an obstruction to the undertaking of other canals or railroads, for they must divert a large portion of the traffic and commerce upon which such new enterprise would rely for its support. But the specific object of the VIIIth Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was to promote the construction of practicable interoceanic communications across the isthmus, and the partial fulfilment of that purpose certainly cannot be in conflict with the spirit of the Article.

(Signed) "E. PESHINE SMITH, Examiner, &c."

It appears, therefore, from this document, which was stated by Mr. Fish to contain the general views of the United States' Government, that, far from claiming the right to an exclusive Protectorate over any ship-canal across the Isthmus of Panamá, the United States' Government, at that time, recognized the VIIIth Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty as distinctly applicable to such a canal, and even maintained that, the obligations of that Article being reciprocal, they were entitled to call upon Great Britain to unite in guaranteeing its protection and neutrality.

I now pass to the second point raised by Mr. Frelinghuysen, namely, whether such acts have been committed by Great Britain in British Honduras in violation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty as would entitle the United States to denounce it. It is alleged that Great Britain has violated, and continues to violate, its provisions by exercising sovereignty over British Honduras, and treating that territory as a British Colony.

On this point it is important to refer to the following correspondence on the subject which took place at the time between Sir Henry Bulwer and Mr. Clayton:—*

On the 29th June, 1850, Sir H. Bulwer handed to Mr. Clayton the following Declaration in writing:—†

"In proceeding to the exchange of ratifications of the Convention signed at Washington on the 19th April, 1850, between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America, relative to the establishment of a communication by ship-canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, the Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary, has received Her Majesty's instructions to declare that Her Majesty does not understand the engagements of that Convention to apply to Her Majesty's settlement at Honduras, or to its dependencies. Her Majesty's ratification of the said Convention is exchanged under the explicit Declaration above mentioned.

"Done at Washington, the 29th day of June, 1850.

(Signed) "H. L. BULWER."

To this Mr. Clayton replied, on the 4th July, as follows:—*

"Sir, "Department of State, Washington, July 4, 1850.

"I have received the Declaration your were instructed by your Government to make to me respecting Honduras and its dependencies, a copy of which is herewith subjoined.

"The language of Article I of the Convention concluded on the 19th day of April last, between the United States and Great Britain, describing the country not to be occupied, &c., by either of the parties, was, as you know, twice approved by your Government, and it was neither understood by them, nor by either of us (the negotiators) to include the British settlement in Honduras (commonly called British Honduras, as distinct from the State of Honduras), nor the small islands in the neighbourhood of that settlement, which may be known as its dependencies. To this settlement and these islands the Treaty we negotiated was not intended by either of us to apply. The title to them it is now and has been my intention, throughout the whole negotiation, to leave as the Treaty leaves it, without denying, affirming, or in any way meddling with the same, just as it stood previously.

"The Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Honourable William R. King, informs me that 'the Senate perfectly understood that the Treaty did not include British Honduras.' It was understood to apply to, and does include, all the Central American States of Guatemala, Honduras, San Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, with their just limits and proper dependencies. The difficulty that now arises seems to spring from the use, in our Convention, of the term 'Central America,' which we adopted because Viscount Palmerston had assented to it, and used it as the proper term, we naturally supposing that, on this account, it would be satisfactory to your Government; but if your Government now intend to delay the exchange of ratifications until we shall have fixed the precise limits of Central America, we must defer further action until we have further information on both sides, to which at present we have no means of resort, and which it is certain we could not obtain before the term fixed for exchanging the ratifications would expire. It is not to be imagined that such is the object of your Government; for not only would this cause delay, but absolutely defeat the Convention.

"Of course, no alteration could be made in the Convention, as it now stands, without referring the same to the Senate; and I do not understand you as having authority to propose any alteration. But, on some future occasion, a conventional Article, clearly stating what are the limits of Central America, might become advisable.

"There is another matter, still more important, which the stipulations of the Convention direct that we shall settle, but which you have no instructions now to determine, and I desire you to invite the attention of your Government to it:—'The distance from the two ends of the canal within which vessels of the United States or Great Britain, traversing the said canal, shall, in case of war between the Contracting Parties, be exempted from blockade, detention, or capture by either of the belligerents.' The subject is one of deep interest, and I shall be happy to receive the views of your Government in regard to it as soon as it may be convenient for them to decide upon it.

"I avail, &c.

(Signed) "JOHN M. CLAYTON."

Sir H. Bulwer acknowledged the receipt of Mr. Clayton's despatch on the same day in the following words:—†

"Sir, "British Legation, July 4, 1850.

"I understand the purport of your answer to the Declaration, dated the 29th June, which I was instructed to make to you on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, to be that you do not deem yourself called upon to mark out at this time the exact limits of Her Majesty's settlement at Honduras, nor of the different Central American States, nor to define what or what are not the dependencies of the said settlement; but that you fully recognize that it was not the intention of our negotiation to embrace in the Treaty of the 19th April whatever is Her Majesty's settlement at Honduras, nor whatever are the dependencies of that settlement, and that Her Majesty's title thereto subsequent to the said Treaty will remain just as it was prior to that Treaty, without undergoing any alteration whatever in consequence thereof.

"It was not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to make the Declaration I submitted to you more than a simple affirmation of this fact, and, consequently, I deem myself now authorized to exchange Her Majesty's ratification of the Treaty of the 19th April for that of the President of the United States.

"I shall take the earliest opportunity of communicating to Her Majesty's Government the desire which you express to have determined the distance from the two ends of the canal within which vessels of the United States or Great Britain traversing the said canal shall, in case of war between the Contracting Parties, be exempted from blockade, detention, or capture, by either of the belligerents, and I will duly inform Her Majesty's Government of the interest which you take in this question.

"I avail, &c.
(Signed) "H. L. BULWER."

And, finally, on the 5th July, Mr. Clayton signed the following Memorandum:—[*]

"The within Declaration of Sir H. L. Bulwer was received by me on the 29th day of June, 1850. In reply, I wrote to him my note of the 4th July, acknowledging that I understood British Honduras was not embraced in the Treaty of the 19th April last, but, at the same time, carefully declining to affirm or deny the British title in their settlement or its alleged dependencies. After signing my note last night I delivered it to Sir Henry, and we immediately proceeded, without any further or other action, to exchange the ratifications of said Treaty. The consent of the Senate to the Declaration was not required, and the Treaty was ratified as it stood when it was made.

(Signed) "JOHN M. CLAYTON."

To this Memorandum the following postscript was attached:—

"The rights of no Central American State have been compromised by the Treaty or by any part of the negotiation."

It would seem, then, to be opposed to all sound principle, that the United States should now claim to abrogate the Treaty of 1850 by reason of the existence of a state of things which has prevailed, to their knowledge, before as well as since its ratification, to which the Treaty was never intended to apply, and notwithstanding the known existence of which they have more than once recognized the Treaty as subsisting.

It seems, indeed, to be suggested that, at the time the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was made, Honduras was only a British Settlement under Spanish-American sovereignty, and that it has since been converted into a British possession, and that to this conversion the United States has never given its assent.

It is true that, during the middle of the last century, the British settlement at Belize owed its existence to the permission of Spain, and that the colonists were gradually allowed to occupy the territory now called British Honduras, for the purpose only of cutting logwood and exporting mahogany;[†] but it is also a matter of history that, when England and Spain were subsequently at war, an attack made by the forces of the latter on the British settlement was successfully repulsed; and, in consequence, from that time British Honduras remained under the dominion of the British Crown.

When peace was signed, most of the British conquests from Spain were restored to her; but the settlement in Honduras, like that of the Falkland Islands, was not given up, and continued on the same footing as any other possession under the British Crown.

At the time of the abandonment by Spain of all her possessions in South America, she made no protest against the rights which the British Crown had acquired over Belize and British Honduras.

It is therefore clear that the sovereignty of British Honduras was acquired by conquest, and was possessed by this country long prior to the time of the Clayton-

Bulwer Treaty. I would observe, moreover, that the Preamble of the Postal Convention concluded at Washington on the 11th August, 1869, and in London on the 4th September of the same year, shows that the United States have formally recognized British Honduras as being a "Colony" of Great Britain.[*]

The Preamble of that Convention, which received the formal approval of President Grant on the same day on which it was signed at Washington, runs as follows:—

"The General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the General Post Office of the United States of America, being desirous of establishing and maintaining an exchange of mails between the United States on the one side, and the Colony of British Honduras on the other, by means of the British mail-packet plying between New Orleans and Belize, the Undersigned, duly authorized for that purpose, have agreed upon the following Articles:"—

The contention, therefore, in Mr. Frelinghuysen's despatch, that "a settlement" has been converted into "a possession," and a material change thereby effected, in consequence of the employment of the word "possession" in the Treaty with Guatemala of 1859, cannot be supported consistently with the facts above stated.

As regards the third question,[†] Mr. Frelinghuysen states that "the President is still ready, on the part of the United States, to agree that the reciprocal engagements respecting the acquisition of territory in Central America, and respecting the establishment of a free port at each end of whatever Canal may be constructed, shall continue in force, and to define by agreement the distance from either end of the canal where captures may be made by a belligerent in time of war, and with this definition thus made, to keep alive the IInd Article of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty."

A similar proposal respecting captures by belligerents, as already shown, was made to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Clayton shortly after the conclusion of the Treaty of the 19th April, 1850;[‡] in fact, on the very day on which the ratifications were exchanged (4th July, 1850), and no objection was then offered by Her Majesty's Government to the conclusion of such an arrangement.

In a despatch which was addressed to Sir H. Bulwer by Viscount Palmerston on the 4th October, 1850, his Lordship stated:[§] "With reference to your despatch of the 8th July last, requesting to be informed of the views of Her Majesty's Government as to the arrangement which remains to be agreed upon between Great Britain and the United States with regard to the limits within which vessels traversing the ship-canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans are to enjoy exemption from blockade, detention, or capture, I have to acquaint you that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty consider that a segment of a circle of 25 nautical miles radius, drawn to seaward from each end of the canal, as from a centre, should be the limits within which vessels should enjoy the exemption in question;" and on the substance of this despatch being communicated to Mr. Clayton at Boston,[‖] he informed Sir H. Bulwer that the proposal appeared to him to be a fair one, although he added that on his return to Washington, after receiving a written communication from Sir H. Bulwer on the subject, he would give him a more decided answer with respect to it.

On the 19th May of the following year, however,[¶] Sir H. Bulwer reported that, although he had had conversations with Mr. Webster respecting the different points which then remained unsettled in regard to the Convention of the 19th April, his mind and time had been so occupied with a variety of other matters that he had frankly confessed to him that he had been unable, up to that time, to give that full attention to those subjects which would enable him to make what he should consider a satisfactory proposal concerning them.

Sir H. Bulwer then suggested to Lord Palmerston a plan for the settlement of some of these disputed questions, and added:—[]

"Should your Lordship, under all the circumstances, be disposed to consider favourably this suggestion, the course which, after some consideration, I should be disposed to advise would be a new Treaty, supplementary to that of the 19th April, with Mr. Webster, settling, among other things, the distance from the two ends of the proposed canal at which, in case of war, neutrality should be observed."

No result was, however, arrived at.

The conclusions arrived at by Her Majesty's Government, after a careful consideration of the questions raised in Mr. Frelinghuysen's despatch, are that the meaning and effect of Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty are not open to any doubt; that the British Government have committed no act in relation to British Honduras or otherwise which can invalidate that Treaty and justify the Government of the United States in denouncing it; and that no necessity exists for renewing any of the provisions of that Treaty.

There might, perhaps, be advantages in defining by agreement the distance from each end of the canal within which no hostilities should be committed by belligerents, in order to maintain the freedom of the passage through the Panamá Canal, should that route be completed; and when the time approaches for its completion, Her Majesty's Government would, no doubt, be prepared to give its careful attention to the question of concluding an arrangement with that object, should such a proposal be made to them; but in the present stage of the enterprise, they conceive that it would be premature to enter upon negotiations for that purpose.

I have not thought it necessary to allude in this despatch to the "traditional Continental policy" of the United States as laid down in what is commonly called the "Monroe Doctrine," since Mr. Frelinghuysen, in his note of the 8th May last, in which he explained the views which were entertained by his Government on that subject, admitted that Her Majesty's Government were not called upon either to admit or deny the views therein expressed.

You will state to Mr. Frelinghuysen that Her Majesty's Government are animated by the most sincere desire to arrive at an amicable settlement of the questions which have given rise to this correspondence, and that they note with great satisfaction the friendly assurance with which he concludes his despatch, that the diversity of opinion which now exists will not in any wise impair the good understanding happily existing between the people and Governments of the United States and Great Britain.

You will read this despatch to Mr. Frelinghuysen, and, if he should desire it, place a copy of it in his hands.

Mr. Littlejohn's claim.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit a despatch* from Her Majesty's Minister at Monte Video upon the subject of Mr. Littlejohn's claim on the Government of Uruguay, which was the subject of our Report of the 27th October last, a copy of which was inclosed.

That in submitting the case of Mr. Littlejohn for our opinion in October last, reference was made to the Treaty of 1842 as being in force.

Treaty of 1842 not in force.

That Mr. Monson, however, pointed out that the Treaty was denounced by the Government of Uruguay in 1854, and that we should perceive from his despatch, and from the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 29th August, 1872,† that the arrangements made at the time for keeping it alive fell through, and that Her Majesty's Government were advised that the rights of British subjects under that Treaty had expired.

That, under those circumstances, your Lordship presumed that Mr. Littlejohn's claim could not be supported officially, and that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion upon that point before sending further instructions to Mr. Monson.

Murder of Robert Murdoch.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a despatch* from Her Majesty's Minister resident at Monte Video, inclosing a résumé of a correspondence which he had had with the Government of Uruguay relative to the murder last year, near Florida, in that country, of a British subject named Robert Murdoch. That from Mr. Monson's Memorandum it appeared that the murderer, a Spaniard, named Felipe Gardé, had, under the circumstances mentioned therein, never been brought to justice, and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether a claim for compensation should be made by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the father of the deceased against the Oriental Government, based on the failure of justice which had occurred in consequence of the incapacity or misconduct of their officials in releasing the murderer on two occasions contrary to law, and their want of diligence in permitting him to be at large for a whole year.

That if the facts, in our opinion, did not warrant such a claim, your Lordship desired to be informed whether an inquiry into the conduct of the Prefect of Florida should be demanded, or what other action, if any, should be taken by Her Majesty's Government under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Cannot claim indemnity for.

That although the murderer of Robert Murdoch appears to have been released on bail in a manner not authorized by the law of Uruguay, and although there may have been some want of vigilance on the part of the officials in that country, we do not think the circumstances are such as to justify a claim to an indemnity.

Inquiry into conduct of Prefect of Florida should be demanded.

We think, however, that an inquiry into the conduct of the Prefect of Florida should be demanded.

There seems no doubt that he caused the accused to be released on bail, and that this action on his part amounted to a violation of the law. It may be open to question whether he acted in good faith under the circumstances. And we think that the demand for an inquiry into his conduct would be well warranted.

18th October last on the subject of the Law passed last year by the Venezuelan Government, imposing an additional duty of 30 per cent. upon all imports into that country from West Indian islands or Colonies, he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Colonel Mansfield (No. 1 of the 10th January, 1882), inclosing copy and translation of the reply of the Venezuelan Government to the representation which he was instructed to make to them on the subject, in accordance with the terms of our Report.

That inclosed were two despatches from Colonel Mansfield, the one (No. 5 of the 12th March, 1882), forwarding extract with translation of the annual Report of the Secretary of State lately presented to Congress, which related to the imposition of the duties in question; the other (No. 7 of the 25th March, 1882), forwarding copy and translation of a further note from the Venezuelan Government announcing the imposition of those duties, and inclosing copy of the Law passed on the subject.

That the Venezuelan Government in their reply inclosed in Colonel Mansfield's No. 1 stated the reasons why they considered that the imposition of the differential duties referred to was not in opposition to the stipulations of the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Venezuela. That they pointed out that previous to, and at the time of, the conclusion of the Treaty of 1825, such differential duties were actually in force in Columbia, and continued in operation for several years without eliciting any remonstrance on the part of His Majesty's Government, and in their further note of the 15th March (in Colonel Mansfield's No. 7) they repeated those arguments at greater length, and stated that differential duties on goods coming from the West Indies to the territories of Colombia were established in 1821, that they were again decreed in 1823, and that notwithstanding the conclusion of the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Colombia, the Law of the Colombian Congress of May 1826 again ratified and decreed the differential duties without any remonstrance being made by His Majesty's Government. That they also argued that from 1830, when Venezuela separated from Colombia, until 1834, when she adopted the Colombian Treaty with Great Britain of 1825, there was no Treaty, and that as His Majesty's Government raised no objection before 1834 to the imposition by Colombia of those duties, they could not now object to them.

That a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet was inclosed, showing what took place in 1826, when the Law referred to of that year was sent home by His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, from which it appeared that the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade did not at the time consider the levying of the differential duties to be an infraction of the Treaty rights of this country. That the Board of Trade, however, did not seem to have arrived at that conclusion on a consideration of Article IV of the Treaty of 1825. By that Article it was distinctly provided that "any article of the growth, produce, or manufacture of His Britannic Majesty's dominions" should not be subjected to higher import duties than the like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country.

That the Venezuelan Government endeavoured to construe that Article as if it were only a most-favoured-nation clause, and argued that as all nations importing goods from the West Indian Islands would have to pay alike the increased duty of 30 per cent., Her Majesty's Government had no ground of complaint.

That it appeared to your Lordship, however, that such an argument was contrary to the express words of the Article, and that Her Majesty's Government were entitled to demand that articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the British West Indian Islands, and of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, though sent in transit through British West Indian Islands, should be admitted into Venezuela on the same terms as the produce, &c., of France, Germany, the United States, and other nations which might be shipped therefrom direct to Venezuela.

That we should observe that Mr. Consul-General Henderson, in his despatch No. 13 of the 26th February, 1828, cited in Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum (p. 4), ignored Article IV, and dealt only with the question of reciprocity and most-favoured-nation treatment as regarded the flag of importing vessels.

That the differential duties which gave rise to the discussion in 1826-28, and which the Board of Trade considered not to be a violation of the Treaty of 1825, were abolished by the Colombian Government in 1829, and that it was not until 1834 that Her Majesty's Government signed the present Convention with Venezuela, which incorporated the Treaty with Colombia of 1825.

That since 1829 no differential duties had been in force until the recent Venezuelan Decree re-established them.

That our opinion was requested as to whether, under all the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government were entitled to maintain their protest against that Decree, as being in violation of Article IV of the Treaty of 1825.

We are also honoured with a letter from Sir Charles Dilke, dated the 12th instant, inclosing a further despatch* from Her Majesty's Representative at Carácas on the subject of the differential duties imposed by Venezuela.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Such differential duties contrary to Article IV of Treaty of 1825.

That the view put forward by the Venezuelan Government is, in our opinion, contrary to the express terms of Article IV of the Treaty. If such an argument were admitted to be valid it would be destructive of the provisions contained in that Article, for it would justify the imposition of differential duties in favour of France, for example, upon goods of the same description imported into Venezuela from France and from England. It might in that case also be said that all goods coming from France or England respectively were treated alike.

Some difficulty is, no doubt, created by the fact that similar differential duties to those now in question were imposed, without objection, during the currency of the Treaty with Colombia, which contained a provision precisely similar to that embodied in Article IV of the present Treaty with Venezuela.

But we do not think that this affords any sufficient reason why Her Majesty's Government should not maintain their protest against the Decree, as being in violation of the terms of Article IV of the Treaty.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to Colonel Mansfield.

(No. . Commercial.)
Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1882.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, your despatch No. 1, Commercial, of the 10th January last, and your despatch No. 7, Commercial, of the 25th March, on the subject of the Venezuelan Law imposing an additional duty of 30 per cent. upon all imports into that country from the West India Islands.

In his note of the 7th January, inclosed in the first of the above-mentioned despatches, Señor Seijas argues that such additional duty falls equally on the goods of all nations, including even Venezuela itself, which are imported into Venezuela from the West India

Islands. That consequently there is no differential treatment, and no infraction of the Treaty is caused by the Venezuelan Law in question. I have to point out, however, that the above argument affords no answer to the complaint of Her Majesty's Government.

Article IV of the Treaty stipulates that "no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the territories of Colombia (now Venezuela) of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions than are or shall be payable on the like articles, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country."

Her Majesty's Government therefore claim that such articles imported into Venezuela from Her Majesty's dominions in the West Indies shall be admitted on the same terms as similar articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of other countries imported into Venezuela direct from such other countries. The view put forward by the Venezuelan Government is contrary to the express terms of Article IV. If such an argument were admitted to be valid it would be destructive of the provisions contained in that Article, as it would justify the imposition of differential duties in favour of France, for example, by a law declaring that lower duties should be paid on goods imported into Venezuela from France than on similar goods imported from England. In that case it might equally be said that all goods coming from France or from England respectively were treated alike.

Nor can Her Majesty's Government admit the contention of Señor Seijas that Article III of the Treaty was intended to exclude the British Colonies from the benefit of Article IV. His Excellency points out that Article III of the Treaty concedes to Colombia the right to import her produce into the British Colonies, but does not impose any corresponding obligation on Colombia. But that Article could not be made reciprocal, as Colombia had no Colonies; and it was for that reason that while Article III granted to Colombia the same privileges in British Colonies as in the United Kingdom, Article IV, by way of reciprocity, granted the privileges, therein conferred, to goods being the growth, produce, or manufacture of "Her Majesty's dominions," which term invariably includes the British Colonies, and has never been held to apply only to the United Kingdom.

The records of the negociations which preceded the conclusion of the Treaty supports this view of the intention of the High Contracting Parties. Those records show that the Colombian Plenipotentiaries were anxious to foster their shipping by protective measures, and it is highly improbable that the British Plenipotentiaries should have accorded most-favoured-nation treatment to Colombian trade in British Colonies without receiving a reciprocal engagement in favour of British Colonial trade in Colombia; or, if so, that so remarkable a concession to Colombia should not have formed a distinct feature in the discussions which took place. Nothing, however, appears which could lead to the supposition that anything of the kind was intended.

Article IV is clear and explicit, and Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to understand how it can be contended that it refers only (as suggested by Señor Seijas) to the flag under which the goods are imported, and not to the country of their "growth, produce, or manufacture." As regards the fact urged by his Excellency that Great Britain did not protest against a similar though comparatively trifling imposition of differential duties by Colombia in 1826, which was shortly afterwards removed, Her Majesty's Government cannot allow that such omission can be held to preclude them from protesting against the present grave infraction of the Treaty by Venezuela, and against the injuries thereby inflicted on British commerce.

I have, therefore, to instruct you to address a note to the Venezuelan Government in the sense of this despatch, demanding the repeal of the Law imposing a differential duty of 30 per cent. on British imports from Her Majesty's Possessions in the West Indies, and a return of the duties levied in violation of the Treaty.

Exportation of arms, &c., from Trinidad to Venezuela.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Meade's letter of the 11th instant, stating that by the Customs Ordinance, 1880, of Trinidad (a copy of which was inclosed), section 82, which corresponded mutatis mutandis with the 21st section of the Imperial Customs and Inland Revenue, 1879, the Governor of the Colony was empowered to prohibit by Proclamation either the exportation or the carrying coastwise of arms, ammunition, and gunpowder, and other goods therein mentioned.

2. That in consequence of repeated complaints by the Government of Venezuela of the exportation by Venezuelan refugees of arms and munitions of war from Trinidad to Venezuela for the purpose of being used in attempts to subvert the government of that country, the Governor of Trinidad, acting under instructions from the Secretary of State on the 18th June last, issued a Proclamation, a copy of which was inclosed, prohibiting to be exported from Trinidad to any port or place in Venezuela, or to be carried coastwise, any arms, ammunition, or gunpowder.

3. That the Venezuelan Minister at that (this) Court had recently, in a note addressed to Earl Granville inclosing a copy of a despatch from his Government, translations of which note and despatch were inclosed, requested, on behalf of his Government, that the Governor of Trinidad should except from the above prohibition munitions of war exported from Trinidad to Venezuela for the Government of the Republic, "whether officially by the Consul or by any other functionary duly appointed to perform the act."

4. That it would be seen from an inclosed copy of a letter from the Foreign Office that Lord Granville considered it unreasonable to treat the Venezuelan Government on the same footing as the rebels who used Trinidad as a centre of their unlawful operations, and had suggested that facilities should be afforded for the export of arms, &c., from Trinidad, if required for the use of the Venezuelan Government, on application to the Colonial authorities through the Consul for the Republic.

5. That your Lordship concurred in Lord Granville's opinion, but that you were doubtful whether the Colonial Ordinance empowered the Governor to comply with the request of the Venezuelan Government.

6. That your Lordship also felt some doubt as to the validity of the Proclamation prohibiting exportation to Venezuela only.

That Mr. Meade was therefore directed by your Lordship to request that we would advise:—

1. Whether under the 82nd section of the Trinidad Customs Ordinance, 1880, the Governor was empowered—

(a.) To prohibit the exportation of arms, &c., to a particular country or place.

(b.) To except from such prohibition, arms, &c., exported for the use of the Government of the country, exportation to which was prohibited.

2. That if the answer to both the previous questions was in the affirmative, whether there was any objection of international law to the modification in favour of the Venezuelan Government of the Proclamation issued by the Governor of Trinidad, in the manner proposed by Lord Granville.

Law Officers' Report, 1873.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Wingfield of the 23rd instant, stating that, with reference to the letter from your Lordship's Department of the 11th instant respecting the prohibition of the exportation of arms, &c., from Trinidad to Venezuela, he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that, since that letter was written, your Lordship's attention had been called to the Report of the Law Officers in 1873 on a somewhat similar question as to the construction of an Imperial Statute, which would be found at p. 76 of the annexed printed paper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Governor of Trinidad is not empowered to prohibit the exportation of arms.

That we are of opinion that, under the 82nd section of the Trinidad Customs Ordinance, 1880, the Governor is not empowered either—

(a.) To prohibit the exportation of arms, &c., to a particular country or place; or

(b.) To except from such prohibition, arms, &c., exported for the use of the Government of the country, exportation to which is prohibited.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 24.)

My Lord,

Temple, January , 1882.

Murder of Captain Brownrigg by crew of dhow flying French colours.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us despatches,* and their inclosures, from the Acting British Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, reporting the circumstances under which Captain Brownrigg, of Her Majesty's ship "London," was treacherously attacked and murdered on board one of the boats of his ship, when visiting an Arab dhow flying French colours. That the attack evidently took place within 3 miles of the shores of Pemba, and therefore within the territorial waters of the Sultan of Zanzibar, whose troops had since captured two Arabs, who ~~had~~ confessed to being on board the dhow at the time of the attack, but whether they took part in the attack or not did not appear.

Captain of dhow repudiated by French Consul.

That the French Consul at Zanzibar had categorically refused to recognize that the captain of the dhow was a French subject, or that he had any right to fly the French flag. That the Arabs on board would, therefore, either be the subjects of the Sultan of Zanzibar or would not be entitled to the protection of any nation.

That the question arose as to how the prisoners should be brought to trial.

Question as to trial of criminals.

That, assuming that the crime could be considered to have been committed on board of a British vessel, it might be that it would be justiciable by British Courts in Her Majesty's dominions under the Statutes relating to crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty; but that Her Majesty's Consular Court at Zanzibar did not possess the same jurisdiction, either by Treaty or by the Order in Council under which it was established.

That your Lordship apprehended, however, that if the two prisoners could be shown to have been principals, or accessories, in the attack on the steam-pinnace of Her Majesty's ship "London," which resulted in the death of Captain Brownrigg and others, they were guilty of murder, and that, the crime having been committed in the territorial waters of Zanzibar, the Sultan had jurisdiction to deal with it.

Trial by Sultan demanded.

That your Lordship therefore informed† the British Representative at Zanzibar that it was essential that the Sultan should try them, and had instructed him to demand that His Highness should do so. That Colonel Miles had further been told to watch the proceedings and report the result.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we concurred in the course which had been adopted; and Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would also favour your Lordship with our opinion on the following point:—That a difficulty was likely to arise from the religious scruples entertained by the Sultan of Zanzibar to the infliction of capital punishment, and your Lordship was informed that, if the prisoners should be found guilty of murder, the Sultan would decline to execute a sentence of death.

That under those circumstances your Lordship desired to know whether there was any legal objection, in the event of the prisoners being found guilty of murder and sentenced to death, to the execution of such sentence by Her Majesty's Senior Naval Officer at Zanzibar, if such duty be delegated to him by the Sultan. Also whether, in case the Sultan should decline to delegate such duty to Her Majesty's Senior Naval Officer, the prisoners should be left to be dealt with by the Sultan in such manner as he might deem fit, or whether any other course was open under all the circumstances.

That the telegraphic correspondence on the subject was inclosed.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir J. Pauncefote, dated the 21st instant, inclosing a copy of a telegram which had been received from the Acting Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar relative to the murderers of Captain Brownrigg.

* Colonel Miles. Nos. 146, 149, 151 of 1881; Slave Trade Treaty with Zanzibar.

† To Colonel Miles, telegram, January 18, 1882.

1882

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Concur in course adopted.

That we concur in the course which has been adopted.

Opinion as to execution of sentence by Naval Officer.

We do not think that there is any legal objection to the delegation by the Sultan of the execution of sentence of death, in case he should pronounce such a sentence, to Her Majesty's Senior Naval Officer. He might, we apprehend, lawfully appoint any person whom he pleased to be the executioner; but learning, as we do from the telegram of the 21st January, that the Sultan declines to pass judgment of death, and that his so declining is in accordance with the general course of law in his country, we think that the capital punishment could not properly be carried out by one of Her Majesty's Naval Officers.

Inasmuch as the Sultan is willing to impose the extreme sentence for the offence according to the law of his country, viz., imprisonment for life, and as Her Majesty's Government had no legal power of bringing the accused to further trial, we think it is impossible for the officials of this country to take part in inflicting a sentence which would not be founded on any legal judgment.

In the present case, the principal offender has already met with his death, and it would seem, therefore, not to be of such paramount importance that the sentence of death should be executed on the other offenders, such execution not being according to the ordinary course of law in Zanzibar.

We have, &c.

Case.

[Received in Letter from Post Office, dated April 6, 1882.]

Proposed telegraphic cable between Vigo Bay and Bermuda. Question as to interference with telegrams, from or to belligerents, by neutrals in neutral territory.

THE Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have been asked by the Colonial Office, the War Office, and the Admiralty to provide a subsidy for a cable between Halifax and Bermuda, for military purposes. As an alternative to the proposed cable between Halifax and Bermuda, it has been proposed to allow the landing at Bermuda, from Vigo Bay, of a cable from whence branches could be made to Jamaica and New York.

In connection with this proposal, the Prime Minister has raised a question as to the power and duty of a neutral country in time of war to stop, intercept, or interfere with telegrams, whether in cypher or not, passing through it, and sent to or from one belligerent country from or to States or persons in alliance with such country or engaged in its service.

In "Le Droit International," by Charles Calvo, it is stated, at p. 497 (paragraph 1131), that despatches addressed to belligerents and relating to the war are included amongst articles "contraband of war;" but in order to satisfy this description it is necessary (1) that the despatch should relate to the war, and (2) that the ship should have been expressly chartered for the purpose of carrying it. The writer goes on to say (p. 498) :—"Despatches which do not relate to the war, and despatches and private letters, may be sent by ships of neutral countries. Custom has established a special exception in favour of correspondence having a purely diplomatic character, the despatches of Agents of a belligerent Power to the Government of that Power: the interests and the rights of neutral countries require that their diplomatic and Consular relations with the belligerents should not be interrupted nor altered by the war." After citing cases of the "Atalanta," the "Madison," the "Hope," the "Caroline," and the "Rapid," the writer goes on to say (paragraph 1132) :—"These decisions do not apply to mail-boats, to which the International Conventions specially intrust the exchange of official and private correspondence. The captain is naturally ignorant of the contents of the letters and packets with which he is intrusted. The Convention of the 14th June, 1833, between France and England, provides, in Article XIII, 'In case of war between the two nations, the mail-boats ("paquebots-poste") of the two offices shall continue their navigation without obstacle or molestation until notification of the cessation of their service is made by one of the two Governments, in which cases they will be permitted to return free and without special protection to their respective ports.'"

M. Charles Calvo is silent on the question of telegrams. According to English law, a telegram is a post letter, and section 23 of "The Telegraph Act, 1869" (32 and 33 Vict., cap. 73) provides (inter alia) that "Every written or printed message or communication delivered at a post-office for the purpose of being transmitted by a postal telegraph, and every transcript thereof made by any person acting in pursuance of the orders of the Postmaster-General, shall be a post-letter within the meaning of an Act passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, cap. 36."

The interpretation clause (section 47) of the Act last mentioned (1 Vict., cap. 36) enacts (inter alia) that "the term 'post letter' shall mean any letter or packet transmitted by the post under the authority of the Postmaster-General, and a letter shall be deemed a post letter from the time of its being delivered to a post-office to the time of its being delivered to the person to whom it is addressed."

It is to be borne in mind, however, that the Postmaster-General has no monopoly in England of the right to transmit international telegrams, and unless such a telegram, after arriving in the United Kingdom, is delivered at a post-office and transmitted by a postal telegraph, it will not come within the definition of a post letter. As a matter of fact, a very large number of foreign telegrams are handed in by the senders direct to the Cable Companies at their own offices, and messages received from abroad are delivered direct by the Companies from their own offices to the addressees. In particular, a large number of telegrams sent from abroad, addressed to the chief Government offices, are delivered direct from the Companies' offices, and do not pass through the hands of the Post Office at all; and it is quite likely that a telegram from Bermuda, addressed to the Commander-in-chief, for example, would be sent from the office of the Eastern Telegraph Company in Old Broad Street direct to the Horse Guards, and the Post Office would know nothing of it. And as a matter of principle, the inclusion of telegrams in the term "post letter" for municipal purposes could hardly be taken as binding the parties to an international system of telegraphy.

Whatever may have been the Law of Nations in relation to post letters (and by analogy it may perhaps be assumed to telegrams) prior to 1879, it would seem that under Articles 7 and 8 of the "International Telegraph Convention with London Revision of Service Regulations and Tariffs," 1879 (copy herewith), any country may "interrupt the system of international telegraphs for an indefinite period if it judges it necessary, either generally or only upon certain lines, and for certain kinds of messages."

The following are copies of Articles 7 and 8 of the "International Telegraph Convention" above referred to.

Article 7. The High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the power to stop the transmission of any private telegram which may appear dangerous to the security of the State, or which may be contrary to the laws of the country, to public order or decency.

Article 8. Each Government also reserves to itself the power to interrupt the system of the international telegraphs for an indefinite period if it judges it necessary, either generally or only upon certain lines, and for certain kinds of messages, upon condition that it immediately advises each of the other Contracting Governments.

There is, however, no definition in the Convention of what a system of international telegraphs consists. No doubt a cable passing between foreign States would generally come within such definition, but it does not follow that the Rules and Regulations of the International Convention are applied to all cables. The Regulations are by the Convention applicable to cables belonging to Governments or private Companies when the two States in which they land are parties to the Convention. In the present instance Spain is a party to the Convention, but Bermuda is not, and unless the Spanish Government insisted upon it when granting the concession to the Company to land their cable in Spain, the cable might be worked outside the Convention, and, of course, in that case, the provisions of the Convention as to interruption by the Spanish Government would not be applicable.

Again, the cable, if laid, might be worked in Spain by clerks belonging to the private Company, and in that case the Spanish Government would have no cognizance of messages passing over the cable, except such as were handed over to them for further transmission, and it is quite possible that a message from Bermuda for England would not pass at all into the hands of the Spanish Administration, but would be handed by the Spanish-Bermuda Cable Company to the Eastern Telegraph Company for transmission to England.

Even, however, if the Spanish Administration did take cognizance of messages passing over these lines, it would be necessary for them to stop every telegram, whether Government or private, addressed to England, inasmuch as most if not all the messages would be in cypher, and would be addressed to a fictitious name, so that it would be impossible for the Spanish Government to know whether a message was Government or private, that is to say, a message intended for the Commander-in-chief might be addressed "Ajax, London," and a message for a private firm in London might be addressed "Achilles, London." The person for whom "Ajax" and "Achilles" are registered are not known in Spain, and therefore in order to stop Government messages, they would have to stop every message.

It is conceivable of course that the Spanish Government might do this, not only with regard to their own cables, but to cables of private Companies in Spain. But it would appear that in order to stop any messages of the kind referred to by the Prime Minister, practically the whole system of international telegraphy in the neutral country would have to be suspended.

These are considerations rather of fact than of law, but it has been thought well that they should be borne in mind in considering the question raised.

Your advice is requested—

Whether a neutral country, in time of war, can under Articles 7 and 8 of the International Telegraph Convention, or under any other authority, stop, intercept, or interfere with telegrams, whether in cypher or not, passing through it, from and to one belligerent country to and from States and persons in alliance with such country, or engaged in its service?

Opinion.

Neutrals have power to interfere with telegrams of belligerents independently of Convention of St. Petersburgh.

We are of opinion that in time of war a neutral Government has power to prevent the transmission of telegrams passing through its territory relating to the military or naval service of any of the belligerents.

We are of opinion that this power exists independently of the provisions of the International Telegraph Convention of St. Petersburgh, and is not controlled by anything contained in that Convention.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN: 1883.

Austria.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received June 14.)

My Lord,

Royal Courts of Justice, June 14, 1883.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a note from the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador,* in which he claimed, on behalf of his Government, exemption from the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of this country in the matter of the administration of the personal estate of the late Prince Batthyany, and the probate of his will, which his Excellency contended appertained to the Tribunals of Austro-Hungary, by reason of the diplomatic status of the deceased.

Personal estate of Prince Batthyany. Claim for its exemption from jurisdiction of British Courts on account of the Prince's diplomatic status.

That the facts of the case were clearly stated in the Ambassador's letter, and that we should observe that his Excellency invoked the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in bringing certain claims on the real estate of the deceased to the knowledge of the Tribunals having jurisdiction over it.

That the late Prince's name was for several years past included in the lists of those attached to the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, and that he was consequently regarded as being entitled to diplomatic privilege; and it was not known at the Foreign Office, until the receipt of Count Károlyi's note, that the Prince had become naturalized as a British subject, in which capacity he could not, according to the invariable rule, have been properly retained upon the list of those forming the Diplomatic Body in England, and who were, consequently, entitled to diplomatic privilege. That a letter from the Treasury† was inclosed, to which Department Count Károlyi's application had been in the first instance referred, and that our opinion was requested as to the reply which might properly be returned to the Ambassador's communication.

The Prince was a naturalized British subject, therefore not entitled to diplomatic status.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the question whether, inasmuch as Prince Batthyany procured himself to be naturalized as a British subject, his movable property in this country can, in consequence of his being attached to the Austrian Embassy, be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Tribunals here, is one of considerable difficulty. It does not appear to us to be necessarily solved by the consideration that, as between himself and the Austro-Hungarian Government, he could not get rid of his nationality of origin. It is impossible to say with certainty what view the Tribunals would take, and it is with them that the determination of the matter must rest.

Decision as to exemption rests with the Tribunals.

The letter of the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador does not show in whose hands the movable property now is, nor by whom, nor in what way, it is anticipated that steps will be taken with regard to it in this country. It is, therefore, impossible for us to say, at present, in what manner it would be practicable for Her Majesty's Government to intervene. It would, no doubt, be open to the Austro-Hungarian

At present, no grounds for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

Ambassador, should any steps be taken to which he objects, to set up the claim of diplomatic privilege. In case such steps were taken, and the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador should desire that the Foreign Secretary should put before the Court the claim of diplomatic privilege, it would be matter for consideration whether it was expedient and proper for the Law Officers to appear and represent the circumstances to the Court, but at present there seems no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received July 17.)

Royal Courts of Justice, July 16, 1883.

My Lord,

Estate of late Prince Batthyany.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th ultimo, he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a further note from the Austrian Ambassador at the Court of St. James' respecting the administration of the estate of the late Prince Batthyany;* and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would report what course we should recommend should be adopted under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The will duly made, and probate obtained.

That we gather from the information now before us that Count Batthyany, a naturalized British subject, by a will duly made according to the law of England, appointed a domiciled Englishwoman his executrix, and that she has obtained probate of the will in the English Courts.

Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere.

If these be the circumstances, we do not see how it would be possible for Her Majesty's Government to intervene. The executrix is, in law, the owner of the goods, subject to their administration according to the trusts and provisions of the will. And it appears to us that it would be impossible on the ground of any claim of diplomatic privilege to affect her legal title to the property.

The right was acquired by the voluntary disposition of his property made by Count Batthyany himself, and we are not aware of any principle of international law which affects the right to make such a disposition, or its validity when made.

If there is anything in the municipal law of Austria-Hungary which affects the right of Count Batthyany to make the disposition of his property which he has made, this question will no doubt be determined in the proceedings which have been taken in the Courts of this country by Count Batthyany's relations.

No question of diplomatic privilege involved.

But we do not see that any question of diplomatic privilege is involved.

We have, &c.
(Signed) HENRY JAMES.

My Lord,

Inheritance of property by married women.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a letter from the Belgian Minister in this country,* asking for information as to the stipulations of English law regulating the capacity of a married woman to inherit property, as well as the rules which obtained on the same subject on the 22nd November, 1881, and the 3rd November, 1882.

That your Lordship proposed, in reply, to furnish the Belgian Minister with a copy of the Act of Parliament 33 & 34 Vict., cap. 93, referring him particularly to section 7, and to add that, subject to the provisions of that statute, all the personal estate of a married woman which was not settled on her by deed for her separate use vested by English law in her husband, jure mariti.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the proposed reply was right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve reply to Belgian Minister as to English law respecting.

That, in our opinion, the proposed reply is right and proper.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received March 15.)

Temple, March 15, 1883.

My Lord,

Employment of British vessel "Royalist" in expedition against pirates.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a correspondence† relative to the chartering of the British merchant-steamer "Royalist" by the North Borneo Company towards the beginning of last year for the conveyance of a party of armed police upon an expedition against piratical natives.

That it would be seen that Dr. Leys, the officer administering the Government of Labuan, blamed the owner and master of the "Royalist" for allowing the vessel to convey an armed party, whereas Mr. Treacher, the Governor of Sabat, maintained that there was no legal objection whatever to the course pursued by the Government of the Company in chartering the vessel.

That a copy of the Royal Charter ‡ granted to the Company was inclosed, and our opinion was requested as to the instructions which should be sent to Dr. Leys on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it is not quite clear whether the British vessel "Royalist," which was chartered by the British North Borneo Company, was used on the occasion in question for the purpose of conveying a party of armed police for the punishment of pirates outside the territory of the Company, or for the punishment of natives of that territory who had been guilty of acts of piracy.

Owner not guilty of any infraction of law.

But in either case we are of opinion that the owner of the "Royalist" was not guilty of any violation of municipal or international law in permitting his vessel to be so used.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 10, 1883.

Regulation of civil and criminal jurisdiction in the territories of the British North Borneo Company.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th September last, he therewith transmitted papers* relating to the question of the regulation of civil and criminal jurisdiction in the territories of the British North Borneo Company.

Sir F. Reilly's scheme for the establishment of Tribunals by the Company.

That our attention was invited to a Memorandum by Sir F. Reilly, in which he suggested a general scheme for the establishment of Tribunals by the Company without the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the recommendation contained in our Report above referred to, whereby the exterritorial jurisdiction of the Queen in North Borneo would be suspended and justice would be administered in the name of the territorial Sovereign, or in the name of the Company, as his absolute delegate.

That our opinion was requested as to whether there was any objection to the scheme proposed by Sir F. Reilly in paragraphs 12 to 17 of his Memorandum, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the question under consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No objection to Sir F. Reilly's scheme.

That we see no objection to the scheme proposed by Sir F. Reilly for the administration of justice by the British North Borneo Company within their territories.

Extra-territorial jurisdiction of the Queen in North Borneo.

We presume, from the circumstances disclosed in the papers before us, that there is not likely to be any serious objection on the part of British subjects who were residents in North Borneo before the date of the Charter to the cessation of the exercise in those regions of the extra-territorial jurisdiction of the Queen.

We do not, indeed, gather quite clearly whether such jurisdiction has, in fact, ever been exercised in the territory now belonging to the North Borneo Company.

We have, &c.

Inclosure in Sir F. Reilly's Letter of February 26, 1884.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN NORTH BORNEO.

Memorandum.

1. THERE have been two instruments purporting to grant to the Queen extra-territorial jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sultan of Borneo—(1) the Additional Article to the Treaty of the 27th May, 1847, and (2) the Agreement of the 26th November, 1856. Whatever difficulties of a diplomatic character there may be respecting these two instruments, I assume that, for legal purposes, the Agreement of 1856, and that alone, is to be regarded as now in operation.

2. The Agreement is so framed that no practical legal effect can be given to it, especially in the present circumstances. It would have been almost unworkable in the original state of things; it is completely so now.

3. The Agreement provides, in effect, that there shall be, both for criminal and for civil cases, Mixed Courts, each consisting of a British officer and a Borneon officer, distinct persons. It is impracticable to constitute such Courts now. British authority and Borneon authority cannot be separately represented.

4. If, however, by any contrivance, such Mixed Courts could be constituted, they would have jurisdiction in criminal cases over British subjects only, and in civil cases over British subjects and Borneons only, with the addition of foreigners submitting to the jurisdiction. For all others Borneon Courts would have to be established side by side with the Mixed Courts. Yes, the jurisdiction of these Borneon Courts would now necessarily be exercisable by representatives of the Company. Therefore, substantially, the two kinds of jurisdiction would be exercised by the same persons sitting in different capacities.

5. There would be an appeal to some British Court outside Borneo in all cases for British subjects, and in civil cases also for Borneons and foreigners submitting to the jurisdiction of the Mixed British-Borneon Courts; but there would be no such appeal for others.

6. The stipulations in the Agreement, purporting to give to a Mixed British-Borneon Court jurisdiction in all civil cases, as between British subjects and foreigners, is beyond the powers of the Contracting Parties, repugnant to international law, and void.

7. The stipulation in the Agreement that all civil cases are to be determined by the Mixed British-Borneon Courts according to the customs of Borneo, is inconsistent with the rights of Her Majesty's subjects, repugnant to constitutional law, and void.

8. There is a stipulation in the Agreement providing in effect as to the judgments (sentences, they are called) of the Mixed British-Borneon Courts in civil cases, instead of their being executed by or under direction of the Courts themselves, that the Sultan of Borneo is to receive them and carry them out. Whatever effect might have been given to this stipulation in the original state of things, it is plainly unworkable now.

9. On the whole, therefore, I am clearly of opinion that no use can now be made of the Sultan's grant to the Queen of extra-territorial jurisdiction, and, consequently, that no ground for an Order in Council exists.

10. Possibly the Foreign Office will think fit not to stop at this negative result, but to give to the Company some indication of the course which might be taken by the Company in the circumstances.

11. It seems to me that the Company must proceed to organize their own Courts, and to administer justice to all inhabitants of their territories, including British subjects, in the name of the territorial Sovereign, or in the name of the Company, as his absolute delegate.

12. Some such plan as the following might be adequate, and not beyond the resources of the Company. The Company would appoint some of their higher resident officers to be Justices or Magistrates, or Judges, to hold Courts, one, for example, at each of two ports, and would appoint a professional lawyer of some experience as Chief Justice, or Chief Judge, for North Borneo. Serious sentences would, before execution, be examined and confirmed by the Chief Justice. Capital cases would be tried by the Chief Justice and one of the other Justices. The Chief Justice would sit at the two ports alternately, and with the Justice of that port would form a Court of Review for civil and criminal cases arising at the other port, the opinion of the Chief Justice always prevailing. Whether there should be in any cases, criminal or civil, assessors, or small juries, would depend mainly on local circumstances.

13. The law to be administered should be some form of British law (as the law of Singapore, or of India, or of England), specified in some authoritative way, subject to modification required by local circumstances, and regard being had to Borneon customs, as prescribed by Article 9 of the Charter.

14. The Company might probably, with great advantage, obtain the services of a professional lawyer as official adviser, with the title of Advocate-General, or the like.

15. I do not think that there need be, or ought to be, any declaration of waiver or suspension of the Queen's extra-territorial jurisdiction in favour of the Company. The Company must proceed under the powers of their Borneon grants and British Charter, on their own responsibility, the Foreign Office being quiescent, in accordance with the policy of the Charter, unless and until reason appears for interference.

16. At the same time it might be well that the Foreign Office should be informed by the Company of the arrangements, when settled, and that the Company should receive from the Foreign Office an expression of general satisfaction therewith, subject to the consideration of any questions to arise from time to time in the working of the arrangements.

17. The United States' grant of extra-territorial jurisdiction will require attention on the part of the Company, and also on the part of the Foreign Office, under Article 6 of the Charter. At present the grant is in abeyance, and it may be a question for the Company, with reference to United States' citizens in the Company's territories, whether a previous understanding should be come to with the United States' Government as to the jurisdiction over them, or whether any difficulties should be left to be met, if and when they arise.

18. It should be noted that when the Charter was drawn and passed the Agreement of 1856 and the Orders in Council of 1854 and 1855 were not known to those concerned.

Jurisdiction in North Borneo. Proposal that Her Majesty should waive.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 5, 1883.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th June last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 10th April last on the subject of civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects in North Borneo, he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the further papers noted in the accompanying list,* which related to the same question, and that he was to draw our attention to the request contained in the letter of the North Borneo Company of the 17th May last, that some public notifications should be made of the waiver of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in the territories of the Company.

* 1. Treaty, May 27, 1847. No. 334.
2. Agreement, November 26, 1856. "State Papers," vol. lxv, p. 1170.
3. Charter of North Borneo Company, November 7, 1881. Confidential No. 4528.
4. Law Officers' Report of April 10, 1883.
5. To North Borneo Company, May 8, 1883.
6. North Borneo Company, May 17, 1883.
7. Draft Notification.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether there was any objection to complying with the request of the Company, and if not, whether the form of notification (which accompanied Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter), might properly be adopted with or without modification.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve form of notification, but opposed to its issue.

That if there is to be a notification of the waiver by Her Majesty of her exterritorial jurisdiction in North Borneo, we think the proposed draft is proper.

But we much doubt the expediency of issuing such a notification unless it be necessary so to do, and we are not satisfied that such necessity exists.

The Agreement of 1856 has never been practically acted upon, and the present state of things is essentially different to that to which it related.

We do not think any difficulties can arise of the nature suggested in the letter from the North Borneo Company. The exercise by them of the territorial jurisdiction which they possess, as representing the Sultan of Brunei, would be beyond question, even notwithstanding Her Majesty possessed the exterritorial rights conferred by the Agreement of 1856, unless she chose to exercise them. We think, therefore, it would suffice if a communication were made to the North Borneo Company simply to the effect that so long as Her Majesty was satisfied with the provision made for the administration of justice by the North Borneo Company, Her Majesty did not intend to exercise such exterritorial jurisdiction as is vested in her under the Agreement of 1856. And we think that no notification of this in the "Gazette" or otherwise would improve the legal position of the Company or its officers.

We have, &c.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL JURISDICTION IN NORTH BORNEO.

WHEREAS, by an Agreement dated the 26th day of November, 1856, entered into between Her Majesty the Queen and His Highness the Sultan of Brunei, it was provided that Her Majesty should exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over British subjects, jointly with the Sultan, throughout the dominions of His Highness in North Borneo;

And whereas no Order of Her Majesty in Council has been issued for the exercise and regulation of the said jurisdiction;

And whereas by certain grants and commissions made and issued by the Sultan, bearing date the 29th day of December, 1877, and by other deeds and instruments, a part of His Highness' dominions in North Borneo has become vested in the British North Borneo Company, with full power to the said Company, by delegation from His Highness, to govern the same, and to exercise therein all powers and rights appertaining to His Highness as Sovereign Ruler thereof, as more fully appears in the Royal Charter of Incorporation of the said Company, dated the 1st day of November, 1881, and published in the "London Gazette" of the 8th November, 1881;

And whereas the said Company have made suitable provision for the administration of justice in their territories in North Borneo;

It is hereby notified that Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to waive Her rights of jurisdiction in the territories of the British North Borneo Company, under the said Agreement of the 26th day of November, 1856, until Her further pleasure be signified; and that all British subjects within the said territories are amenable to the jurisdiction of the Courts established therein by the said Company for the purpose of administering justice to the inhabitants thereof.

Transfer of Brazilian Government bonds to representatives of deceased British subjects.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit, by your Lordship's direction, papers* (of which no list was inclosed) relating to the difficulties experienced by the legal representatives of deceased British subjects in obtaining the transfer into their names of Brazilian Government bonds standing in the names of the testators or intestates, in consequence of the formalities required by the Brazilian Government before the transfer is allowed.

Brazilian law as to.

That it appeared that the Brazilian Regulations required the British Consul to certify that the documents presented fulfilled the requirements of British law for vesting the property in the parties claiming the transfer into their names.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether there would be any objection to the Consul granting such certificate on receipt through the Foreign Office of a certified copy of the probate or letters of administration showing the title of the legal personal representative to the Government bonds.

That if we should not consider that course advisable, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the best mode of meeting the difficulty.

In compliance with the request contained in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter, and in obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

No objection to Consul granting a certificate that requirements of British law have been fulfilled.

That we are of opinion that there will be no objection to the Consul granting the certificate referred to upon the receipt of the probate or letters of administration showing the title of the legal personal representative of the testator or intestate to the Government bonds.

Law Officers to Home Office, June 18, 1883.

(Extract from Appendix to Report of Civil Service Commission for 1883. Foreign Office No. 2854, p. 16.)

Sir, May 18, 1883.

Status of children, born in Brazil, of a widow, British by origin, of a Brazilian subject, upon her readmission to British nationality;

I SHALL be obliged if you will be good enough to give me information under the following circumstances:—

Mrs. A. B.., the widow of a Brazilian subject, is about to apply for a certificate of readmission to British nationality, she having before marriage been a natural-born British subject. Of her children, two sons are infants, one being now educated at Harrow. They were both born in Brazil. Mrs. A. B. wishes to be advised whether, having regard to "The Naturalization Act, 1870," sec. 10, sub-sec. 4, such infant children will, upon the readmission to British nationality of their mother, be deemed in law natural-born British subjects; and, as such, be eligible for Commissions in the Army or for the Civil Service.

I am, &c.
(Signed) C. D.

The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Provision of Act as to.

Reference should be made to section 10 of 33 Vict., cap. 14, the Naturalization Act, the whole of which section seems to me more or less applicable.

Mrs. A. B. is by English law, 33 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 10 (1, 2), and, no doubt, by Brazilian law also, a Brazilian subject.

It is presumed that the children of Mrs. A. B. have always been, and are now, Brazilians, and never have been British subjects—33 Vict., cap. 14, sec. 10 (3). The same section further prescribes:—

"Sub-sec. (2). A widow, being a natural-born British subject, who has become an alien by or in consequence of her marriage, shall be deemed to be a statutory alien, and may, as such, at any time during widowhood obtain a certificate of readmission to British nationality in manner provided by this Act."

"Sub-sec. (4). Where the father, or the mother being a widow, has obtained a certificate of readmission to British nationality, every child of such father or mother who during infancy has become resident in the British dominions with such father or mother shall be deemed to have resumed the position of a British subject to all intents."

"Sub-sec. (5). Where the father, or the mother being a widow, has obtained a certificate of naturalization in the United Kingdom, every child of such father or mother who during infancy has become resident with such father or mother in any part of the United Kingdom, shall be deemed to be a naturalized British subject."

The Secretary of State desires to be advised by the Law Officers whether, in the event of the mother obtaining a certificate of readmission to British nationality, her children, who previously to her obtaining such certificate were Brazilian subjects, but who during infancy have become resident in the British dominions with the mother, are to be deemed to be—

(a.) British subjects;
(b,) Naturalized British subjects; or,
(c). Aliens.

Construction of Statute doubtful. Children probably British subjects.

Great difficulty arises in the construction of section 10, sub-section (4) of the Naturalization Act in consequence of the use of the word "resumed." The present case, if within the section at all, is governed by sub-section (4), and taking into consideration all the provisions of section 10, we think that in the event of the mother obtaining a certificate of readmission to British nationality, her children, who during infancy have become resident with her in the British dominions, would probably be deemed to be British subjects. But we repeat that the construction of the Statute is exceedingly doubtful.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Corbett.

Sir, Foreign Office, , 1883.

I HAVE received your despatch No. 18, marked Commercial, of the 9th May last, and I have to point out to you that, as it relates to a labour question, it should have been numbered in the Consular series.

In reply to your inquiry as to the right of British subjects to hire slaves from their masters for domestic employment, I have to state to you that, so long as such employment does not involve a dealing, or trading, in, or the purchase, sale, barter, or transfer, carrying away, removing, &c., of the slave, it does not constitute an offence against the Slave Trade Acts. But difficult questions may arise as to whether a contract for the services of a slave amounts to a "transfer" within the meaning of the Statute. This depends on the particular circumstances of each case, and there are many contracts which might be entered into for the employment of slaves which, upon their face, might not appear to violate British law, and the carrying out of which, however, might involve the British subject in an infringement of the Statutes. I am unable, therefore, to lay down any general rule for your guidance.

As regards your inquiry, whether it is lawful for British subjects to let out for hire slaves of whom they may be legally possessed, there is, unfortunately, some uncertainty as to the question how far it may be lawful, since the passing of the Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 98, for British subjects to hold slaves in Brazil where slavery is permitted; but by section 5 of that Act, it is provided that "in all cases in which the holding or taking of slaves shall not be prohibited by this or any other Act of Parliament, it shall be lawful to sell or transfer such slaves, anything in this or any Act contained notwithstanding."

Anglo-Brazilian claims.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 10th September, stating that he transmitted to us papers* relating to the Anglo-Brazilian claims.

That Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, Mr. Ford, who formerly held the same position at Rio de Janeiro, and who was thoroughly conversant with the question, had lately been employed at the Foreign Office in an examination of the papers relating to that long-standing matter.

Proposed draft Agreement.

That annexed to the Memorandum (F) was a draft Agreement which it was proposed to negotiate with the Brazilian Government, by which each Government would undertake the payment, subject, as regarded this country, to the consent of Parliament, of the claims of its own subjects.

That we should perceive from the Treasury letter of the 5th May (H) that the Lords Commissioners had suggested that our opinion should be obtained on the question whether, assuming the assent of Parliament to have been obtained, a Convention, in the terms proposed, would irrevocably bind the Brazilian Government, and debar it from subsequently opening any question upon statements made in the course of obtaining that assent.

That our opinion was requested on that question, and also as to the sufficiency, or otherwise, of the draft Agreement proposed by Mr. Ford to carry out the object in view, which was annexed to his Memorandum of the 12th April.

That Mr. Currie was also to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, from which it would be seen that the Brazilian Government were, to all appearances, favourable to the settlement of that question by means of the payment by each Government of the claims of their own countrymen, for which Would debar Brazil from making further claims.

Approve draft with slight alterations.

That we think a Convention in the proposed terms, as altered by us in ink on the draft attached to Mr. Ford's Memorandum of the 12th April, 1883, would irrevocably bind the Brazilian Government, and debar it from subsequently opening any question upon statements made in the course of obtaining the assent of Parliament. And we think that the draft Agreement proposed by Mr. Ford will, with the slight alterations we have made, suffice to carry out the object in view.

ARTICLE I.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of His Imperial Majesty agree that the question of all claims on the part of Corporations, Companies, or private individuals, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, upon the Government of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, and all claims on the part of Corporations, Companies, or private individuals, subjects of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, upon the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, which may have been presented to either Government for its interposition with the other, since the date of the Declaration of Independence of the Brazilian Empire, and which yet remain unsettled, shall be mutually looked upon as entirely closed between the two Governments concerned, and that the claims advanced by either party are hereby considered as a set-off to those advanced by the other; and that each Government shall proceed to take such steps as they may deem necessary in order to satisfy the just claims of their own subjects respectively.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received January 1.)

Temple, January 1, 1883.

My Lord,

Detention of the "Diogenes" and "Socrates."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 20th December, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence as marked in the margin,* relative to two steam-ships named the "Diogenes" and "Socrates."

German embargo on and subsequent sale to Mr. Lambert, and release on security.

That it would be seen that those vessels, while in course of construction at Neumühlen near Kiel, were placed under embargo by the German Government in the month of July of last year, owing to a suspicion that they were intended for the use of the Peruvian Government.

That they were now said to have been sold to Mr. H. Lambert of 51, Lime Street, London, and the embargo had been raised on condition that Mr. Lambert should deposit the sum of 25,000*l.* sterling, and should engage that the ships should proceed at once to Southampton.

That provisional certificates were issued to the two vessels for the voyage to England by the British Vice-Consul at Kiel. That the vessels had now arrived at Southampton, and Mr. Lambert had applied to have them registered as British ships.

That Mr. Currie was to request that we would take the papers into our immediate consideration and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to whether, in view of the circumstances to which Lord Ampthill called attention in his Secret despatch of the 13th December, and to the statement made by the Collector of Customs at Southamptom as to the peculiar construction of those vessels, any steps should be taken to detain them, pending the production by Mr. Lambert of satisfactory evidence as to their ultimate destination.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Currie of the 22nd December, stating that with reference to his letter of the 20th instant relative to the vessels "Socrates" and "Diogenes," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury, forwarding a Report from the Board of Customs inclosing correspondence with Mr. Lambert, the alleged purchaser of the vessels.

Alleged intention to sell them to French Government.

That Mr. Lambert stated that he was in treaty with the French Government for the sale of the vessels to them, and that a telegram had been sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris instructing him to ascertain privately whether that statement was true.

That Mr. Currie was also to inclose a minute of a conversation which he had had that morning with the First Secretary of the Chilean Legation, who made a verbal request that the vessels might be detained, and stated that he would send in a note containing a formal request to that effect in the course of the afternoon.

Temporary detention ordered.

That the Board of Trade had given private orders for the temporary detention of the vessels on technical grounds under the powers vested in them by "The Merchant Shipping Act."

We were also honoured with a Memorandum from Mr. Currie, stating that with reference to his letter of the 22nd December, he had the honour to transmit a further letter from the Board of Trade† relative to the two vessels "Socrates" and "Diogenes."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Their use against Chile should be prevented.

That we think steps should be taken to prevent the vessels leaving English waters without security being obtained that they will not be used against Chilean forces or commerce.

Suspicious character of vessels.

It seems almost certain that the original construction at Kiel was on Peruvian behalf. This appears to be established by the submission to the detention on the suggestion of the Chilean Representative for eighteen months without protest, so far as is known.

The vessels are warlike in construction, and the only States likely to afford employment for warlike purposes at the present time are Peru or Chile. Some weight also must be given to the representations of the Chilean Minister.

Moreover the circumstances of the supposed purchase by Mr. Lambert and his alleged intended use of them afford ground for suspicion. It seems very improbable that Mr. Lambert should have purchased such vessels at his own risk and without some definite purchaser in view. The demand for vessels of that description must be so extremely limited that the speculation would be most hazardous. It is suggested that they are to be taken to a French port with a view to sale to the French Government. But it appears that no negotiations are now on foot with that Government.

Should issue warrant, but not seize them except to prevent their sailing.

We think, therefore, on the whole that the Secretary of State's warrant should be issued and placed in the hands of the Custom-house officers at Southampton; but the vessels need not absolutely be seized until there is danger of their putting to sea, which must of course be prevented.

And inform Mr. Lambert that they must not be used against a friendly State.

Mr. Lambert should be communicated with, and informed that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to prevent the vessels being employed against a friendly State.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received January 4.)

Detention of the "Socrates" and "Diogenes."

My Lord, Temple, January 3, 1883.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th December last with reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the detention of the steam-ship "Socrates," and stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying copy of a letter from the Collector of Customs at Southampton,* pointing out that the vessel's name should be spelt in the warrant "Sokrates," that form of spelling the name appearing upon the vessel's stern.

That your Lordship presumed that that slight difference in the spelling of the vessel's name was immaterial, but that your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we concurred in that view.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th ultimo, transmitting to us a translation of a further note from the Chilean Legation,† containing additional information as to the character of the vessels "Socrates" and "Diogenes."

That Sir Julian was to say that the warrants necessary to enable the local authorities to detain the vessels had been forwarded to the Collector of Customs at Southampton, with instructions, however, not to execute them except in case it should appear that the vessels were about to be dispatched, and your Lordship presumed that we were of opinion that the measures of precaution so taken should not for the present be relaxed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Misspelling of name of vessel in warrant immaterial.

That we concur in the view that the slight difference in the spelling of the vessel's name is immaterial. There is no possible question as to what vessel the warrant refers to.

Measures of precaution not to be relaxed.

That we are of opinion that the measures of precaution taken should not for the present be relaxed.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received April 12.)

Detention of the "Diogenes" and "Sokrates" under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 12, 1883.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 6th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 3rd January last, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that the vessels "Diogenes" and "Sokrates" had been detained under surveillance since that date on suspicion of a contemplated breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

That we would perceive from the inclosed correspondence* with the Treasury that some difficulty had arisen with regard to the mooring of those vessels being so arranged as to insure that that surveillance should be efficiently continued; and Mr. Lister was then directed by your Lordship to request our opinion as to whether it would be proper, under the circumstances of the case, to relax the measures of precaution which had been taken on condition that the owner of the vessels should agree to enter into a bond giving substantial security that they should not be used in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Conditions under which precautionary measures may be relaxed.

That if in the circumstances which now exist it is improbable that Peru would purchase the ships, or find the means of paying for them, we think that it would be proper to relax the measures of precaution which have been taken, on condition that the owner should enter into such a bond as is suggested. Whether this is so or not we are hardly in a position to judge. If Peru were in the market for such vessels it might very well be worth her while, in order to get possession of the ships, to pay a large additional sum to indemnify the present owner against any pecuniary liability incurred under the bond. In any view the amount of security required ought to be so fixed as to render it reasonably certain that the Foreign Enlistment Act will not be infringed.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received April 12.)

Detention of the "Sokrates" and "Diogenes."

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 12, 1883.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 6th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us correspondence, as marked in the margin of his letter, from which we would perceive that the Admiralty and Customs authorities at Southampton appeared to be unable to guarantee that the vessels "Sokrates" and "Diogenes" should be so guarded as absolutely to prevent their escape, if such were meditated, unless the warrants which were issued on the 23rd December last were executed.

That we would recollect that the warrants in question were addressed to the Collector of Customs at Southampton; but with orders not to execute them unless he had reason to suppose that the vessels were preparing to put to sea.

That under those circumstances your Lordship requested that we would favour you with our immediate opinion as to whether there was sufficient cause to justify the execution of the warrants and the detention of the vessels until it could be ascertained what steps could be taken to obtain sufficient security from the owners that they should not be used in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, or whether there was any other course which we would recommend to be followed under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

If unavoidable, warrants of seizure should be executed, until proper security is obtained.

That it would be desirable, if possible, to endeavour to avoid executing the warrants, and to obtain security from the owner that the vessels should not be used in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act. But if the circumstances are such that the escape of the vessels cannot now be prevented except by execution of the warrants, and the alternation is between their execution and leaving the vessels free to depart,

---

* Treasury, April 3; Treasury, April 4, to Treasury, April 4, 1883.

1883

we think the latter course would not be proper until security is obtained, and that the warrants ought to be executed.

Vessels should be released on sale to any unobjectionable purchaser.

Looking at what has passed with the agent of the owner, we do not think this seizure would make much practical difference so far as they are concerned. The vessels are, in effect, being detained at the present time, and if the sale to the Japanese Government, or any other unobjectionable purchaser, should take place, the vessels would, of course, be at once released.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, June 26, 1883.

Bond respecting vessel built for Chile, but now purchased by Japan.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers which related to a request made by Messrs. Armstrong for the cancellation of a bond given by them in 1881 in respect of a vessel then building for the Government of Chile, but now stated to have been purchased by the Government of Japan.

That we should find amongst the papers a copy of the bond, and that we should learn from the letter from the Treasury, dated the 21st January, the course which the Solicitor to the Treasury recommended should be pursued under the circumstances.

That the question was one of considerable importance with a view to the course to be followed in future in similar cases, and that our opinion was requested as to whether, under the circumstances, the bond should be cancelled, or whether the course recommended by the Treasury Solicitor should be pursued.

That our Report was desired at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

It should not be cancelled. Should follow course recommended by Treasury.

That we think that, under the circumstances, the bond should not be cancelled, but that the course recommended by the Treasury should be pursued.

We have, &c.

Chilean blockade of the Peruvian ports of Chala and Lomas.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers† which related to the blockade by the naval forces of Chile of the Peruvian ports of Chala and Lomas, and that he was to request our opinion as to whether instructions might properly be sent to the British Naval Commander-in-chief on the Pacific Station, directing him to inform the Chilean Commander-in-chief that Her Majesty's Government protest against any seizure of British vessels for breach of that blockade, so long as it shall not be effective within the meaning of the Article of the Declaration of Paris of the 16th April, 1856, respecting blockades, to which Chile had given her adhesion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve instructions to protest against seizure of British vessels whilst blockade is ineffective.

That we think the proposed instructions may properly be sent.

related to the detention of the vessels "Diogenes" and "Sokrates" on suspicion of a contemplated breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Inconvenience caused to the public service by the employment of Her Majesty's ships of war in maintaining an efficient surveillance over them.

That Mr. Currie was, in the first place, to state that, since the date of our Reports of the 12th April last, those vessels had been guarded by one of Her Majesty's ships of war; but that, as would be seen on reference to the letters from the Customs of the 13th, 16th, and 20th April, and to the Admiralty letter of the 21st April, there was some difficulty in maintaining an efficient surveillance over them. That it would be further seen, on reference to the Admiralty letter of the 20th July, that great inconvenience was caused to the public service by the employment of Her Majesty's ships of war for that purpose.

That Mr. Currie was also to state that, on the receipt of our second Report of the 12th April last, in which we advised that it would be desirable, if possible, to endeavour to avoid executing the warrants, and to obtain security from the owner that the vessels should not be used in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, your Lordship requested the Treasury to communicate with Mr. Lambert, the broker in whose hands the vessels were, as to the execution of a bond.

That on the 5th May the Treasury, in reply, forwarded a letter from their solicitor, in which he stated that, after conference with us, Mr. Lambert had been invited to execute a bond for 20,000*l*.

Refusal of Mr. Lambert to execute a bond.

That no definite reply to that proposal was returned by Mr. Lambert till the 31st July. That a copy of his letter of that date was forwarded to the Foreign Office in the Treasury letter of the 10th August. That he stated that he had fully respected, and intended to respect, the undertaking he gave not to remove the vessels without giving due notice to Her Majesty's Government; that his principals were not the Peruvians, and that he could not agree to give the bond asked for.

That, under those circumstances, it appeared to your Lordship that, while the execution of the warrants against those vessels should, if possible, be avoided, some definite action was required in order to relieve Her Majesty's ships of war from the duty of maintaining a surveillance over them.

But before taking any further steps in the matter your Lordship thought it advisable to communicate a copy of Mr. Lambert's lett'er to Señor Martinez, the Chilean Minister at this Court, and at the same time to inform him that, under existing circumstances, Her Majesty's Government had no reason to believe that the Peruvian Government were in treaty for those vessels, and that unless from any circumstances which had come to his knowledge since the date of his last communication he had cause to apprehend a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act by the owners of the "Diogenes" and "Sokrates," Her Majesty's Government proposed to discontinue the guard over the vessels which entailed considerable trouble and expense.

Peruvian Government still believed to be the real owners.

That Señor Martinez sent a reply to that communication on the 1st September, in which he stated that his Government still firmly believed that the Peruvian Government were the real owners of the vessels, and adduced various reasons in support of that belief, and on those grounds he requested that the guard over the vessels might still be maintained.

That Mr. Currie was to draw our attention to the remarks in the concluding paragraph of Señor Martinez' note relative to the question of the bond.

Repairs superintended by Peruvian officers.

That in a further note dated the 4th September, Señor Martinez stated that he had ascertained that two Peruvian naval officers were superintending the repairs then being carried out on the "Diogenes" and "Sokrates."

That Mr. Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted with his letter into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course that should now be taken with regard to those vessels, in view of the statements made by the Chilean Minister, and of Mr. Lambert's refusal to execute a bond.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Precautions against their departure should not be abandoned.

The present supervision should be continued, or the warrants executed.

Risks attending the execution of the warrants.

That, in view of the letters of M. Martinez of the 1st and 4th September, and of the refusal of Mr. Lambert to give the proposed bond, we think it clear that the Secretary of State could not properly abandon further precautions against the departure of these vessels from British waters. If he were to do so, and they should afterwards be used by Peruvian subjects against Chile, a most serious responsibility would be incurred by this country. The choice, therefore, seems to lie between continuing the present supervision and executing the warrants. If the latter course were adopted, there would be a risk of the Court holding that there was not reasonable and probable cause for the detention, in which case the owner would be entitled, under section 22 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, to be indemnified by the payment of costs and damages. On the other hand, the supervision at present exercised appears to cause considerable trouble and inconvenience. Which of these courses is likely to be the less onerous we are hardly in a position to advise, though we still think that the execution of the warrants should be avoided, unless there be very strong grounds indeed for departing from the procedure hitherto adopted.

Circumstances under which the warrants might safely be executed.

If, however, evidence could be obtained to show that the statement contained in M. Martinez' letter of the 4th instant, that the recent repairs of the vessels were superintended by Peruvian naval officers, is accurate, we think the warrants might safely be executed.

We have, &c.

Cessation of Chileo-Peruvian War.

That the further communications were inclosed from the Chilean Minister at this Court respecting the termination of hostilities between Chile and Peru.

That your Lordship would be glad to learn our opinion whether, in view of the circumstances set forth in those papers, we were of opinion that the active surveillance maintained over those vessels by Her Majesty's ship "Hector" might be relaxed without being quite abandoned, or might be discontinued until further notice from the Board of Customs.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No. 18.

[After recapitulation of the following Reference, they report as on p. 19:—]

Sir J. Pauncefote to the Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 1, 1883.

Mooring of hulks at Chinkiang.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of Earl Granville, the accompanying despatch No. 121 of the 8th November last, with nine inclosures, recently received from Mr. Grosvenor, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking.

Refusal of Chinese Government to allow in case of Mr. McBain without payment of fee.

In that despatch a question is raised whether the Chinese Government are justified in declining to allow a British subject, who has purchased a plot of ground abutting on the River Yang-tsze, in the vicinity of the British Concession at Chinkiang, to moor a hulk opposite to his land except on payment of an annual fee.

---

* To Treasury, October 4; ditto, October 11; to M. Martinez, November 3; to Treasury, November, 3; to Admiralty, November 3; M. Martinez, November 6, 1883.

1883

The facts of the case are stated in Mr. Grosvenor's despatch, and more fully in the letter addressed to Sir T. Wade by Mr. Bristow, the British Acting Consul at Chinkiang, which forms Inclosure 1.

It has been the practice of the Chinese authorities to allow foreign merchants at the Treaty ports to moor hulks and put out jetties for facilitating the landing of goods, provided that no obstruction to the navigation and no damage to the foreshore is likely to be caused thereby. Permission to moor a hulk is obtained from the Chinese Customs (the Imperial Maritime Customs), and an annual fee is paid to the Foreign Municipality, and is applied towards the municipal expenses of the Foreign Settlement.

Mr. Duff is the agent of Mr. McBain, the owner of a line of steamers, who was unable to obtain the privilege of mooring a hulk within the Settlement, there being no vacant berth.

Mr. Duff purchased, on behalf of Mr. McBain, a piece of land abutting on the river outside the Settlement, and asked for permission to moor a hulk opposite to his premises. This request was refused except on the condition of his paying an annual fee of 1,000 taels for the privilege.

Inclosure 2 in Mr. Grosvenor's despatch contains a further letter from Mr. Bristow to Sir T. Wade and a correspondence between the Acting Consul, Mr. Duff, and Shen Ta-jên, the Superintendent of Customs at Chinkiang, and a rough plan showing the position of the piece of land in question.

Inclosure 3 contains a further letter from the Acting Consul to Sir T. Wade, inclosing the reply of the Inspectorate of Customs, through the Chief Secretary Mr. McKean, to Mr. Duff's complaint. That reply sets out the grounds on which the action of the Chinese authorities is defended.

Inclosure 4 contains the opinion of Mr. Wilkinson, Her Majesty's Crown Advocate at Shanghae, on the question.

Inclosure 5 contains further correspondence on the same subject, and the Acting Consul in his letter to Mr. Grosvenor (No. 15 of the 30th September) lays stress on the fact that the Chinese authorities have provided no jetties, moorings, or landing places for the use of the public, so that the mooring of private hulks is a matter of necessity.

Inclosures 6 and 7 are not material, but Inclosures 8 and 9, which complete the series, contain the representation made by Mr. Grosvenor to the Prince of Kung, on the subject of Mr. Duff's complaint, and the Prince's reply, in which His Highness disposes of the case by stating that the request of Mr. Duff to moor a hulk in that part of the river, and a similar request by a British steam-ship Company, have been refused because their hulks if moored in that locality would be in the way of the public ferry and of the native shipping, and that the request being refused it was unnecessary to enter into the question of the annual fee.

You will observe that reference is made in the course of the correspondence to the case of the hulk "Cadiz," which occurred in 1877. I am to inclose a printed Memorandum on that case;* also a printed Statement, prepared on behalf of the Imperial Maritime Customs,† and a printed Case and Opinion of Counsel, furnished by the Chinese Minister;‡ and two Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown.§

I am also to inclose Hertslet's Treaties between Great Britain and China.

Of opinion that action of Chinese Government is correct;

You will perceive from the above documents that the question of the right of China to control the use of the river by the foreign shipping was fully considered in the case of the "Cadiz," and resolved in favour of the claim of the Chinese Government. As regards the present case, which seems to depend on the same principles which governed the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in the case of the hulk "Cadiz," Lord Granville apprehends that the position taken up by the Inspectorate of Customs in Mr. McKean's letter of the 16th June last (Inclosure No. 3), is strictly correct; that the Chinese Government, in exercise of the sovereign rights of China, can prohibit all persons from mooring a hulk in the river without the permission of the proper authorities; that the sovereign rights of China in this respect have not been restricted by Treaty in favour of foreigners; that foreigners are entitled to the same rights, and subject to the same obligations in this respect, as natives; that if it be in the power of the Chinese Government to grant or withhold such privilege, they have the right to demand a fee as the condition of its enjoyment; that the right of the Chinese Government to impose a fee for the privilege outside the British Settlement is not affected by the fact that no such fee is imposed by them within it; and finally, that assuming the right of imposing such fee to exist, it is immaterial whether it be imposed by the Chinese Customs or any other Department of the State, that being a matter of Departmental convenience which does not concern the foreigner.

At the same time, it appears to Lord Granville that, so long as the Chinese Government neglect to provide jetties, landing stages, and other conveniences sufficient for the necessities of the trade, it is unreasonable to tax the riparian proprietors for the use of appliances which they are compelled to furnish at their own cost, by reason of such neglect.

Within the foreign Settlement the land-owners pay no fee to the Chinese Government for the use of jetties and hulks, but they pay a fee to the foreign Municipality of the Settlement, and such fee goes to defray the expenses of roads, lighting, police, and other public conveniences established and organized by the foreign community at its own cost, and for its own use and comfort.

The Chinese Government now propose to impose a fee equal in amount to that levied by the Municipality in the Settlement for the mooring of hulks outside of the Settlement without providing any reciprocal advantages as in the case of the Municipality.

but that certain reciprocal advantages should be granted.

Lord Granville is disposed to think that the Chinese Government might reasonably be urged to issue some Regulations on the subject providing, among other things, that the riparian proprietors should not be exposed to have the hulk of some other person moored opposite to his land (this being one of the complaints preferred by Mr. Duff), but that the riparian proprietor should have the first claim to that privilege (if not injurious to the foreshore or obstructive to the navigation) on payment of a reasonable fee, applicable to the construction of works for the convenience of trade in the locality, and calculated with some reference to the expenditure incurred for that purpose.

I am to request that you will be good enough to inform Lord Granville whether you concur in the above views, and in case you should consider that the Chinese Government have no legal right to exact any fee from Mr. Duff as a condition of the privilege of mooring a hulk opposite to his piece of ground, his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to the nature of the instructions which should be given to Mr. Grosvenor on the subject of Mr. Duff's complaint.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Grosvenor.

Sir, Foreign Office, , 1883.

I HAVE carefully considered, in consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, your despatch No. 121 of the 8th November last, with its inclosures, in which the question is raised whether the Chinese Government are justified in declining to allow a British subject who has become the owner of a plot of ground abutting on the River Yang-tsze, in the vicinity of the British Concession at Chinkiang, to moor a hulk opposite to his land except on payment of an annual fee.

This question must be determined on the same principles as those which governed the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in the case of the hulk "Cadiz," referred to in the Report of the Crown Advocate at Shanghae, which forms part of Inclosure 4 in your despatch.

I am advised that the position taken up by the Inspectorate of Customs in Mr. McKean's letter to Mr. Duff of the 16th June last is strictly correct. The Chinese Government, in the exercise of the sovereign rights of China, can prohibit all persons from mooring a hulk in the river without the permission of the proper authorities. The sovereign rights of China in this respect have not been restricted by Treaty in favour of foreigners, and the latter, therefore, are entitled to the same rights and subject to the same obligations as natives.

If it be in the power of the Chinese Government to grant or withhold such privilege, they have the right to demand a fee as the condition of its enjoyment; and the right of the Chinese Government to impose a fee for the privilege outside the British Settlement is not affected by the fact that no such fee is imposed by them within it. Assuming, however, the right of imposing such fee to exist, it is immaterial whether it be imposed by the Chinese Customs or any other Department of the State, that being a matter of Departmental convenience which does not concern the foreigner.

At the same time, as the Chinese Government neglect to provide jetties, landing-stages, and other conveniences sufficient for the necessities of the trade, it is unreasonable to tax the riparian proprietors for the use of appliances which they are compelled to furnish at their own cost for the purposes of their business.

Within the foreign Settlement the land-owners pay no fee to the Chinese Government for the use of jetties and hulks, but they pay a fee to the foreign Municipality of the Settlement, and such fee goes to defray the expenses of roads, lighting, police, and other public conveniences established and organized by the foreign community at its own cost, and for its own use and comfort.

The Chinese Government now propose to impose a fee equal in amount to that levied by the Municipality in the Settlement for the mooring of hulks outside of the Settlement without providing any reciprocal advantages such as are afforded by the Municipality in return for such payment.

I am of opinion, therefore, that you may properly urge on the Chinese Government the expediency of issuing some Regulations which will place this matter on a more satisfactory footing, providing, among other things, that the riparian proprietor should not be exposed to have the hulk of some other person moored opposite to his land (this being one of the complaints preferred), but that the riparian proprietor should have the first claim to that privilege (if not injurious to the foreshore or obstructive to the navigation), and that the amount of the fee should be more reasonable, and should be calculated with some reference to the expenditure incurred by the Government in the construction of works in the vicinity necessary for the purposes of trade.

Right of the Danish Government to impose the oath of allegiance on British subjects trading in Danish Colonies.

My Lord, Temple, March 30, 1883.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 28th April, 1880, relative to the right of the Danish Government to impose the oath of allegiance on British subjects trading in Danish Colonies, he was to transmit despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen containing the views of the Danish Government in regard to that question.*

That the draft of a reply which it was proposed to address to Mr. Vivian was inclosed, and that our opinion was requested as to whether the reply was right and proper. That it was assumed in the draft that the "oath of allegiance" referred to in the first proviso of section 18 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," meant an oath of allegiance imparting foreign nationality.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve draft to Mr. Vivian in reply to the views of the Danish Government, but suggest a slight alteration in it.

That, in our opinion, the proposed reply is right and proper. But we would suggest that, in the sentence relating to Consular protection, the words, "as Danish subjects are entitled to claim," should be substituted for the words, "as is claimed by Danish subjects."

The point is so important a one that it is well to avoid an expression which might conceivably give rise to controversy hereafter.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Vivian.

(No. . Consular.)
Sir, Foreign Office, , 1883.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of this series, Nos. 2, 3, and 4, of the 8th and 12th February last respectively, containing the view taken by the Danish Government of the status of a foreigner who has taken the oath of allegiance to the King of Denmark in the Danish West Indies.

In reply, I have to request that you will state to the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs that Her Majesty's Government take note with satisfaction of the assurance contained in the Memorandum inclosed in your despatch No. 3, that the oath of allegiance does not impart Danish nationality, and that its language will be modified to render this point more clear.

Her Majesty's Government conclude from this assurance that British subjects who may take the oath in Danish Colonies will not be thereby debarred from enjoying the same measure of protection from their Consular Representatives as Danish subjects are entitled to claim at the hands of their Consular Representatives in British Colonies. If so, the inconveniences arising from the provisions of the the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 and the Naturalization Act of 1870 referred to in the previous correspondence will not arise, and the question may now be considered settled.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received January 1.)

My Lord,

Temple, January 1, 1883.

Abolition of the Dual Control.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us papers* with reference to the proposal of the Egyptian Government for the abolition of the Control established under the Khedivial Decrees of 18th November, 1876, the 4th September and the 15th November, 1879.

That we were referred in the first place to the Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet (paper A), in which we should find an account of the events and of the negotiations which led to the first establishment of the Control in 1876, and to its revival in a modified form in 1879. That in the Appendix to that paper we find the Decrees of 1876 and 1879 printed in extenso. That Part III of the Decree of 1876 was that which related to the Control.

That papers (B) contained the correspondence which had recently passed between the British and French Governments respecting the proposed abandonment of that institution, and the substitution of another system of financial administration in Egypt. That the views of Her Majesty's Government had not been favourably entertained by the French Government, who contended that they were entitled to insist on the maintenance of the Control, as being an institution founded on an International Agreement between Egypt, England, and France, and terminable only by consent of the three Powers.

That paper (C) was a Memorandum in which the position taken up by the French Government in regard to the permanency of the Control was discussed, and the following questions were raised:—

1. Is the arrangement respecting the Control an International Agreement binding on the Khedive, or a voluntary arrangement revocable by him at his discretion?

2. If binding on the Khedive, is it also binding on England and France, or may they or either of them withdraw from it?

3. If either England or France can withdraw from it, is it competent to the Khedive, on such withdrawal, to treat the Agreement as no longer obligatory on him?

That the correspondence marked (D) contained the communications which passed between the British and French Governments on the subject of the re-establishment of the Control under the Khedivial Decrees of 4th September and 15th November, 1879.

That regarding the first of the three questions, we were referred to the documents set out in the margin.†

That those documents (especially No. 1154) showed that in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the revival of the Control in 1879 was "a diplomatic engagement, from which the Khedive could not possibly recede." And that Lord Salisbury laid great stress, in his communications with the French Government, on the importance of resting the title of the two Governments to the Control as based on the Decree of 1876, and of maintaining the continuity of that title (Vol. I, No. 959, p. 579).

That as regarded the second question, it would be observed that the action of the British and French Governments, as disclosed in the above correspondence, was separate, though tending to the same object, and that there appeared no trace of any compact between them which could fetter their independent action in the future, though there was an understanding to maintain the same attitude towards the Khedive and to pursue a similar policy and course of action for the protection of their respective interests.

That as regarded the third question, Sir J. Pauncefote was to point out that the Decree of 1876 provided by Article 14 for the case of the British Government refusing to appoint a Controller (A, p. 6). But that that Decree was not the result of any International Agreement, and therefore contemplated the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to appoint a Controller, an eventuality which actually occurred; whereas the Agreement under which the Control was revived in 1879 was based on the necessity, in certain events, of a British and French Controller being appointed by their respective Governments.

That the appointment of a British and French Controller was therefore an implied condition of the Agreement for the revival of the Control.

That our attention was invited on the three questions raised in the letter to the observations thereon contained in Memorandum (C), and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion on those three questions at our earliest convenience, and any observations which we might have to offer generally on the legal aspect of the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the first question submitted to us is one of some difficulty.

It is clear that the establishment of the Control, in November 1876, was a purely voluntary act on the part of the Khedive, and was not the result of any international compact either with England or France.

This state of things continued unchanged, as far as we can see, down to the appointment of Sir Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières as Ministers, and the consequent suspension of the Control.

On the day following the Decree of the 10th December, 1878, determining the attributes of the Ministers, Nubar Pasha addressed a letter to the Ministers stating that the Control would become re-established ipso facto in case the arrangement whereby an Englishman and Frenchman were appointed Ministers was modified.

The British and French Governments appear to have considered (though on what ground does not clearly appear) that the Khedive had come under an engagement to them that in the event specified the Control should be revived, and they required an official communication conveying the assurance that this should be done.

Accordingly, the Egyptian Minister, on the 31st March, 1879, conveyed this assurance, prefacing it by the declaration that it was "conformément aux arrangements intervenus l'année dernière entre la France et l'Angleterre d'une part, et le Gouvernement du Khédive d'autre part."

On the 31st August, 1879, Lord Salisbury expressed the opinion that the note of the 31st March constituted a diplomatic engagement, from which the Khedive could not possibly recede.

We think it may therefore be taken that there was an Agreement to this extent, "that the Control should revive ipso facto in case the European Ministers were dismissed." But it is not clear that it amounted to more than this. It is one thing to say that the pre-existing institution was to revive, subject to all its pre-existing qualities; it is quite another to assert that what passed amounted to an engagement that the Control should not only revive, but that it should for the first time become perpetual and unchangeable, except with the consent of England and France. It seems a strong thing to evoke an international engagement of so momentous a character from such slight materials.

Next came the Decree of the 4th September, 1879, re-establishing the Control, which purported, it must be observed, to be a mere carrying out of the Decree of 1876.

It is to be noted, too, that Lord Salisbury, in his correspondence with the French Government, dwelt on the importance of basing the renewed existence of the Controllers on the Decree of 1876, and the promise with regard to the revival of the Control made in 1878. And in his letter to the Italian Ambassador of the 8th November, 1879, he bases the position of England and France and their rights in relation to the Control on the Decree of 1876.

The only other document requiring consideration is the Decree of the 15th November, 1879.

That purports to be a Decree pursuant to an undertaking with England and France for defining the attributes of the Controllers-General, and it contains a provision that they should not be dismissed without the consent of their respective Governments. It may be doubted whether this amounts to more than an Agreement that so long as the Control existed the Controllers should not be changed without the required consent, and whether it can be construed as an undertaking that the Decree of November 1876 should be perpetual.

If consistent with their past policy, Her Majesty's Government can contend that Khedive has right to revoke arrangement as to Control.

Upon the whole, then, it seems to us to be open to doubt whether the Khedive has by international obligation renounced the right to modify the system voluntarily created by the Decree of 1876. And if it should be deemed expedient and consistent with the past action of Her Majesty's Government (on which we are not in a position to form an opinion) to contend that the Khedive has not renounced this right, we think that view well open to argument.

Great Britain and France may withdraw from arrangement.

2. We entertain no doubt that either England or France is entitled to withdraw from the arrangement relating to the Control. Whatever undertaking the Khedive gave to them, they certainly gave none to him. The arrangement was procured at their instance and for their benefit, and may be renounced by them at any time so far as the Khedive is concerned. And we cannot see a trace of any engagement between England and France that each should perpetually adhere to the arrangement, or that it should be relinquished only with their joint concurrence.

If England or France withdraw, arrangement no longer binding on Khedive.

3. The third question put involves somewhat more difficulty. But we think that if either England or France withdraw, it is competent for the Khedive to treat the Agreement (assuming one to exist) as no longer obligatory.

The Agreement, if it exists, was made in 1878-79, and it was, we think, of the essence of the arrangement then come to, that there should be a Joint Anglo-French Control by means of Controllers whose appointment had the sanction and support of their respective Governments.

We do not think the Khedive ever agreed with either Power that it should have a sole control, or that the Control, as constituted, should continue, supposing the other Power did not desire its continuance.

Recent events have destroyed the Control.

4. As regards the aspect of the case generally, we think the position is materially affected by the events which have recently occurred. The Control was de facto at an end.

Under these circumstances, France was invited by this country to join her in restoring order in Egypt. This she refused to do. If we had taken no further steps the Control was dead, and the engagement of the Khedive practically abrogated. France, by her action, was content to acquiesce in this new state of things. England, however, intervened, restored her influence, and rendered government by the Khedive again possible. But it is even now only possible by reason of the continued presence of British forces in Egypt. In order to establish a stable Government there which can maintain itself without foreign support, the entire system in Egypt requires reorganization.

Under these circumstances, it cannot, we think, justly be contended that former arrangements, applicable to a different state of things, are still obligatory and must necessarily be restored, even though experience has shown, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, that in the condition of things which now exists, or which is to be established, they would be inexpedient, if not actually dangerous.

Separate Report of Dr. Deane.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That by the Decree of the 18th November, 1876, Tit. 3, the Khedive appointed, without reference to either France or England, the two Controllers-General.

Articles 13 and 14 of this Decree provide that one Controller-General shall be French, the other English; that the choice and nomination of both Controllers shall belong to the Khedive, who, however, in order to secure responsible persons as Controllers, will officially* communicate with the French and English Governments, and appoint none but persons whose appointment should be authorized and acquiesced in by their respective Governments.

But if no such authorization or acquiescence should be given by one or the other of the French and English Governments, the Khedive will himself choose from the higher functionaries (whether in actual employment or not) of the two countries a person to act as a Controller-General, and by Article 15 the appointment of Controller was to be for five years.

This Decree is in no sense an International Agreement, binding on the Khedive as between himself and the Governments of France and England. The English Government did not nominate a Controller. And the Khedive would,* at any time, revoke the Decree, subject probably to compensating the discharged Controllers.

The duties of the Controllers were financial; hence, when in 1878 an European Finance Minister was appointed, the Control was suspended.

Mr. Rivers Wilson was nominated by the Khedive Finance Minister and M. de Blignières Minister for Public Works.

The action of the French and English Governments at this time has a material bearing upon the questions submitted to us by your Lordship.

Nubar Pasha, on the 11th November, 1878, speaking of the Control, writes to the Commissioners saying that the Control will be ipso facto re-established in the event of the Ministerial organization instituted by the Khedive by his Decree of the 29th August, 1878, happening to be modified under the heads of Finance or Public Works.

Upon this the British and French Agents, by the direction of their respective Governments, addressed an identic note to the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who, on the 31st March, 1879, replied that in conformity with the arrangements made in 1878 between France and England on the one part and the Government of the Khedive on the other part the Control should be restored, as established by the Decree of November 18, 1876, in the event of the Ministerial organization being modified in the direction of Finance or Public Works.

This letter, in my opinion, bound the Khedive, on the change in the Ministry, to revive and maintain the Controllers-General, and he was no longer at liberty, as before, to revoke the Decree of November 1876.

And when, in 1879, Mr. Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières were superseded, the Decree of November 1876 came into operation, though with some alterations, and, by force of Nubar Pasha's letter, bound the Khedive.

Some further communications then passed between the several Governments, and on the 4th September, 1879, a new Decree was issued by the Khedive re-establishing the Control under the conditions stipulated in the Decree of November 1876, and naming Mr. Baring and M. de Blignières, the latter under protest against his appointment by the French Government, Controllers.

And ultimately the Decree of the 17th November, 1879, was issued.

The material parts of this Decree are :—

1. The consideration that it is made on an understanding between the Khedive and the Governments of France and England with reference to the duties assigned to the Controllers.

2. Article 3 recites the consent of the French and English Governments to the non-interference of the Controllers in the Financial and Administrative services, and their being limited to making observations to the Khedive or his Ministers.

3. The provision, in Article 6, that the Controller shall not be displaced without the consent of their respective Governments.

There is also the difference between the Decree of November 1876 and that of November 1879, that in the former the duties of each Controller are distinctively assigned to him; in the latter, the Controllers are left to arrange their duties as they may agree between themselves.

Arrangement as to Control binding on Khedive;

1. I am therefore of opinion that the arrangement respecting the Control made in November 1879 is an International Agreement binding on the Khedive, and not a mere voluntary arrangement revocable by him at his discretion.

but not on England or France.

2. There is nothing either in the terms of the Decree of November 1879 nor in the reason of the thing which, in my opinion, makes the Decree binding on France or England, and either Government may withdraw from the arrangement.

Still binding on Khedive if either England or France withdraw from it.

3. I have some doubt on the answer which should be given to question 3, considering the Khedive bound by his Decree to France and England: is he bound to both of them, so that if France or England withdraw from the arrangement, the Khedive is no longer bound to the other Power; or has the Khedive entered into the arrangement with each Power separately in fact, though by the terms of the Decree itself jointly with both?

I find it very difficult to say that if France or England should, for reasons applicable to, and arising from, their own interests, give up their own part of the arrangement made with the Khedive, he will, by such surrender on the part of the one Government, be relieved from his obligation to the other Government. And, after the best consideration which I can give to the question, I consider that if either France or England withdraw from the arrangement, it is not competent to the Khedive to treat the Agreement as no longer obligatory upon him as respects the other Power which has not withdrawn.

Were this not so, it would be in the power of either Government, by merely withdrawing from the arrangement, to annul and defeat all the advantages which the other Goverment might expect and have the right to obtain under the arrangement.

My Lord,

Rebellion in Egypt.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that in the last paragraph of our Report of the 2nd August last on British claims of indemnity arising out of the rebellion in Egypt, we advised that Her Majesty's Government could not properly put forward a claim for compensation to those who had sustained damage owing to their voluntary abandonment of Egypt, though such abandonment was caused by the fear not unnaturally engendered by the occurrences of the 11th June.

Expenses incurred for the transport of destitute refugees, and for their maintenance at Malta.

That the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury* had suggested that Her Majesty's Government should claim from the Government of Egypt the expenses incurred for the transport of destitute refugees from Egypt, and for their maintenance at Malta after the events of the 11th June.

That our opinion was now requested as to whether, under the circumstances and consistently with the principles of international law, Her Majesty's Government could claim, as of right, the repayment by the Egyptian Government of the expenses so incurred.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour report—

Her Majesty's Government cannot claim, as of right, the repayment by the Egyptian Government of such expenses.

That, under the circumstances, and consistently with the principles of international law, we do not think Her Majesty's Government can claim, as of right, the repayment by the Egyptian Government of the expenses in question.

Approve proposed draft to Lord Lyons, but suggest certain alterations.

That we concur in the terms of the proposed draft, subject to the following observations, which we venture to submit for consideration:

At the beginning of the last paragraph, on p. 3 of the draft, the following sentence occurs: "Something further must be said as to the nature of the institution that was created by the Decree of 1879."

It is perhaps scarcely accurate to speak of the institution as "created" by the Decree of 1879, and bearing in view the argument of the earlier part of the despatch, advantage might be taken of the expression. It might, perhaps, be well to substitute the words, "Something further must be said as to the nature of the institution that existed under the Decree of 1879," or some other like expression.

Towards the close of the despatch the paragraph beginning "The intentions, &c.," contains the statement that the Control had the effect of placing Egypt "in a state of dependence upon foreign Powers. It occurs to us that this language might be construed in a sense not altogether consistent with the leading argument of the despatch. And we would suggest for consideration whether that paragraph and the one which immediately follows it might not with advantage be omitted without diminishing the force of the arguments used.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to Viscount Lyons.

(No. .)

Foreign Office, January , 1883.

My Lord,

Abandonment of the French Financial Control.

THE French Ambassador communicated to me on the 5th instant M. Duclerc's reply to my despatch No. 1514 of the 30th December, 1882, on the subject of the abandonment of the Anglo-French Financial Control in Egypt. It is unnecessary for me to forward to your Excellency a copy of this document, as M. Duclerc has been so good as to supply you with one.

Right of England and Egypt to withdraw from or modify the arrangement without the consent of France.

In view of the desire which both Governments have expressed to avoid anything in the nature of unnecessary controversy, I abstain from touching upon several of the points mentioned in the despatch which might otherwise call for reply. I only think it necessary to refer to that portion of it in which M. Duclerc questions the right of England and of Egypt to withdraw from, or to modify the arrangement, without the consent of France. In regard to this question, it will be convenient to state the view which Her Majesty's Government take of the nature of the obligations contracted by the Khedive towards England and France upon this matter, and of the manner in which those obligations have been affected by recent occurrences.

Decree of November 1876.

It is clear, in the first place, that the establishment of the English and French Controllers-General by the Decree of November 1876 was a purely voluntary act on the part of the Khedive, and was not the result of any international compact either with England or with France. The Decree was issued with the view of restoring the Khedive's credit in financial circles, and of introducing order into his finances. Its result and natural corollary, as regards the English and French Governments, was an application from His Highness that they would consent to nominate two persons for the appointments. This request was at the time refused by the English Government, and the English Controller-General was nominated by the Khedive independently, according to the alternative method provided in the Decree.

Control suspended.

This state of things continued until December 1878, when Sir Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières having been appointed to seats in the Egyptian Ministry, the Control was suspended.

An assurance given on this occasion in a letter addressed by Nubar Pasha to the Commission which had been appointed to inquire into the finances of Egypt, was subsequently repeated in an official note to the English and French Agents on the 31st March, 1879.

Decrees of November 18, 1876, and August 28, 1878.

This note stated: "Que conformément aux arrangements intervenus l'année dernière entre la France et l'Angleterre d'une part, et le Gouvernement du Khédive d'autre part, le Contrôle des Finances Égyptiennes actuellement suspendu, rentrerait ipso facto en vigueur, tel qu'il a été établi par le Décret du 18 Novembre, 1876, dans le cas où l'organisation Ministérielle instituée par le Décret du 28 Août, 1878, viendrait à être modifié dans la direction des Finances ou des Travaux Publics."

This no doubt constituted an engagement on the part of the Khedive to the extent that the Control should revive ipso facto in case the European Ministers were dismissed. But it is one thing to say that a pre-existing institution shall revive subject to all its pre-existing qualities; it would be quite another to assert that what passed amounted to an engagement that the Control should not only revive, but that it should, for the first time, become perpetual and unchangeable, except with the consent of England and France. It would be a strong measure to evoke an international engagement of so momentous a character from such slight materials.

Dismissal of Sir Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières.

Upon the dismissal of Sir Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières from the Egyptian Ministry in April 1879, the late Khedive applied to the former English and French Controllers-General to resume their functions, but these latter declined to do so, and the Control remained suspended until the abdication of Ismaïl Pasha on the 26th June.

Appointment of Controllers-General with limited powers.

The present Khedive on his accession decided to have a purely native Ministry. The President of the Council, Chérif Pasha, informed the English and French Agents that if the Governments of England and France would nominate Controllers-General under the Decree of November 1876 the Khedive would also agree to appoint them, but that their powers would be limited to investigation and verification, and that they would not exercise any administrative or executive functions.

The English and French Governments agreed to nominate Controllers-General on these terms, but stipulated that, in place of the administrative authority which was to be withdrawn from them, a great extension should be given to their functions of inspection and supervision; and, further, an undertaking was required that neither Controller should be removed without the consent of his respective Government.

Decree of November 15, 1879.

The result of these discussions was the Decree of the 15th November, 1879.

Her Majesty's Government are unable to see in what passed during the negotiation, or in the terms of the Decree itself, anything which can be considered as amounting to an engagement on the part of the Khedive that the Control should be maintained in perpetuity; while, on the other hand, they consider that an obligation to continue, under all circumstances, to submit the whole administrative system of a country to the inspection of two officials of foreign nationality, selected by two foreign Governments and removable only with their consent, is one that could be asserted only on the evidence of diplomatic engagements of the most explicit and formal character.

Something further must be said as to the nature of the institution that existed under the Decree of 1879. It was of the essence of the arrangement then come to that there should be a joint Anglo-French Control, by means of Controllers whose appointment had the sanction and support of their respective Governments. The joint action of the two Controllers has, in practice, always been considered necessary to give validity to their proceedings. There was no agreement on the part of the Khedive with either Power that it should have a sole Control, or that the Control as constituted should continue, supposing that either of the two Powers did not desire its continuance.

The Control virtually abrogated by the insurrection.

Finally, the aspect of the case must be regarded as having been materially affected by recent events. The result of the military insurrection was virtually to abrogate the Control. It has only been by military intervention, in which France declined to take part, that the Khedive's power has been re-established; and it is by the presence of British troops in Egypt that His Highness' authority is maintained pending the reorganization of a stable Government.

Under these circumstances, it cannot justly be contended that former arrangements applicable to a different state of things are still obligatory and must necessarily be restored, even though experience has shown, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, that in the condition of things which now exists or which is to be established they would be inexpedient, if not actually dangerous.

We earnestly desire that French interests should be scrupulously secured by the Egyptian Government. We believe that our objects are the same, namely, the peace and prosperity of Egypt, and we see no reason why both countries should not cordially join their efforts and exert their influence to that end.

Your Excellency is authorized to read this despatch to M. Duclerc, and to give him a copy of it.

I am, &c.

Draft approved by the Lord Chancellor.

I ENTIRELY approve of this draft despatch, which (as modified in accordance with the suggestions of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General) appears to me to put the argument for the view taken by Her Majesty's Government in the most forcible manner.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received February 10.)

My Lord,

Temple, February 8, 1883.

Antonio Eynand Petition for remission of sentence for complicity in murder.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Petition* from an inmate of the Corradino Prison, Malta, named Antonio Eynand, asking for the remission of the sentence of twenty years' imprisonment, with hard labour, that he was undergoing on account of his complicity in a murder committed by Paolo Lans, also an inmate of the above-mentioned prison.

That Eynand, whose case, in conjunction with Lans, was before our predecessors in 1876, and whose appeals had since been the subject of reference to Her Majesty's Consul at Alexandria, based his renewed application upon the fact that Lans, his accomplice in the crime, had recently obtained a remission of ten years' imprisonment on condition of his discharging the office of public executioner at Malta.

His good conduct in prison.

That the most substantial ground, however, for the exercise of clemency in his case would seem to be that it appeared from the various reports on the case that he became an accessory before the fact owing to the influence gained over him, and the terror inspired by the principal criminal Paolo Lans, a notorious and dreaded ruffian.

That he belonged to a highly respectable family, and that his conduct in prison had been exceptionally good. That in those circumstances Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request us to be so good as to take the matter under our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what reply should be returned to Eynand's present application.

That the more recent correspondence† with the Colonial Office and Her Majesty's Consul was inclosed for convenience of reference, as well as the correspondence with the Law Officers of the Crown in 1876, and from that correspondence Sir Julian was to refer us in particular to the Report from Consul-General Francis (No. 58, Judicial, of the 13th June, 1876), containing the notes of the trial, and Mr. Cookson's despatches No. 10 of the 15th March, 1880, and of the 12th August, 1882.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was further to direct our attention to the Law Officers' Report of the 5th July, 1876.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Sentence ought to be remitted after completion of seven years imprisonment.

That, looking at all the circumstances, we think that this is a case in which the Royal clemency might fitly be exercised. Assuming, as we think we ought after the finding of the jury, that the petitioner took no actual part in the murder, and inasmuch as there appears ground for believing that he became an accessory owing to the terror imposed by the principal criminal, we are of opinion that the ends of justice will be satisfied by his enduring a punishment considerably less severe than that imposed upon him.

Taking into consideration all the facts, including the petitioner's exceptional

My Lord,

Claims on account of losses caused by British military authorities in Egypt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd instant, submitting to us, by your Lordship's direction, the accompanying letter from the War Office,[*] explaining the manner in which the Secretary of State for War proposed to deal with the various classes of claims for compensation made by the owners of property in Egypt for losses sustained by them through the action of the British military authorities in that country; and stating that he was also to inclose a Memorandum on the subject,[†] by Lieutenant-Colonel Ardagh, showing what had been done in such cases in recent wars, and a copy of the Egyptian Decree[‡] constituting a Mixed Commission to award indemnities to the sufferers from the outbreak in Egypt.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take those proposals into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion regarding them at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve views of Secretary for War as to.

That we concur generally in the view taken by the Secretary of State for War respecting the manner in which the various claims for compensation should be dealt with.

Suggestions as to assessment of indemnities.

But we submit, for consideration, the following observations in relation thereto:—

Where the premises taken possession of were vacant owing to the flight of the owners, it seems reasonable enough that the compensation should date only from the period when the owner returned, and was desirous of resuming possession. Down to that time he sustained no loss by the occupation of his premises. He was in no worse, and was perhaps in a better, position than his neighbours whose premises were not taken possession of by the British troops. It would appear, however, from Colonel Ardagh's Report (p. 9), that some of the business premises were first taken at a time when they are, under ordinary circumstances, left empty by the owners, and that the occupation continued during the season when their use is specially important for business purposes. In these cases, particularly, it would not be fair to pay for the time of occupation by the British, subsequent to the return of the owners, only at the rate per month which the premises let at taking one month with another all the year round. The owner would reasonably demand that having been taken from him during the valuable months he should receive much more than a mere proportion of the year's rent, corresponding to the time of occupation by the troops.

It is suggested by Colonel Ardagh that if the entire time of occupation were allowed for, and the proportion of the annual rent due to that time were paid, it would be generally accepted as a fair compromise.

If there are many cases of this description it might be advantageous, on the whole, to adopt this course, as inquiries which would sometimes be of great nicety would be avoided, and the total result might not be very different from that which would be arrived at if the alternative course were pursued.

This, however, is a financial question which we are not in ourselves in a position to deal with. But we suggest it for consideration, as we think the class of cases to which we have alluded will require to be dealt with in an exceptional way, for the reasons we have pointed out, if the general course of procedure proposed by the Secretary of State for War be carried out.

My Lord,

E. Zammit. Petition for remission of sentence for attempt to murder F. Sacco.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a Petition from E. Zammit, who had been sentenced by the Consular Court at Alexandria, in 1878, to ten years' imprisonment on conviction of attempting to murder Francesco Sacco, praying for a remission of a portion of his sentence. That Sir Julian Pauncefote also inclosed a despatch from Mr. Cookson, the Judge of the Consular Court, inclosing copy of his notes of evidence in the case.[*]

That Mr. Cookson pointed out that the attempt to assassinate was very deliberate and unprovoked, and stated that he was not able to recommend Zammit as a fit object for the exercise of Her Majesty's clemency.

That our opinion was requested as to the answer which should be returned to the prayer of the petitioner.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have some difficulty in forming an opinion upon the proper course to be pursued in this case.

The crime committed by the prisoner was of an aggravated character, and no doubt is of a nature which requires to be checked as much as possible by exemplary punishment.

Owing to character and conduct of prisoner, his sentence may be reduced by two and a-half years.

The prisoner, however, before the commission of the crime appears to have been of good character, and during his imprisonment his conduct is reported as having been "very good." We are unaware whether any mitigation of the sentence (similar to that allowed in this country) is earned by this good conduct, but we think some effect ought to be produced by it, and in the absence of any regulation on the subject, we would suggest that a period of two years and six months should be deducted from the sentence, which will cause the prisoner to be released on the 19th January, 1886.

My Lord,

Claim of Suez Canal Company to sole right of constructing canals from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 15th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers[†] with reference to a claim put forward by the Suez Canal Company to the exclusive right of constructing a maritime canal through Egypt, between the Mediterranean and Red Seas.

That Mr. Currie was to refer us, in the first place, to the preamble to the Concession of the 30th November, 1854, by which the Viceroy of Egypt granted to M. de Lesseps exclusive power to form and direct an Universal Company to pierce the Isthmus of Suez, and to work a canal between the two seas, from which it would appear that the power thereby granted did not extend beyond the isthmus.

That that view seemed to have been held at the time by M. de Lesseps, who, in his Report to the Viceroy of the 30th April, 1855,[‡] recognized the desire of His Highness to limit the area through which the canal was to pass, and stated that, after reviewing all the schemes put forward during the preceding fifty years, full liberty had been given to make a communication between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, but cutting the Isthmus of Suez at a point to the east of the Nile; but that His Highness had declared that he would not authorize the Company to take a line which would start from a point on the Mediterranean to the west of the Damietta branch and cross the river.

That the second Concession of the 5th January, 1856, alluded in the preamble (p. 4, Parliamentary Paper) to the first Concession granted above as giving to M. de Lesseps exclusive power to pierce the Isthmus of Suez, and described the duty of the Company to be the construction of a maritime canal between Suez on the Red Sea and the Gulf of Pelusium in the Mediterranean, which description was repeated in the second Article of the Statutes of the Company (p. 8, Parliamentary Paper).

That again, at the commencement of the Convention between the Company and the Egyptian Government (p. 19, Parliamentary Paper) relative to the construction of a fresh-water canal, reference was made to the two Concessions of 1854 and 1856 for the construction of a maritime canal across the Isthmus of Suez.

That our attention was invited to Article 56 of the Statutes (p. 13, Parliamentary Paper), which laid down that the approval of the general assembly of the shareholders was necessary in questions of fresh concessions or of combining with other schemes, from which it might be inferred that other concessions were considered possible, and that the concessionnaires only took the necessary precautions to prevent any interference with the concessions obtained by them so far as the Suez Canal was concerned.

That the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt in 1872 showed that the Khedive then entertained the project of constructing a fresh-water maritime canal from Alexandria to Suez through the agency of a British Company, and that although M. de Lesseps had made representations on the subject, claiming for his own canal the exclusive right of ship communication between the two seas, His Highness refused to admit that pretension, as he maintained that no such construction could be attached to the Concession, and that there could be no doubt of his own right to make canals through Egyptian territory.

That we were referred, on the other hand, to a despatch from the British Directors of the Suez Canal Company, who were consulted with reference to a scheme for cutting a second canal between the Mediterranean and the Gulf of Suez, in which they stated their opinion that the Concessions to M. de Lesseps gave him the exclusive power of working a canal or canals between the two seas.

Question as to extent of Company's monopoly, and right of Khedive to construct canal east of Damietta.

That our opinion was requested as to whether the Company's monopoly extended to any canal uniting the two seas, or only to any canal uniting the two seas across the Isthmus of Suez; and if, in our opinion, such exclusive right only applied to the Isthmus of Suez and the Gulf of Pelusium, whether the Khedive had a right to make a second canal, starting from the east of the Damietta branch of the Nile, or only from the west of that branch.

We are also honoured with a further letter, marked Confidential, from Mr. Currie of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to his other letter of that day's date on the above subject, he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, an opinion on that subject by M. Émile Ollivier, the legal representative of the Egyptian Government on the Council of the Suez Canal Company.

That M. Ollivier's letter* to the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, containing the opinion in question, had been confidentially communicated to your Lordship.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The monopoly applies only to Isthmus of Suez.

That, in our opinion, the Company's monopoly does not extend to any canal uniting the two seas, but only to any canal piercing the Isthmus of Suez.

Topographical information not sufficient for forming opinion as to Khedive's right.

Whether the Khedive has a right to make a second canal, starting from a point to the east of the Damietta branch of the Nile, depends, we think, upon whether such a canal would be properly described as piercing "the Isthmus of Suez," and whether its Mediterranean mouth would be within the "Gulf of Pelusium."

We have not in our possession topographical information enabling us to express an opinion on this point.

My Lord, Temple, May 29, 1883.

Egyptian duties on import of tobacco. Proposed changes as to.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which related to certain proposals made in 1881 by the late British and French Controllers-General in Egypt for the admission of tobacco from all countries on payment of a very low and, if possible, uniform rate of duty.

That it was estimated that those proposals, if carried out, would result in a large increase of the revenue of Egypt, and that that question, which was suspended for a time owing to the military rebellion, was now once more under consideration.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was, in the first place, to invite our attention to the "Projet de Note" (A) prepared by the Controllers, which dealt with the various points arising in the case under the following headings:—

1. The existing régime, under which the importation of tobacco into Egypt was regulated, and the system of "raftiehs."
2. The right of the Khedive to regulate the import, export, sale, and consumption of tobacco for the benefit of the Egyptian Exchequer without being bound to carry out the Turkish Regulations respecting tobacco duties.
3. The right of the Khedive to conclude Commercial Treaties directly with foreign Powers.

That the Memorandum of the Controllers stated that before the date of the Commercial Treaties concluded in 1861 by the Porte with foreign Powers the importation of foreign tobacco into the Ottoman dominions was not prohibited. That the Turkish Government, however, determined to impose a heavy excise duty on tobacco, and in order the better to protect that revenue arranged by those Treaties that tobacco should be excepted from the articles which might be imported into the Turkish Empire, including Egypt, which thus became dependent for its supply on Egyptian- or Ottoman-grown tobacco.

That it appeared that the Ottoman excise duty in question was protected by a regulation to the effect that no tobacco might be moved from one part of the Empire to another unless accompanied by a "raftieh," or receipt for the duty, and the Egyptian Administration had hitherto refused to permit tobacco to be brought into the country unless accompanied by the "raftieh." That on entering Egypt a further duty was levied for the exclusive benefit of the Khedive's Treasury.

That those two duties constituted a duty so heavy as to encourage smuggling, which was also favoured by the Egyptian coasts being of such a nature as to be difficult to guard.

That the Memorandum proceeded to urge the cessation of any furthur expenditure on the preventive service.

That it pointed out that the large sums already spent by Egypt in the preventive service were spent in a great measure for the advantage of the Ottoman Treasury by preventing the admission into Egypt of tobacco which had not paid the Turkish excise duty and so obtained the "raftieh." That it suggested that Egypt, being now administratively independent, and having her own financial organization separate from that of Turkey, was under no obligation to assist Turkey in collecting those dues, and that the Egyptian Government having, in their opinion, the right to regulate the importation of tobacco into Egypt in such manner as might be most beneficial to the country and its revenues, would do best to permit the importation of all tobacco, Ottoman or otherwise, at such low rate of duty as would effectually remove any incentive to smuggling. That it proposed, therefore, that the Khedive should issue a Decree regulating the importation of tobacco in the manner desired.

That, so far as Her Majesty's Government were directly concerned, the only question raised would seem to be that arising under the XIVth Article of the Treaty with Turkey of the 29th April, 1861, which, by the express stipulation of the XXth Article, was binding on the Government of Egypt. That by the former Article Her Majesty's Government consented that tobacco, the produce or manufacture of Her Majesty's dominions, should be excluded from Turkey, and that Her Majesty's subjects should be prohibited from importing any tobacco at all into that Empire.

That it would seem evident that although the Sultan had no power to alter the terms of the Treaty of 1861 by municipal legislation in a manner which would be injurious to British interests, yet that if he were by such legislation to restore to Her Majesty's subjects and to the produce of Her Majesty's dominions the privileges of which they were respectively deprived by consent in 1861, that act, although constituting an alteration of the Treaty, would be one to the advantage of Great Britain, and one to which Her Majesty's Government would of course offer no objection; but that a similar action on the part of the Khedive with regard to the introduction of foreign tobacco into Egypt would in all probability be objected to by Turkey as diminishing the consumption of Turkish tobacco, and diminishing proportionately the revenue derived by Turkey from the excise. That a question was thus raised as to how far the Egyptian Government had the right to take the action proposed in the Memorandum of the Controllers if it were opposed by the Porte.

That the authority of the Khedive was derived from the Firmans granted from time to time to the various Rulers of Egypt, and that the Firman of the 2nd August, 1879, contained the following words:—

"Tous les impôts de cette province seront perçus en mon nom. Les habitants d'Égypte étant de mes sujets et ne devant comme tels subir la moindre oppression ni acte arbitraire à cette condition, le Khédivat d'Égypte, auquel est confiée l'administration civile, financière, et judiciaire du pays, aura la faculté d'élaborer et d'établir d'une manière conforme à la justice, tous règlements et lois intérieurs nécessaires à cet égard."

That it would indeed seem that that Firman gave to the Khedive as full authority to alter the Customs Laws in Egypt as the Sultan possessed in other parts of the Ottoman Empire.

That by the same Firman the Khedive was authorized in the following words to conclude Commercial Conventions with foreign Powers:—

"Le Khédive sera autorisé à contracter et à renouveler, sans porter atteinte aux Traités politiques de mon Gouvernement Impérial ni à ses droits Souverains sur ce pays, les Conventions avec les Agents des Puissances étrangères pour les Douanes et le commerce et pour toutes les transactions avec les étrangers concernant les affaires intérieures, et cela dans le but de développer le commerce, l'industrie, et l'agriculture, et de régler la police des étrangers et tous leurs rapports avec le Gouvernement et la population. Ces Conventions seront communiquées à ma Sublime Porte avant leur promulgation par le Khédive."

That it would thus appear that the Khedive was entitled to enter into an international arrangement with that and other countries putting the tobacco trade of Egypt on the desired footing, and in view of the above authority contained in the Firman, it was difficult to see how the Porte could object to the proceeding.

Questions as to power of Khedive :—
1. To adopt new customs duties.

That the following questions arose:—

1. Whether it was competent for the Khedive, under the Imperial Firmans and in view of the Treaty of 1861, to abandon without the authority of the Porte the existing Regulations concerning the collection of the Turkish duty on Turkish tobacco imported into Egypt, and to substitute new customs duties and Regulations respecting tobacco?

2. To conclude Treaties for admission of foreign tobacco.

2. Whether it was competent to the Khedive without the assent of the Porte to conclude Treaties with foreign Powers for the admission of foreign tobacco into Egypt at such rates of duty as might be stipulated therein?

3. To carry out proposed changes without Sultan's consent.

3. Whether it was competent to the Khedive, without the assent of the Porte, to carry out the proposals suggested in the Memorandum of the Controllers by a legislative Decree only?

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Questions as to import of Turkish and foreign tobacco distinct.

That in considering the matters submitted to us two questions must, we think, be kept entirely distinct, viz., the question of the obligations of the Egyptian Government in relation to the importion of Turkish tobacco, whether it is bound to insist on the production of "raftiehs," or can refuse any longer to do so, and the question whether it is competent for that Government to sanction the importation of other tobacco, either free or on such terms as it may impose.

We will deal with the latter question first.

Egypt cannot alter provisions of Treaty of 1861;

Apart from such power as the Egyptian Government may possess of entering into Commercial Treaties, we do not think it is within its competency to interfere with the provisions of the Treaty of 1861. That Treaty is made applicable to Egypt, and must be looked at as a whole. By that Treaty the import of tobacco into Egypt by British subjects is forbidden, and we do not think the Government of that country could by mere device relax that prohibition. We think the Porte might take well-founded objections to such a course. But the Firmans certainly appear to give very extensive powers to the Egyptian Government of making commercial arrangements with foreign Powers. And it appears to us that that Government might enter into a new Commercial Treaty with this country in substitution, so far as Egypt is concerned, for the existing Treaty of Commerce, and that one of the Articles of such Treaty might provide for the admission of tobacco imported by British subjects on any terms that might be agreed upon.

but might admit foreign tobacco under a new Treaty.

The production of "raftiehs" depends on relations between Egypt and Turkey.

The question whether the Egyptian Government is bound to insist upon the production of "raftiehs" in the case of tobacco imported from Turkey has no connec- with the Commercial Treaties existing between the Porte and foreign Powers, and it would not be affected by any fresh commercial arrangements which Egypt might make. It depends entirely upon the relation in which that country stands to the Porte, and the obligations which she has either taken upon herself or which arise out of that relation.

We observe that in the Vizirial letter of the 31st March, 1881, which is set out in the Memorandum of the Controllers, the following passage occurs in relation to the seizure of certain tobacco at Port Saïd:—

"La saisie opérée à Port-Saïd étant en parfaite convenance avec la promesse du Gouvernement Khédivial de ne pas tolérer aucun acte contraire aux dispositions des Traités et Règlements en vigueur . . . . le Ministre des Finances demande qu'avis soit donné au Gouvernement Égyptien de ne pas se dessaisir au profit de leurs propriétaires des tabacs dont il s'agit ou de toutes autres marchandises similaires pour lesquelles des pièces officielles constatant l'acquittement des droits à Constantinople ne seraient pas exhibées."

Cannot give opinion as to Egyptian obligations without further information.

It is to be noted that the Turkish Minister here relies upon some promise of the Government of the Khedive not to tolerate any act contrary to the Treaties and Regulations in force, and by implication alleges that there results from them the obligation to seize and hold tobacco imported without the production of "raftiehs." We feel that we are hardly in a position to advise how far Egypt is under obligations to the Porte in respect of this matter without some further information as to the foundation upon which the practice which has been pursued by the Egyptian Government rested, what are the "Traités et Règlements" referred to in the Vizirial letter, and what undertakings have been given by Egypt to the Porte. It certainly seems open to grave objection that the Egyptian Government should be compelled to be at great expense to prevent the Turkish fiscal laws being evaded, and looking at the complete financial and administrative control which has been accorded to Egypt, it seems unreasonable that she should incur such expense, from which her resources derive no benefit.

But it must be borne in mind that the Government of Egypt has rendered this service down to the present time without objection, and that the very delicate questions of the relation in which Egypt stands towards the Porte, and the duties she owes her, appear to be involved in considering the matters submitted to us.

Suez Canal. Right of Turkey to control arrangements between the Khedive and any Company.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 27, 1883.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which relate to the question whether the right claimed by the Sultan of Turkey to control any arrangement which the Khedive of Egypt may make with the Suez Canal Company, or with any other Company or person, in relation to that Canal, or to any new Canal uniting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea, still exists, or has ceased by reason of the powers accorded to the Khedives of Egypt by the Firmans of 1866, 1867, 1873, and 1879.

Position of Suez Canal Company.

The Suez Canal Company is established under Concessions granted to M. de Lesseps by the Viceroy of Egypt in 1854, 1856 (to which the sanction and ratification of the Sultan was expressly required), and under the Convention of the 22nd February, 1866, between the Viceroy and the Company, which recites the two Concessions, and which was ratified and confirmed by a Firman of the Sultan dated the 19th March, 1866. ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," pp. 1, 4, and 34.)

M. de Lesseps also obtained from the Viceroy a Concession for the construction of Fresh-water Canals and extensive grants of land.

The following are the circumstances which led to the Convention of 1866:—

Interference of Turkey, and negotiations leading to Convention of 1866.

On the 6th April, 1863, the Turkish Government addressed a note to the Courts of London and Paris, objecting to some of the terms of the Concessions granted to M. de Lesseps.

It considered the Concession of the Fresh-water Canals and of the lands adjacent thereto a menace to its independence, and the stipulations for the providing of native workmen by forced labour a contravention of the laws of the Ottoman Empire, and it therefore declared its opposition to the continuance of the work of making the Canal. Copies of that note and of its inclosure are transmitted herewith. (Paper 6.)

The same notification was made to the Viceroy, who, submitting himself to the authority of his Sovereign, accredited Nubar Pasha to come to an understanding with the Suez Canal Company on certain propositions to be submitted. ("Egypt No. 5, 1876," p. 34.)

The Council of Administration of the Company rejected the propositions, and the Viceroy thereupon wrote to the Emperor Napoleon, begging him to pronounce on the questions pending between the Egyptian Government and the Company.

The Emperor accepted the reference, and appointed a Commission to make a preliminary examination into the questions in dispute. The parties appeared before the Commission and adopted and signed a submission to arbitration. ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," p. 22.)

The questions submitted related to (1) the employment of Egyptian workmen; (2) the Fresh-water Canals; (3) lands; (4) compensation to be allowed to the Company on the withdrawal of the advantages granted and Concessions made.

By the Award of the Emperor it was decided that an indemnity should be paid to the Company for the discontinuance of the forced employment of Egyptian workmen, and that the Fresh-water Canal and certain lands should be retroceded by the Company to the Viceroy, for which retrocession a further indemnity should be paid by the Viceroy to the Company.

The total sum awarded by the Emperor to the Company was 84,000,000 fr. ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," pp. 22, 32), and an Agreement was come to with the Egyptian Government in execution of the Emperor's Award. This Agreement is dated the 22nd February, 1866. ("Egypt No. 5, 1876," p. 36, and "No. 6, 1876," p. 34.)

On the 19th March, 1866, the Sultan issued his Firman ("Egypt No. 6, 1876," p. 44) confirming this Agreement and granting his authorization for the execution of the Canal by the Company on the conditions prescribed in the Agreement.

At that time no question arose as to the rights of the Porte in relation to the Suez Canal, on the grounds stated in the Turkish note of the 6th April, 1863. (Paper 6.)

Powers of Khedive, under Sultan's Firmans 1841–73, as to Treaties, &c.

The powers granted to the Khedive of Egypt will be found in the accompanying printed collection of Firmans issued between 1841 and 1879. These Firmans, as observed by M. Waddington when French Minister for Foreign Affairs in 1879 constitute the Charter of Egypt. (Correspondence, Paper 4, p. 450, No. 715.) The Firman granted to Mehemet Ali in 1841 was an International Act, inasmuch as it was issued under the auspices of the Great Powers, and it has been contended by the British and French Governments that the Firmans now in force have also an international character.

It will be observed that the Firmans of 1841 were very restrictive as regards the powers of government intrusted to the Khedives. But in 1866 Ismaïl Pasha agreed to raise the yearly tribute of Egypt to the Porte from 80,000 purses to 150,000 purses, that is to say, from about 376,000*l.* to 720,000*l.*, and thereby obtained a modification in the order of succession, and other important advantages. The privilege of hereditary succession was accorded to him by the Firman of the 27th May, 1866 (Firmans, p. 21), and, by the Firman of the 8th June, 1867 (Firmans, p. 25), the internal administration of Egypt was confided to him in terms which (to use once more the language of M. Waddington) amount to "legislative, administrative, and financial autonomy" (Correspondence, Paper 4, p. 473, No. 776, and p. 535, No. 891). This fact is recited in the subsequent Firman of the 10th September, 1872 (Firmans, p. 27), in the following terms: "Par notre Firman Impérial en date du 5 Safer, 1284 (8th June, 1867), l'administration intérieure de l'Égypte et par conséquent ses intérêts financiers matériels et autres sont dévolus au Gouvernement Égyptien. Notre faveur Impériale lui a accordé tout ce qui se rattache au développement de l'organisation intérieure et du progrès en général."

The next Firman, dated the 25th September, 1872 (Firmans, p. 28), states that the "administration matérielle et financière de l'Égypte" had, by virtue of previous Firmans, devolved on the Khedive "en tout et pour tout," and it authorizes him to contract loans without the authority of the Sultan.

On the 8th June, 1873, the Sultan granted to Ismaïl Pasha a new Firman purporting to supersede previous Firmans by uniting them all in one instrument. (Firmans, p. 29.) This document contains two paragraphs concerning the Khedive's powers of government which have an important bearing on the question under consideration. They are as follows:—

"J'attache la plus grande importance à la prospérité de l'Égypte, au bien-être, à la tranquillité, et à la sécurité de sa population, et comme ce sont des objets qui reposent sur l'administration civile et financière du pays, ainsi que sur le développement des intérêts matériels et autres du pays qui sont du ressort du Gouvernement Égyptien, nous mentionnons comme suit, en les modifiant et les élucidant, tous les privilèges que mon Firman Impérial, soit anciennement, soit à nouveau, a accordés au Gouvernement Égyptien pour qu'ils soient possédés à toujours par les Khédives qui se succéderont.

"L'administration civile et financière du pays et tous les intérêts, matériels et autres, sous tous les rapports, sont du ressort du Gouvernement Égyptien, et lui sont confiés, et comme l'administration, le bon ordre de tout pays, le développement de la richesse, et de la prospérité de la population proviennent de l'harmonie à établir entre les faits, les relations générales, la condition et la nature du pays, ainsi que le caractère et les mœurs des habitants, le Khédive d'Égypte est autorisé à faire des règlements intérieurs et des lois toutes les fois qu'il sera nécessaire."

It will be observed that this Firman also conferred upon the Khedive the right of concluding Conventions with foreign Powers, provided they did not clash with the political Treaties made by the Sublime Porte, and of maintaining armies.

Similar rights conferred by Firman of 1879, on condition of non-alienation of territorial or Sovereign rights.

In 1879 the affairs of Egypt were in so ruinous a condition owing to the maladministration of Ismaïl Pasha that the British and French Governments arrived at the conclusion that the removal of the Khedive had become a necessity. While measures to procure his abdication were under consideration, the Sultan, without previous communication with the Powers, suddenly deposed Ismaïl Pasha, appointed his son Tewfik Pasha to the Khediviate, restored the ancient Turkish order of succession, and revoked the Firman of 1873, and thereby all the Firmans issued since 1841. This step was taken by the Sultan in pursuance of a Report of his Ministers (Ibid., p. 543, No. 909), and was communicated to Her Majesty's Government by the Turkish Ambassador on the 26th June, 1879, with a copy of his telegraphic instructions. (Ibid., p. 441, No. 695.)

This communication, which was also made to the French Government, was received with great displeasure. The British and French Governments disputed the right of the Sultan to revoke, proprio motu, the Firman of 1873, which had been obtained at the cost of great pecuniary sacrifices, and had been communicated officially to all the Powers. They objected to a return to the ancient order of succession; they viewed the act of the Sultan as an attempt to resume the administrative control of Egypt, and they determined that the revocation of the Firman of 1873 should be annulled, or that a new Firman should be issued, of which the draft should be previously communicated to and approved by them, and which should contain all the essential points of the Firman of 1873, except as regards the maintenance of unlimited military and naval forces.

It was found impracticable to annul the revocation of the Firman of 1873 (Ibid., p. 490, No. 807), and long negotiations ensued as to the terms of the new Firman, the result of which was communicated to Her Majesty's Government in Sir H. Layard's despatch No. 693 of the 3rd August, 1879 (Ibid., p. 623, No. 1037), together with a copy of the new Firman agreed upon, and of the explanatory declarations annexed thereto.

The Firman bears date the 2nd August, 1879 (Firmans, p. 33), and its substance was telegraphed to Her Majesty's Ambassadors at Berlin, Rome, and Vienna, in the following terms:—

1. Present succession rule maintained.
2. No further loans permitted.
3. No armaments above number sanctioned in 1841.
4. All Conventions to be communicated to Porte before promulgation.
5. No territory to be alienated or prerogatives of Khedive given up to a third Power.

Otherwise former privileges confirmed. (Ibid., Paper 4, p. 591, No. 980.)

But in the notes annexed to the Firman it is expressly declared, as regards the non-alienation of privileges or of territory, that "le présent Firman ne restreint en rien, sauf ce qui y est expressément relaté, les droits, privilèges, et prérogatives précédemment et personnellement accordés aux Khédives d'Égypte;" and as regards Conventions, it is provided that the sanction of the Porte is not required previously to their being promulgated and put in force.

It will be seen, therefore, that subject to the express restrictions contained in the Firman of 1879, the full powers of Government granted to Ismaïl Pasha by the Firman of 1873 are still vested in the present Khedive.

I am now to invite your attention to the accompanying copy of a note from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court, forwarding copy of a note from the Sublime Porte referring to the recent negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and the Suez Canal Company.

In this communication it is alleged that any modification or extension of the privileges accorded to M. de Lesseps must receive the assent of His Majesty the Sultan before taking effect.

Is Turkish claim to right of interference, admitted in 1863, compatible with powers since granted?

The question therefore arises, whether the claim now put forward by the Porte, and which Her Majesty's Government fully admitted in 1863, is compatible with the larger powers of internal administration and government which have since been conferred by the Sultan on the Khedives of Egypt; and, in relation to that question, I am to draw your attention to the considerations of national safety and Imperial policy set forth in the Turkish note of the 6th April, 1863, and particularly in its inclosure, on which at that time the claim of the Porte to exercise a control over the construction of canals, railroads, and other works of that character in Egypt was based.

I am also to refer you to a Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet, in relation to the construction of lighthouses in the Red Sea. (Paper 7.)

Right of Turkey to interfere, with reference to Suez Canal dues in 1872–76, was admitted.

I am, further, to point out that in the correspondence relating to the Suez Canal dues (Paper 8) it appears clearly throughout the controversy which arose respecting the dues, and which continued from 1872 to 1876, that the supreme authority of the Sultan over the subject-matter in dispute was recognized by all parties (see Parliamentary Papers 13, 15, 16, 20, 22, 23, 24, 42, 49, 55, 67, 71, 122, 123, 124, 140, 154, 155, 156, 158; and Lord Derby's despatch to Sir H. Elliot of the 7th July, p. 163).

It is presumed that the clause in the Firman of 1879 against the alienation of territory applies only to the case of alienation to a third Power, as stated in the telegraphic summary above referred to. (Ibid., Paper 4, p. 591.)

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Earl Granville with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

[After recapitulation of the above Reference, the Law Officers report as follows:—]

Claim of Porte to control modification of arrangements with Suez Canal Company not well founded.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we do not think the claim of the Porte that any modification or extension of the privileges accorded to M. de Lesseps must receive the assent of the Sultan before taking effect is well founded.

The question turns upon the construction of the Firman of 1879, and the extent of the independent power which by that instrument is conferred upon the Khedive.

The civil and financial administration of the country is thereby entrusted to the Khedive, and he is empowered to make all necessary laws and regulations in relation thereto. Beyond this, he is enabled to make Conventions with the Agents of foreign Powers for all that concerns the internal affairs of the country, with the view of developing its commerce, industry, and agriculture.

It seems almost impossible to contend that a modification or extension of the privileges of M. de Lesseps and the Canal Company, having for its object the improvement of the navigation through the Isthmus of Suez, would be in excess of such large powers as these.

The only limitation upon these powers which it is necessary to consider is to be found in the provision of the Firman, which forbids the Khedive to abandon to others, in whole or in part, the privileges accorded to Egypt, which are entrusted to him, or any part of his territory.

It would seem that this restriction was insisted upon by Carathéodory Pasha, "as on more than one occasion the late Khedive was about to make over a large portion of his territory, and even the management of his army, to a foreign Company without consulting the Porte." (See Sir A. H. Layard to Lord Salisbury of the 21st July, 1879, p. 583.)

It appears to us that it would be no breach of the provision of the Firman now under consideration if the Khedive granted a Concession to a Company empowering them to construct or improve a canal, railway, or other work of public utility, even though the Concession should involve the grant of the use of land belonging to him within his territory, provided that the sovereignty of the Khedive were preserved over any part of his territory so used, and none of his sovereign rights were parted with. For it is only if his sovereignty were thus parted with that we think that he could be said to "abandonner à d'autres . . . . . aucune partie du territoire."

As long as no alienation of territory or Sovereign rights is made.

At the same time, if a grant were made to a foreign Company of vast tracts of land beyond what was essential for the public work authorized (as was the case in the original Suez Canal Concession), so that the sovereignty of the Khedive over such territory would be practically, even though not nominally, interfered with, we are by no means prepared to say that the Sultan might not with good ground insist that the Khedive had exceeded his powers.

Our opinion is therefore limited to the case of a Concession for an industrial undertaking of an ordinary description to hold and make use of land, and does not extend to a grant open to the objections above pointed out.

Explanation of admission of right of Turkey to interfere in 1872–76 as to Suez Canal dues.

We may observe that the position with respect to the question before us is considerably embarrassed by what took place between 1872 and 1876 in relation to the Suez Canal dues. The authority of the Sultan over the subject-matter in dispute was recognized by all parties, and yet, under the Firman then existing, the independent power and authority which had been granted to the Khedive did not differ substantially from that now possessed by him.

The Government of the Sultan will no doubt rely strongly upon this circumstance. Probably the best explanation may be that the Suez Canal Concession having emanated from the sovereign authority of the Sultan, without which it could not at that time have been obtained, it was natural to appeal to him in an international controversy concerning the rights arising out of it.

Note by the Lord Chancellor.

Question a special and not an abstract one.

I cannot help thinking that this is a question which must be considered rather with reference to the terms of any particular Concession which the Egyptian Government may be disposed to grant to the Suez or any other Company than in an abstract way.

Agree with Law Officers in rejecting claim of Sultan to control arrangements which do not affect his or Khedive's rights.

I should certainly agree with the Law Officers in rejecting as preposterous the claim of the Sultan to a veto on any additional grant of land for the enlargement or improvement of the present Canal which left untouched the present territorial sovereignty both of the Sultan as the paramount power and of the Khedive as exercising the rights of internal government and administration under the Firmans.

Murder of J. Alison by A. Lacomb.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, in accordance with the request contained in our letter of the 18th September, he was to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Judge and Consul-General at Constantinople,* inclosing the depositions of Troopers Mills and Smith, in the case of Regina v. Lacomb.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the inferences we draw from the facts proved on the trial are, that the prisoner shot the deceased without premeditation, and that from the effects of drink his mind was in such a state that he probably did not think or care whether the rifle he used was, or was not, loaded.

He should be sentenced to penal servitude for life, and be released after seven years if his conduct be good.

Doubtless it is necessary by severity of punishment to show that drunkenness is no excuse for such an act as that under consideration, and therefore we think that, at the present time, the sentence should be to the extent of subjecting the prisoner to penal servitude for life. But we suggest that a Minute should be made that if the prisoner's conduct in the meantime be good, he should, at the termination of seven years' imprisonment, be released.

Suez Canal: claim of Sultan to control arrangements as to.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 27th August, relative to the question of the right of the Sultan of Turkey to control any arrangement which the Khedive might make in regard to the Suez Canal, he had the honour to inclose a copy of a despatch which had been communicated to your Lordship by the Turkish Ambassador,* in which the Porte reasserts its right to such control. That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request that we would take that despatch into our consideration, together with the papers which were already before us on that question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Maintain opinion as to non-necessity of Sultan's sanction to proposed arrangement.

That the points raised by the despatch communicated by the Turkish Ambassador appear to be all of them dealt with in our former Report.

We observe that although the despatch admits that in recent years certain new powers have been conferred upon the Khedive, and notably by the Firman of 1879, it puts a very limited construction upon the rights thus conferred.

It is alleged that such a work as the making of a canal cannot be regarded as an affair of "internal order," falling within the category of those rights belonging to the Khedive.

But it is obvious, upon a perusal of the Firmans, that the power of legislation and of making Conventions committed to the Khedive are not confined to matters of internal order, but have a much wider scope.

The despatch concludes with a reference to a despatch written by Lord Granville two years ago, and relies upon a passage quoted from it. We have not this despatch before us, and it certainly should be considered before replying to the Turkish Ambassador, but the passage quoted is probably explained by the context.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 25, 1883.

Import of tobacco into Egypt.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Secretary of State, the papers noted in the accompanying list,† which relate to the question of the right of the Khedive of Egypt to enter into Conventions with foreign Powers respecting the admission of tobacco into Egypt at a low and uniform rate of duty, and to invite your attention to a question which has been raised in connection with this subject, and which was not submitted for your consideration in my letter of the 1st May last.

In your report above referred to you advised that in view of the very extensive powers given to the Khedive by the Imperial Firmans‡ of making commercial arrangements with foreign Powers, it was competent to the Egyptian Government to enter into a new Commercial Treaty with this country, in substitution, so far as Egypt is concerned, for the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and the Porte of 1861, and that one of the Articles of such Treaty might provide for the admission of tobacco imported by British subjects on any terms that might be agreed upon. You also referred to the Vizirial letter of the 31st March, 1881, from which it would appear that some promise had been given by the Government of the Khedive not to tolerate any act contrary to the Treaties and Regulations in force. Lord Granville gathers from your observations on that document that, in your opinion, the promise therein referred to only affects the question, whether the Khedive is bound to insist on the production of "raftiehs" on the importation of Turkish tobacco, or can refuse to do so any longer, but that it has no bearing on the main question of the power of the Khedive to enter into Conventions with foreign Powers in relation to the importation of tobacco into Egypt.

Do Treaties with Porte preclude Great Britain from concluding a Convention on subject?

The question which has now presented itself is whether Great Britain is precluded from entering into such a Convention with the Khedive by the provision contained in the Treaties between the Porte and foreign Powers against the importation of tobacco, in any shape whatever, into any part of the Ottoman dominions.

Article XIV of the British Treaty of 1861* is as follows:—

"ARTICLE XIV.

"An exception to the stipulations laid down in the Vth Article shall be made in regard to tobacco, in any shape whatsoever, and also in regard to salt, which two articles shall cease to be included among those which the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty are permitted to import into the Ottoman dominions.

"British subjects, however, or their agents, buying or selling tobacco or salt for consumption in Turkey, shall be subject to the same regulations, and shall pay the same duties, as the most favoured Ottoman subjects trading in the two articles aforesaid; and furthermore, as a compensation for the prohibition of the two articles above mentioned, no duty whatsoever shall in future be levied on those articles when exported from Turkey by the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty.

"British subjects shall, nevertheless, be bound to declare the quantity of tobacco and salt thus exported to the proper Custom-house authorities, who shall, as heretofore, have the right to watch over the export of these articles, without thereby being entitled to levy any tax thereon on any pretence whatsoever."

That Treaty has recently expired, and, pending the conclusion of a new one, Her Majesty's Government have claimed for British trade most-favoured-nation treatment under the Capitulations.

But all the existing Treaties between the Porte and foreign Powers concluded since the date of the British Treaty of 1861 contain stipulations in relation to tobacco similar to those of Article XIV of that Treaty.

Tobacco does not appear in the Tariff of Imports in the Treaties between the Porte and foreign Powers, but its importation into any part of the Ottoman dominions is by the terms of those Treaties absolutely prohibited; and in consideration of this prohibition, and by way of compensation, the exportation of tobacco from Turkey to other countries is permitted free of duty.

It appears, however, that this prohibition has been modified as regards cigars, snuff, &c., by a Regulation of the Porte, referred to in the inclosed Memorandum by Sir E. Hertslet.

Subject, however, to that Regulation, tobacco is an article of trade which, like salt, has been reserved as an Imperial monopoly under the Treaties of the Porte, and it may be urged that foreign Powers, having bound themselves by those Treaties not to import tobacco into Egypt, cannot enter into a Convention with the Khedive for that object without committing a breach of their engagement towards the Porte, which must necessarily entail severe loss on the Turkish revenue.

On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that the Firmans of 1873 and 1879, the latter of which was issued in communication and agreement with Great Britain and France, grant to the Khedive the most ample powers with respect to the conclusion of Commercial Conventions, and that no reservation whatever can be found therein with respect to tobacco.

As regards the powers of the present Khedive under the Firman of 1879, I am to invite your attention to the inclosed printed copy of a Reference addressed to you in the month of August last, which deals with the rights of the Sultan in relation to the Suez Canal, and in which a brief account is given of the negotiations which preceded the issue of that Firman. It is there shown that all the Powers which were granted by previous Firmans are now vested in the present Khedive; and in relation to the particular question now under consideration, I am to refer to the following extract from the Firman addressed to Ismaïl Pasha, dated the 8th June, 1867:—

"In like manner, whilst all the Treaties of the Sublime Porte must be respected in Egypt, an exception is made only as regards the customs duties, and as regards foreigners in matters relating to the police, postal, and transit services, for which full powers are given to thee to enter into special arrangements with foreign agents. But such arrangements must not take the form of Treaties or Conventions having any political signification or purport."

That Firman proceeds to declare that where any doubts arise as to such commercial arrangements being opposed to the sovereign rights of the Sultan, or to the principles therein laid down, the matter shall be referred to the Porte previously to the conclusion of the arrangement. But it is pointed out in the above-mentioned Reference of August last that this condition was waived in the notes annexed to the Firman of 1879.

It is of the utmost importance to the material interests of Egypt, that special Conventions for the admission of tobacco into that country should be concluded. Indeed, negotiations have been actually commenced for such a Convention with Greece, and Her Majesty's Government are pressed for their opinion as to whether the Porte could take exception to it. It has become necessary, therefore, to consider the proposal once more from every point of view, and before arriving at a final decision Lord Granville desires me to submit to you the further considerations contained in this letter, in case they should modify in any way the conclusions arrived at in your Report of the 29th May last as to the right of Her Majesty's Government and of the Khedive to enter into a Convention for the importation of tobacco into Egypt. I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Granville with your opinion on the question submitted in this letter, and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I am, &c.

[After recapitulation of preceding Reference, the Law Officers report as follows:—]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Extent and purpose of Firmans granted to Egypt as affecting Treaties with foreign Powers.

That we think that the financial and administrative autonomy which has been conferred by Turkey upon Egypt, coupled with the right, also conferred upon her, of making Commercial Treaties with foreign Powers, would authorize Egypt to enter into a Treaty providing for the import of tobacco, on payment of such duty as might be agreed upon.

But it may no doubt be the case that certain foreign Powers might, by the provisions of a Treaty with Turkey, by which they were bound, be precluded from entering into such a Treaty with Egypt, and at the same time claiming the benefit of their Treaty with Turkey.

There can be no doubt that the Firmans are to be regarded as operating primarily as between Turkey and Egypt, and therefore, not necessarily warranting, as regards foreign Powers, every Treaty they might make with Egypt.

With reference to the question now before us, it might on the one hand be urged by the Porte, that any foreign Power which had agreed that the importation of tobacco by its subjects into the Ottoman dominions, including Egypt, should be strictly prohibited, could not claim the benefit of other provisions of the Treaty, for which this was, in fact, the consideration, whilst they, by arrangement with Egypt, to which the Porte had given, so far as they were concerned, no sanction, set aside the prohibition so far as it related to that part of the Ottoman dominions.

On the other hand, it may be said that it was the very purpose of the Firmans to grant a complete right of independent action in the Egyptian Government in all that affected its customs duties and commercial interests, and thus to withdraw Egypt, for all such purposes from, and to cause her no longer to be treated, so far as these matters were concerned, as part of the Ottoman dominions.

Unadvisable to enter into a Convention as proposed.

There is much to be said in support of each of these conflicting contentions, and we have great difficulty in determining between them; but on the whole we incline to the opinion that the balance of argument and policy is in favour of the former view, and that therefore it would be unadvisable to enter into the Convention with the Khedive referred to in your Lordship's letter of the 23rd ultimo.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, December 18, 1883.

Right of Egyptian Government to refuse to allow Mr. W. Blunt to land in Egypt

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which related to the question of the right of the Egyptian Government to refuse permission to Mr. Wilfrid Blunt to land in Egypt on his return journey from Ceylon and India.

That the grounds of the objections of the Egyptian Government to the presence of Mr. Blunt in Egypt were stated in the note from the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, inclosed in Sir E. Baring's despatch No. 457 of the 13th October last.

That, with reference to that question, Mr. Lister was to invite our attention to the Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown respecting the right of the Porte to expel from the dominions of the Sultan the subjects of a foreign country which enjoyed the privileges of the Capitulations, and the conditions under which the exercise of this right should be admitted in the case of a British subject.

That in the instructions sent to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople on the 18th July, 1860 (No. 330), and which were founded on the Law Officers' Reports of the 16th May and the 7th July of that year, it was stated by Lord John Russell that Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that the Turkish Government had, unaffected by any Treaty stipulation, the inherent sovereign right of expelling foreigners from Turkey, not, indeed, capriciously and without any cause whatever, but upon reasonable cause, the existence of which was a matter for discussion and settlement with the Government of the foreigner in each case as it might arise.

That in the later despatch to Sir H. Bulwer (No. 433 of the 23rd August, 1860), his Excellency was instructed that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, whenever the Porte desired to banish from the Ottoman dominions any foreigner under British protection, it should communicate its reasons for so doing to the proper British authority; that, if the ground assigned were not conduct amenable to criminal law, the sufficiency of the reasons should be the subject of discussion between the British and Turkish authorities; that, but if the ground assigned were anything cognizable by the criminal jurisdiction, the Porte should first prosecute the suspected persons to conviction; and that, until that were done, Her Majesty's Government would not consent that they should be punished merely because they were suspected.

And that Her Majesty's Ambassador was authorized to consent, subject to the principles laid down above, to the expulsion by the Porte of persons under British protection, whose continued residence in the Turkish dominions should be shown, to his Excellency's satisfaction, to be incompatible with the public safety, but against whom no specific charge, such as would bring them within reach of criminal jurisdiction, could be established.

That two recent letters from the Colonial Office, which would be found among the papers, gave an account of the excitement created among the Mussulman population in Ceylon by Mr. Blunt's visit to that colony.

That Mr. Lister was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the grounds assigned by Chérif Pasha in his note inclosed in Sir E. Baring's despatch (No. 457 of the 13th October last) were sufficient to justify Her Majesty's Representative in Egypt in assenting to the proposal of the Egyptian Government, that Mr. Blunt should be prohibited from landing in Egypt on his return journey from Ceylon and India.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should abstain from opposing proposed action of Egyptian Government.

That the grounds assigned by Chérif Pasha in his note proposing that the Egyptian Government should prohibit Mr. Blunt from landing in Egypt are such that we think Her Majesty's Representative in Egypt would be justified in abstaining from offering any opposition to the proposed action of the Egyptian Government.

My Lord,

L. Paulet, deserter from the "Imerina."

Suit at Réunion for recovery of wages and clothes.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was to transmit despatches from Mr. Annesley, Her Majesty's Consul at Réunion,* reporting the case of a French seaman named Louis Paulet, who, being on the Articles of the British steamer "Imerina," deserted at Réunion, and subsequently sued the master of the vessel in the local Courts for the balance of wages alleged to be due to him, and for the recovery of clothes left on board the vessel at the time of his desertion. That Mr. Annesley, as we should observe, protested against the exercise of jurisdiction in the case by the local Tribunals, but that his protest was disregarded by the Governor of the Colony, to whom it was addressed. That the Court gave Judgment against the master, and the Judgment was confirmed on appeal.

The owner of the "Imerina" resided in London, but had made no complaint, and that it was not known whether he intended to prosecute a further appeal to the Court of Cassation in Paris. That your Lordship apprehended that, in the absence of any Treaty provision to the contrary, the French Tribunals were strictly entitled to exercise jurisdiction in the case, and that Sir J. Pauncefote inclosed a letter from the Colonial Office, forwarding correspondence relative to a converse case which occurred at Penang, where the Vice-Admiralty Court, notwithstanding the protest of the French Consul, entertained a suit for wages against the French vessel "Washi," by the English engineer belonging to her.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Consul Annesley in reply to his despatches respecting the case of the "Imerina."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

French Tribunals entitled to exercise jurisdiction.

That, in our opinion, Mr. Annesley should be informed that, in the absence of any Treaty provision to the contrary, the French Tribunals were strictly entitled to exercise jurisdiction in this case, and that no exception can be taken to such exercise of jurisdiction.

Sir J. Pauncefote to Mr. Farrer.

Foreign Office, May , 1883.

Sir,

I HAVE laid before Earl Granville your letter of the 21st March (H. 1818), on the subject of the question raised by Her Majesty's Consul at Havre in connection with the Declaration between Great Britain and France relative to the proceeds of wrecks. The Board observe that the Declaration does not say at what time the French authorities have a right to intervene with a view of taking charge of any wrecked property.

Action of Consuls in salvage cases.

Interference of French authorities in cases of wrecks.

In reply, I am to request you to state to the Board of Trade that, as Lord Granville understands the question, the Declaration does not purport to alter the law of France relating to salvage, to which all vessels wrecked or stranded within French jurisdiction are subject. The Declaration only entitles Her Majesty's Consular Representatives to co-operate in the salvage; and the question as to the precise time at which the local authorities have a right to interfere in French waters for salvage purposes must be governed by the French law cited by Consul Bernal, which gives them the right to interfere as soon as there is a breaking up ("bris"). This is a quite distinct question from that of the time at which, according to our maritime law, the master ceases to be agent of the ship-owner and other parties interested in the ship and cargo.

I am, &c.

French Government as to the title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos Islets as dependencies of the Island of Jersey, and as to the exclusive right of general fishery within 3 miles of those islets, which is claimed by the Jersey authorities.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—

Convention of August 2, 1839.

Limits of the oyster fishery between Jersey and France.

General fishery limits.

On the 2nd August, 1839, a Convention (document A) was signed between Great Britain and France, the object of which, as explained in the preamble, was to prevent the recurrence of disputes by defining the limits within which the subjects of the two countries respectively should be at liberty to fish for oysters between the Island of Jersey and the neighbouring coast of France, and also the limits within which "the general right of fishery on all parts of the coasts of the two countries shall be exclusively reserved to the subjects of Great Britain and of France respectively."

Limits of French oyster fishery.

A Chart was attached to the Convention, on which lines were drawn between certain points along the French coast, and by Article I it was agreed that those lines should define the limits of the French oyster fishery which was thereby reserved exclusively to French subjects.

Limits of British oyster fishery.

No line was drawn on the Chart to define the limits of the British oyster fishery; but it was declared by Article II that the oyster fishery "within 3 miles of the Island of Jersey" should be reserved exclusively to British subjects. By Article III it was declared that the oyster fishery outside of the above exclusive limits should be common to the subjects of both countries.

General right of fishery.

The general right of fishery was defined by Article IX, which declared that British subjects should enjoy the exclusive right of fishery within 3 miles "along the whole extent of the coasts of the British islands," and that French subjects should enjoy the exclusive right of fishery within 3 miles "along the whole extent of the coasts of France."

Regulations for guidance of fishermen.

6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79.

Article XI provided that Regulations should be drawn up for the guidance of the fishermen of the two countries in the seas between the coasts of Great Britain and France, to which effect should be given by legislative measures. Regulations were accordingly drawn up and agreed to, and the Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79, was passed to give effect to them (document B). The Regulations will be found in the Act, and it is to be observed that Article 85 provides that "the fishing-boats of the one country shall not approach nearer to any part of the coasts of the other country than the limit of 3 miles specified in Article IX of the Convention of 1839."

Convention of November 11, 1867.

In 1867 a new Fishery Convention was signed between Great Britain and France (document C), which, when brought into effect, will supersede the Convention of 1839.

By Article XXXVIII of the new Convention it is declared that the expression "British Islands" shall include the Islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark, and Man, "with their dependencies."

By Article XXXIX it was provided that the new Convention should come into operation on a day to be fixed by the High Contracting Parties, after a British Act of Parliament should have been passed to enable Her Majesty to carry out such of its provisions as required legislative sanction.

"Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," 31 & 32 Vict., cap. 45.

"The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868" (31 and 32 Vict., cap. 45), (document D), was passed to give effect, inter alia, to the new Convention, and a notification was published in the "Gazette" of the 22nd January, 1869, that the day fixed for the coming into force of the Act was the 1st February, 1869; but on the 9th February, 1869, a further Notification was published in the "Gazette," which will be found in Hertslet's Treaties, vol. xiv, p. 1200, to the effect that the Convention not having been brought into operation in the manner prescribed by Article XXXIX thereof, so much of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," as related thereto should not, until the Convention had duly come into operation, apply to French subjects and French vessels.

Cause of delay in carrying the Convention of 1867 into effect.

The cause of the delay in carrying the Convention of 1867 into effect is that the French Government have not up to the present date passed the Law necessary to enable them to bring it into operation. (See Hertslet, vol. xiv, p. 1200, supra.)

"Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877," 40 & 41 Vict., cap. 42.]

By "The Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877," (40 & 41 Vict., cap. 42, sec. 15), (document E), the Act 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 79, giving effect to the Convention of 1839, was temporarily revived and continued in force until the Convention of 1867 shall come into operation.

Fisheries still regulated by Convention of 1839 and 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79.

French Government dispute title of British Crown to the Ecréhos as dependencies of Jersey.

It follows, therefore, that the fisheries in question are still regulated by the Convention of 1839 and the Act 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 79. Of late years there has been a disposition on the part of the French Government to dispute the title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos Islets as dependencies of Jersey.

On this point I am to invite your attention to the three printed Foreign Office Memoranda by Sir E. Hertslet, and to a printed Memorandum furnished by the Attorney-General of Jersey (documents F, G, H, and I).

Treasury Order declaring the Ecréhos to be comprised within the limits of the port of Jersey.

In 1875, as you will perceive from the correspondence referred to in the Foreign Office Memorandum of the 1st November, 1881 (document G), the French Government took exception to a Treasury Order establishing the Island of Jersey as a Channel port, and declaring the Ecréhos Islets to be comprised within its limits.

The French Government were furnished, in reply, with the grounds on which the islets were claimed as an undoubted dependency of the Island of Jersey, and it was stated that Her Majesty's Government did not doubt that the French Government would readily admit that the facts adduced constituted undeniable evidence of the title of the British Crown. No rejoinder was made by the French Government to the above reply.

Aggressions by French fishermen.

French smugglers.

Since that time, however, French fishermen have been in the habit of resorting to the Ecréhos for the purpose of the general fishery, which it is stated that they carry on with destructive gear, in defiance of the laws of Jersey for the protection of the British fisheries, and therefore to the injury of those fisheries, as well as to the annoyance and detriment of the Jersey fishermen. The islets are also the resort of French smugglers, and the Jersey authorities are naturally apprehensive lest the French fishermen should also resort to the Minquiers and other dependencies of Jersey beyond the 3-miles limit, and thereby revive the mischief which it was the object of the Convention of 1839 to prevent.

Instructions asked for by Commander of Her Majesty's hip "Dasher."

In August 1881 the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Dasher," a cruizer on the Jersey Station charged with the enforcement of the Fishery Regulations (see 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79), applied to the Admiralty for instructions as to whether the Fishery Regulations respecting territorial limits apply to the Ecréhos (meaning, probably, Article 85 above referred to), and, if so, whether it was desirable to enforce them.

Complaint of the French Government against the Act prohibiting to French fishermen access to the Ecréhos.

Projet de Loi explained to be merely a Petition from Jersey fishermen.

This inquiry was prompted by a complaint he had received from the Customs authorities of Jersey that the Ecréhos were made a smuggling depôt by French fishing-boats. A correspondence ensued between the Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey, the Admiralty, the Home Office, the Foreign Office, and Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris, which resulted in a decision by Her Majesty's Government "that the existing state of things at the Ecréhos was to be left undisturbed, apart from any steps which it might be necessary to take to protect the revenue of the Channel Islands." Such was the position of the case in 1881. On the 25th April last the French Ambassador in London addressed a letter to Earl Granville (document J) complaining that the States of Jersey were about to pass an Act prohibiting to French fishermen access to the Ecréhos, in violation of the existing usage and of the Fishery Convention of 1839, and expressing the hope that Her Majesty's Government would recognize the justice of the protest of the French Government, and take steps to prevent any disturbance of the existing state of things. The letter contains various statements which are clearly inaccurate, as will presently be shown, but it does not raise the question of the title of Great Britain to those islets, resting the French case on the Convention of 1839, and on the words of Article II, which defines the limits of the exclusive British oyster fishery to "3 miles from the Island of Jersey," whereas the Ecréhos are beyond that limit. It is hardly necessary, however, to point out that Article II applies solely to the oyster fishery, and not to the general right of fishery. The letter makes allusion to the terms of the new Convention of 1867, under which the exclusive British fishery is expressly fixed at 3 miles from the coast of Jersey and its dependencies, and deprecates any argument being drawn in favour of Her Majesty's Government from this difference in the text of the two Conventions, thereby admitting by implication that the Ecréhos are a dependency of Jersey. The letter of the French Ambassador was referred, through the Home Office, to the Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey, whose Report thereon will be found in his letter of the 16th May last (document K), together with a Report by the Law Officers of the Island, commenting on the letter of M. Tissot, and explaining that the Projet de Loi referred to by his Excellency was merely a Petition presented by the Jersey fishermen to the States, praying that steps may be taken to prevent French fishermen from fishing in the waters of the Ecréhos contrary to the Convention of 1839.

Petition to the Queen from the States of Jersey.

In a further letter, dated the 21st May, 1883 (document L), the Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey transmitted a printed copy of the Petition, and also of a Petition from the States to Her Majesty the Queen in Council to the same effect, and reported a very recent instance of aggression by French fishermen on the Ecréhos.

1883

Further complaint of the French Government against the Projet de Loi voted by the States of Jersey.

On the 26th ultimo the French Ambassador addressed a further letter to Lord Granville (document M), complaining that since the date of his previous communication the Projet de Loi had been voted by the States of Jersey, and reiterated the hope that Her Majesty's Government would not permit a departure from the status quo which they had maintained in 1881 against similar attempts on the part of the inhabitants of Jersey to disturb it.

French Government suggest that the Ecréhos are neutral territory.

In this letter his Excellency insists on the rights claimed by France under the Convention of 1839, and on the illegality of the proposed measure, which, he states, tends to ignore the character of neutrality impliedly imposed on those islets by the Conventions concluded between Great Britain and France. This letter for the first time suggests that the Ecréhos are neutral territory, a proposition which has no foundation whatever in any Convention or correspondence between the two Governments.

The questions which arise in this case are the following:—

Title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos.

1. Is the title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos Islets, as dependencies of Jersey, sufficiently established by the evidence furnished in the accompanying papers to justify Her Majesty's Government in maintaining the British right of sovereignty thereto?

Right of French fishermen to the oyster fishery or the general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos.

2. Assuming the British right of sovereignty to be established, are French fishermen entitled to participate either in the oyster fishery or in the general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos Islets, having regard to the provisions of the Convention of 1839; to Article 85 of the Regulations agreed to by the French Government, and contained in the Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79; and to Article XXXVIII of the Convention of 1867, for the purposes of interpretation.

Documents showing that the Ecréhos are British territory.

As regards the first question, I am to refer you to the Reports furnished by the Principal Officer of Customs and the Attorney-General of Jersey in 1876 (document N), as well as to the four printed Memoranda before mentioned (documents F, G, H, and I), which would appear to show conclusively that the Ecréhos are British territory.

French arguments respecting the three distinct "zones," and the limit of the British zone being fixed at 3 miles from the Island of Jersey, and not 3 miles from British territory.

As regards the second question, it is to be observed that the French Ambassador, in his letter of the 25th April (document J), argues that the question must be governed solely by the terms of the Convention of 1839; that three distinct "zones" were established by Articles I, II, and III of the Convention of 1839, the first reserved exclusively to French fishermen, the second to British fishermen, and the third intermediate zone to the fishermen of both countries; that, apart from any territorial question, the fishery in the intermediate zone was, by Article III of the Convention, declared to be common to the subjects of both countries; and that the limit of the British zone being fixed by Article II at 3 miles from the Island of Jersey (and not 3 miles from British territory), the Ecréhos are within the common fishery.

His Excellency further argues that, if the limit of the British zone were taken at 3 miles from the Ecréhos, it would entirely absorb in that locality the intermediate zone provided for in Article III of the Convention.

Limit of 3 miles from the Ecréhos would not absorb the intermediate zone.

It is manifest that the above arguments, so far as they may have any weight, can apply only to the oyster fishery, the limits of which are, as stated by his Excellency, regulated by Articles I, II, and III of the Convention. But the limits of the general fishery are regulated by Article IX, and the British limit, within which British fishermen have the exclusive right of fishery, is fixed by that Article at "3 miles from low-water mark along the whole extent of the coasts of the British Islands." Moreover, it is not the fact that the limit of 3 miles from the Ecréhos would, as stated by his Excellency, absorb the intermediate zone, as those islets are situated about 5¾ miles from the coast of Jersey, and 8¼ miles from the coast of France.

British limits of the oyster fishery.

Argument in favour of the exclusive general right of fishery for British fishermen within 3 miles from the Ecréhos.

In view of the marked distinction in the terms used in Articles II and IX of the Convention for defining the British limits of the oyster fishery and of the general fishery respectively, it may be difficult to contend that the limit of the British oyster fishery extends beyond 3 miles from the Island of Jersey; but if that limit for the oyster fishery be conceded, the result will be of no practical importance, as Lord Granville is informed that the oyster fishery is not carried on at the Ecréhos; and it would afford a strong argument in support of the contention that, under Article IX, the general right of fishery is reserved exclusively for British fishermen to a distance of 3 miles from the Ecréhos.

Statement in the procès-verbal of the second sitting of the Fishery Commission.

The French Ambassador refers in his letter to the procès-verbal of the second sitting of the Fishery Commission which drew up the new Convention of 1867, and draws an inference in favour of his argument from the statement found therein that Articles II and III of the Convention of 1839 had become useless, in view of the general principle established by Article I of the new Convention. But that Article abolished all distinction between the oyster fishery and the general fishery, and fixed the limit of 3 miles from the coast of France and of the British Islands respectively for all kinds of fishery, and the inference to be drawn from the word "unnecessary" would seem rather to be that Articles II and III of the Convention of 1839 were considered unnecessary because their real meaning and effect was practically carried out by Article I of the new Convention.

Question whether the Ecréhos are in the "mer commune" or within the exclusive British fishery limits depends on the construction of the Convention of 1839, and cannot be solved by reference to the Chart attached thereto.

His Excellency further argues that no change was made by the Commission of 1866 in the Chart attached to the Convention of 1839, and that in that Chart the Ecréhos are comprised "dans la mer commune."

But a reference to the Chart will show that the lines drawn thereon apply only to the French oyster fishery, and that the question whether the Ecréhos are in the "mer commune," or within the exclusive British fishery limits, cannot, unfortunately, be solved by reference to the Chart, but depends entirely on the construction of the Convention.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Granville with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter and with any general observations which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

[After recapitulation of the above Reference, the Law Officers report as follows:—]

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos is sufficiently established by the evidence.

That we think the title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos Islets, as dependencies of Jersey, is sufficiently established by the evidence furnished in the accompanying papers to justify Her Majesty's Government in maintaining the British right of sovereignty thereto.

Right of French fishermen to the oyster fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos is open to contention.

2. We think it is open to contention that French fishermen are entitled to participate in the oyster fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos Islets, having regard to the provisions of the Convention of 1839. We think it was probably not the intention of the Convention to confer or acknowledge this right, but looking at the language used in Articles II and III of the Convention, as compared with Article IX, the argument in favour of the right is a forcible one.

French fishermen are not entitled to the general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos.

We do not think that French fishermen are entitled to participate in the general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos Islets. The terms of Article IX appear to us, on the assumption that these islets are British territory, expressly to give the exclusive right within these waters to the subjects of Her Majesty.

French claim to the neutrality of these waters.

The French Ambassador seems to base his claim to the neutrality of these waters entirely upon the construction of the Convention of 1839. The later Convention certainly does not assist his contention.

The practice with regard to fishing within 3 miles of the islets should be ascertained.

It may be important to ascertain what has been the practice with regard to fishing within 3 miles of the islets. The French Ambassador assumes, apparently, that the French fishermen have always, in fact, exercised the privilege, and that it is now attempted to deprive them of what they have always heretofore enjoyed, and the correctness of this statement should be ascertained.

My Lord,

Prohibition of import of arms into Annam.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th August, 1883, stating that he had, by direction of your Lordship, to transmit to us therewith a letter from the French Ambassador at this Court* referring to the importation of arms and munitions of war into Annam, in connection with the military operations undertaken by France in Tonquin, and stating that the Commanders of the French naval forces had been instructed to exercise a strict surveillance in the Gulf of Tonquin, and to search all suspected vessels which might approach the Annamite ports; whilst all vessels attempting to land arms, or to break through the blockade, after due notification that such traffic was interdicted, should be liable to seizure.

1883

That reference was made in the French Ambassador's note to the Treaty of Commerce between France and Annam of the 31st August, 1874,† which stated, in Article II, "cependant, les armes et les munitions de guerre ne pourront être ni importées ni exportées par le commerce;" whilst Article XV contained stipulations in regard to the penalties attached to the illicit importation of arms into Annam, including seizure of the vessel in certain circumstances.

French request for publication of notice.

That we would observe that the French Ambassador requested that the necessary orders might be given for notifying to the owners and captains of British merchant-vessels the temporary prohibition of the importation of arms on the coast of Annam.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote annexed a copy of a Notification which was inserted in the "London Gazette" of the 10th April, 1863, of a Turkish Ordinance prohibiting the importation of arms and munitions of war into the Turkish Empire; and Sir Julian was to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer in regard to M. Waddington's note, and with our opinion whether, on the present occasion, it would be the proper course to publish a translation of that document in the "London Gazette."

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose copies of a correspondence‡ on that subject between the French Government and the Chinese Minister, which had been privately communicated to your Lordship by the Marquis Tsêng, from which we would perceive that the intention of the French Government was therein explained, and they declared that their object was not only to enforce the stipulation of the Treaty as regarded the prohibition of the importation of munitions of war, but also to establish a belligerent blockade within the meaning and conditions of the Declaration of Paris of the 16th April, 1856.§ No mention was made of a blockade jure gentium in the letter of M. Waddington to your Lordship, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was further to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinions whether, in view of the unusual character of that Notification, and of the particular circumstances of the case, inquiry should be made whether the interdict which they had issued was in the exercise of belligerent rights, and was to be enforced by an effective blockade within the meaning of the Declaration of Paris. Assuming that the provisions of the Treaty between France and Annam relating to munitions could properly be enforced by France against foreign nations, it would seem that the Treaty was suspended by the fact of the war.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should inquire as to nature of interdict and as to its enforcement.

That we think inquiries should be made as to the nature of the interdict which has been issued, and whether it is to be enforced by an effective blockade within the meaning of the Declaration of Paris.

France entitled, assuming a state of war, to stop import of arms without a blockade.

If it be intended so to blockade the ports of Annam, we think a public notification of the fact should at once be given. Even if no such blockade be intended, the French would be entitled, assuming a state of war to exist, to seize as contraband of war all munitions of war intended for the enemy; and persons shipping such munitions, and forwarding them to Annam, would do so at their own risk. But we are somewhat embarrassed by the fact that we do not quite understand in what light the military operations now proceeding are to be regarded.

Difficulty as to nature of French operations, and their effect on validity of French Treaty.

M. Waddington in his letter speaks of the French Government having occupied Tonquin to re-establish order there, and refers to the forces "of the rebels against whom it is fighting;" and it would rather seem as though the French Government were purporting to enforce, on the part of the Government of Annam, the provisions of the Treaty of the 31st August, 1874, prohibiting the importation of munitions of war. We do not see in what other view France could insist, as regards third nations, upon such a stipulation in a Treaty of Commerce, which could obviously have never been intended to operate as against Annam when the two nations who were parties to it were at war.

We think this affords additional ground for further inquiry from the French Ambassador, in order that the position taken up by the French Government may be more clearly defined.

M. le Chargé d'Affaires, Foreign Office, September , 1883.

French request for notification of interdict to British vessels.

IN my note of the 27th ultimo I had the honour to acknowledge the receipt of M. Waddington's communication of the 9th of the same month, in which his Excellency acquainted me with certain measures that have been adopted by the French Government to prevent the importation of arms and munitions of war into Annamese territory, and requested that the necessary orders might be given for notifying the temporary prohibition of such commerce on the coast of Annam, to the owners and captains of British merchant-vessels.

I hasten to assure you that Her Majesty's Government have not failed to give this matter their attentive consideration. But before issuing directions in the sense desired by the French Government, I desire to lay before you the following observations, which are occasioned by the particular circumstances of the case, and by the somewhat unusual character of the notification suggested.

Doubts as to character of interdict.

M. Waddington states that the Commanders of the French naval forces have been instructed to exercise a strict surveillance in the Gulf of Tonquin, and to search all suspected vessels that may approach the Annamese ports, and his Excellency adds that all such vessels as may attempt to land their cargo or to break the line of blockade after having been separately notified of the interdict placed on the commerce in arms, would be held liable to seizure.

His Excellency proceeds to refer to the Treaty of Commerce concluded in 1874* between France and Annam, pointing out that whilst its object was to open certain ports to foreign commerce without distinction of nationality, yet it formally provides (by Article II) that "les armes et les munitions de guerre ne pourront être ni importées ni exportées par le commerce," and his Excellency then states that the French Commissary at Tonquin, and the Commander of the French squadron, have been ordered to take steps for insuring the strict observance of the said clause.

The above statement of the circumstances of the case causes Her Majesty's Government some embarrassment, as they do not fully understand in what light the military operations now proceeding are to be regarded.

His Excellency speaks in his note of the French Government having occupied Tonquin to re-establish order there, and he refers to the "forces of the rebels against whom it is fighting."

No mention is made of a blockade jure gentium, and it would rather seem as though the French Government were purporting to enforce on the part of the Government of Annam the provisions of the Treaty of the 31st August, 1874, prohibiting the importation of munitions of war. Her Majesty's Government do not see in what other view France could insist as regards third parties upon such a stipulation in a Treaty of Commerce, which could obviously never have been intended to operate as against Annam when the two nations who were parties to it were at war.

Is it to be enforced by an effective blockade?

Under such circumstances, Her Majesty's Government hope that the position taken up by the French Government may be more clearly defined, and they would accordingly be glad to learn the nature of the interdict which has been issued, and whether it is to be enforced by an effective blockade within the meaning of the Declaration of Paris of the 16th April, 1856.

If so, a notification will be issued.

I have the honour to add that if it be intended so to blockade the ports of Annam, Her Majesty's Government would be prepared at once to issue a public notification of the fact.

Title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos as dependencies of Jersey, and claims of French fishermen to fish within 3 miles of them.

Proposed reply to the French Ambassador.

Draft of Despatch from Earl Granville to M. Waddington.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Foreign Office, , 1883.

Claims of French fishermen to fish within 3 miles of the Ecréhos.

SINCE I had the honour to acknowledge the receipt of M. Tissot's notes of the 25th April and 26th May last on the subject of the claim of French fishermen, under the Convention of 1839, to fish within 3 miles of the islets called the Ecréhos, near Jersey, Her Majesty's Government have very fully considered the representations of the French Government therein contained, and I have now the honour to communicate to your Excellency the conclusions at which they have arrived.

Alleged Act prohibiting to French fishermen access to the Ecréhos was only a Petition from Jersey fishermen.

In the first of M. Tissot's communications above referred to, complaint was made that the States of Jersey were about to pass an Act prohibiting to French fishermen access to the Ecréhos, in violation of the existing usage, and of the Fishery Convention of 1839; and the hope was expressed that Her Majesty's Government would recognize the justice of the protest of the French Government, and take steps to prevent any disturbance of the existing state of things.

Before proceeding further, I desire to correct a misapprehension which appears to have arisen as to this supposed legislative measure of the States of Jersey. It was not a "Projet de Loi" in the sense understood by M. Tissot, but only a Petition presented to the States by the Jersey fishermen, praying that steps might be taken to protect the exclusive right of fishery which they claim within 3 miles of the Ecréhos under the Convention of 1839.

In his second letter of the 26th May M. Tissot, while complaining that the supposed "Projet de Loi" had been since voted by the States of Jersey, reiterates the hope that Her Majesty's Government will not permit a departure from the status quo of 1881, which Her Majesty's Government had then decided conditionally to leave undisturbed.

No foundation for the suggestion that the Ecréhos are neutral territory.

His Excellency insisted on the character of neutrality which he held to be impliedly imposed on the Ecréhos by the Conventions between the two countries, thus suggesting for the first time the fact that those islets are neutral territory, a proposition which I may be permitted to observe has no foundation in any Convention or correspondence between the two Governments.

Right of the British Crown to the sovereignty of the Ecréhos.

I can hardly believe, M. l'Ambassadeur, that M. Tissot intended seriously to call in question the right of the British Crown to the sovereignty of the Ecréhos. Those islets have always been treated as a dependency of Jersey; the soil belongs entirely to Jerseymen—chiefly fishermen who have dwellings and own small tracts of land there —and the islets for administrative purposes form part of the Parish of St. Martin's, in the Island of Jersey.

Treasury Order declaring the Ecréhos to be comprised within the limits of the port of Jersey.

Moreover, when, in October 1875, as stated by M. Tissot, the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury issued an Order constituting the Island of Jersey a Channel port, and mentioning the Ecréhos as being included in the limits of that port, the Earl of Derby, then Secretary of State for this Department, in reply to a representation from the French Ambassador on this subject, and after consultation with the Law Advisers of the Crown, furnished his Excellency with a statement of facts which, in the view of Her Majesty's Government, presented conclusive evidence of the title of the British Crown to the Ecréhos as dependencies of Jersey, and those statements the French Government did not attempt to controvert.

Not necessary to discuss the question of sovereignty, but only the right of French fishermen to fish within 3 miles.

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, do not consider it necessary to discuss the question of the sovereignty of Great Britain over those islets; and the only question which arises is whether, the Ecréhos being British territory, French fishermen are entitled, under the terms of the Convention of 1839, to participate either in the oyster fishery or in the general fishery within 3 miles of those islets.

French arguments respecting the three "zones," and the limit of the British zone being fixed at 3 miles from the Island of Jersey, and not 3 miles from the Ecréhos.

M. Tissot, in his letter of the 25th April, argues that the question must be governed solely by the terms of the Convention of 1839; that three distinct "zones" were established by Articles I, II, and III of that Convention, the first being reserved exclusively to French fishermen, the second to British fishermen, and the third, or intermediate zone, to the fishermen of both countries; that, apart from any territorial question, the fishery in the intermediate zone was, by Article III of the Convention, declared to be common to the subjects of both countries; that the limits of the British zone are fixed by Article II at 3 miles from the Island of Jersey, and not at 3 miles from the Ecréhos; and that, the latter islets being more than 3 miles from Jersey, they are within the intermediate zone, and therefore within the common fishery.

M. Tissot further argues that if the limit of the British zone were taken at 3 miles from the Ecréhos, instead of 3 miles from Jersey, it would entirely absorb in that locality the intermediate zone provided for in Article III of the Convention.

Above arguments can only apply to the oyster fishery.

It is manifest that the above arguments cannot apply to the general fishery, but only to the oyster fishery, the limits of which are, as stated by M. Tissot, regulated by Articles I, II, and III of the Convention; and that even if the French claim were admitted as regards the oyster fishery, it would be clearly untenable as regards the general fishery, for the limits of the general fishery are regulated by Article IX of the Convention, and the British limit within which British fishermen have the exclusive right of fishery is fixed by that Article at 3 miles from low-water mark, not "from the Island of Jersey," but "along the whole extent of the coasts of the British Islands."

Provisions in Article 65 of the Fishery Regulations of May 1843.

I may observe also that Article 65 of the Fishery Regulations agreed to by the British and French Governments in May 1843 (and which are carried into effect, so far as British cruizers are concerned, by the Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 79, sec. 18) provides that "the Commanders of cruizers of both countries shall exercise their judgment as to the causes of any transgressions committed by British or French fishing-boats in the seas where the said boats had the right to fish in common," and that Article 85 of those Regulations enacts that "the fishing-boats of the one country shall not approach nearer to any part of the coasts of the other country than the limit of 3 miles specified in Article IX" of the Convention of 1839.

British and French zones do not overlap.

These very positive and unambiguous declarations could not be affected by the circumstance that the British and French zones described in M. Tissot's letter happened, at one particular point, to overlap one another. But his Excellency would seem to be in error as to the fact, as the Ecréhos are situated about $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles from the coast of Jersey, and $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles from the coast of France; consequently the zones could not overlap.

Convention of 1867.

In the same letter M. Tissot refers to the Fishery Convention of 1867, which has not yet come into operation, and the terms of which are rendered still more precise and conclusive by the definition given in Article XXXVIII of the words "British Islands" as including the Islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark, and Man, "with their dependencies." His Excellency deprecates any argument being drawn from that provision adverse to the French claim; but it would be impossible, in the discussion of this question, to leave out of consideration the terms of the Convention of 1867, which did not purport to make any change in the fishery limits, and must be considered, therefore, as containing a more precise exposition of the meaning of the Convention of 1839 as regards the limits of the general right of fishery reserved to each nation. Indeed, as observed by M. Tissot, the British and French Commissioners in 1866 declared that there was no occasion to make any alteration in the Chart attached to the Convention of 1839. With reference to this Chart, however, his Excellency states that it reproduces as precisely as possible the limits of the British and French "zones," and notably those of the intermediate zone; but a reference to the Chart will show that the only limits delineated on it are those of the French oyster fishery, that is to say, the French zone. Neither the British zone nor the intermediate zone are delineated on the Chart, and therefore the question whether the Ecréhos are in the "mer commune," or within the exclusive British fishery limits, cannot be solved by reference to the Chart, but depends entirely on the construction of the Convention.

Question whether the Ecréhos are in the "mer commune" or within the exclusive British fishery limits depends on the construction of the Convention of 1839, and cannot be solved by reference to the Chart.

Intention of the Contracting Parties with regard to the oyster fishery the same in 1839 as it was in 1867.

As regards the oyster fishery, Her Majesty's Government consider the words in Article II of the Convention of 1839, "within 3 miles of the Island of Jersey," should be construed as indicated in Article XXXVIII of the Convention of 1867, that is to say, as including the Ecréhos, which are "dependencies" of Jersey. It appears to them that, notwithstanding the language used in Articles II and III of the Convention of 1839, as compared with that of Article IX, the intention of the High Contracting Parties on this point was precisely the same in 1839 as it was in 1867.

No doubt as to the right of general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos being reserved exclusively to British subjects.

As regards the right of general fishery within 3 miles of the Ecréhos, Her Majesty's Government consider that the terms of Article IX of the Convention of 1839, and of the Fishery Regulations above referred to, admit of no doubt as to its being reserved exclusively to British subjects. The claim of French fishermen to participate in it appears to put in question the sovereignty of Great Britain over those islets, and I trust, therefore, M. l'Ambassadeur, that your Government will appreciate the difficulty felt by Her Majesty's Government in making any concession on this point consistently with the territorial rights of this country.

Privileges of mail-packets plying between British and French ports.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 15th September, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the status of British and French steam-ships chartered or subsidized by the British or French Governments to carry letters, and plying between British and French ports.

Mr. Rothery concedes them only to packets plying between Dover and Calais.

That we would observe that Mr. Rothery, the Registrar of the Court of Admiralty, was of opinion that the privileges of men-of-war mentioned in Article V of the Convention were to be conceded only to the steam-ships performing the postal service between Dover and Calais, as any other interpretation would grant those privileges to all steamers receiving a postal subsidy from either Government, and plying between any ports of the British and French dominions—a result which Mr. Rothery did not consider to have been in the contemplation of the Parties to the Convention.

Court of Hong Kong to packets between Great Britain and France.

That the Supreme Court of Hong Kong was also of opinion that the privileges of men-of-war were confined under the Convention to the packets "employed by either Government in carrying mails between the two countries—Great Britain and France."

Law Officers, in 1872, to French packets touching at Hong Kong.

That in 1872, however, the Law Officers of the Crown, who were consulted on the point by the Colonial Office, did not concur in Mr. Rothery's opinion, and advised that the privileges in question were conceded to a steamer subsidized by the French Government, and plying between Marseilles and Shanghae, and touching at Hong Kong.

That Her Majesty's Government had acted on that view of the Postal Convention, but that the Judgment of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong had reopened the question, and as it was desired, if possible, to obtain the abrogation or a modification of Article V of the Convention (as to which we were referred to Print, No. 76, p. 66), that Mr. Lister was to request us to take the papers transmitted to us into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the privileges and exemptions mentioned in Article V of the Convention could be claimed by steam-ships other than those performing the postal service between Dover and Calais, or between Great Britain and France, and with any observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Do not differ from opinion of Law Officers in 1872.

That we are not prepared to differ from the view taken by the Law Officers in 1872, though the other view, viz., that Article II refers only to alternative routes between England and France, is susceptible of argument, and we do not feel that the point is free from doubt.

Must adhere to interpretation of Convention adopted in 1869.

If it be the fact, as stated in Comte de Montebello's letter of the 25th June, 1880 (see p. 22), that the interpretation of the Convention accepted by the French Government is the same as that stated in a letter written by Lord Clarendon to the French Ambassador on the 12th May, 1869, it would seem difficult to contend for any other construction now.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received November 29.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, November 27, 1883.

Intestate estate of J. Halpin.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers* relating to an inquiry made by the French authorities at Havre as to the English law applicable to the distribution of the estate of John Halpin, a British subject deceased, at Rouen, in April last, together with a Report thereon by the Treasury Solicitor, who raised the question whether, having regard to the principle of the decision in Simonin v. Mallac, and other cases, the illegitimate children of John Halpin were not legitimized by his subsequent marriage at the British Consulate at Rouen.

That your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether it was necessary to express any opinion on that point, or whether it would suffice, in reply to the inquiry, to state that, by the Statute of Distributions, where a man died intestate leaving a widow and children, the widow is entitled to one-third of his personalty, and his children to the remainder in equal shares.

* Consul Bernal, No. 37, September 26; to Treasury, October 4; Treasury, October 18, 1883.

1883

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Sufficient to state law as to distribution apart from question of legitimacy of children.

That we concur in thinking that Mr. Consul Bernal might be informed that, apart from any question of legitimacy, the English law provides that in case of the death of an intestate leaving a widow and children, the widow is entitled to one-third of his personalty, and his children to the remainder in equal shares.

Prohibition of import of arms, &c., into Annam, and search of neutral vessels.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that, upon the receipt of our Report of the 6th September last on the subject of the letter from the French Ambassador at this Court of the 9th August, referring to the importation of arms and munitions of war into Annam, and the instructions issued to the Commanders of the French naval forces to exercise a strict surveillance and to search all suspected vessels which might approach the Annamite ports, the French Chargé d'Affaires was, in accordance with our recommendation, requested to furnish a further explanation as to the nature of the position taken up by the French Government in its operations against Annam, and also as to the nature and extent of the interdict in regard to the importation of munitions of war.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote inclosed the letter to Count d'Aunay to which he had referred, and his reply.*

Uncertainty as to establishment of a blockade, jure gentium.

That M. Waddington's note of the 9th August, and our Report† thereon, were also annexed. That it would be observed in Count d'Aunay's note of the 10th October it was stated that no blockade would be established, except under the conditions laid down in the Declaration of Paris. That it was not clear from that that a blockade, jure gentium, had been, or was intended to be, established. That it would rather appear from the two French notes that the right which was claimed, and intended to be exercised, was to search vessels suspected of carrying contraband of war to Annamese ports, under the usual belligerent right conceded by the law of nations, and also to enforce on neutral vessels the prohibition against the importation of munitions of war, agreed to in the Treaty of 1874 between France and Annam.

That, as regarded the exercise of the belligerent right, no notification would appear necessary, and that, as regarded the claim to enforce on neutral vessels the provisions of the Treaty of 1874 respecting munitions of war, your Lordship gathered from our previous Report that it should not be admitted.

That under these circumstances it seemed doubtful whether any notification was expedient, at all events without a further reference to the French Government, in order to ascertain whether a blockade, jure gentium, under the conditions of the Declaration of Paris, had been established, and, if so, from what date.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was further to annex an extract from the "Journal Officiel" of the 31st October, in which we would find, marked, that portion of a speech of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs which treated of the matter now under consideration.

That we were requested to favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued under the circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Notification of doubtful expediency.

That we concur in thinking it doubtful whether any notification is expedient.

No notification appears necessary of the intention, if the claim be to exercise the belligerent right of preventing the import of munitions of war into hostile territory.

Refuse French claim to enforce Treaty of 1874 as to neutral vessels.

We think that the claim to enforce, as against the vessels of third nations, in the manner proposed, the provisions of the Treaty of 1874, should not be admitted, and that this should be intimated to the French Government.

Codification of private international law.

Italian proposal.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit a note from the Italian Ambassador at this Court,* inquiring the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in regard to certain proposals that had been made by the Italian Government with a view to the codification, by Convention, of private international law, together with a Mémoire of the Italian negotiations upon the subject.

That our views were requested as to the reply which should be returned to the Italian Ambassador.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Codification advantageous, but difficult.

Answer depends on intentions of Her Majesty's Government as to negotiations.

That we have some difficulty in making any suggestion as to the reply which should be returned to the Italian Ambassador, inasmuch as the question is entirely one of policy. The codification of private international law, if it could be accomplished, would no doubt be of considerable advantage. But it would be a work involving no little difficulty. The answer to be returned to the Italian Ambassador must depend upon whether Her Majesty's Government are disposed to enter into negotiations with a view to the codification proposed by the Italian Government.

My Lord, Temple, February 28, 1883.

Protection of submarine telegraph cables.

Draft of proposed Treaty.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion on the draft of a proposed Treaty for the protection of submarine telegraph cables.

That the different Governments concerned having come to the conclusion that it was advisable to consider the expediency of adopting measures more effectual for that purpose than could be taken under existing Treaties and legislation, a Conference was held at Paris on the subject last October, the proceedings of which were set forth in the volume of procès-verbaux inclosed,† and in the copy of the Report of the British Delegates. That it would be seen (pp. 179–187 of the procès-verbaux) that the Conference drew up and submitted to the Governments represented the draft of a Convention to secure the maintenance of telegraphic communication by means of submarine cables. That that draft had been considered in consultation with the different Departments concerned, and that your Lordship now desired to refer it to us.

That the Articles to which our attention was more particularly requested were Nos. VIII, IX, and X, to which, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, the British Delegates at the Conference took exception when they were proposed to and adopted by the Conference. That, taking Articles VIII and X together, it would seem that, under the circumstances of the discussion recorded in the procès-verbaux (pp. 155–162), Her Majesty's Government might accept Article VIII, provided more definite provisions were substituted for the present wording of Article X, which as it now stood appeared to be incomplete. That it should be stated, however, that the Board of Trade* were willing to accept Articles VIII and X as now drafted, but that the Colonial Office† pointed out that that latter Article required modification. That a new version of that Article had accordingly been drafted with the view to give effect to the remarks of the Colonial Office and the statements of the British Delegates at the Conference at Paris, and that that new version was submitted for our opinion. That it was founded, as would be seen, on Articles XXIX, XXX, and XXXI of the Convention relative to the police of the North Sea fisheries signed at the Hague on the 6th May last, but not yet ratified, for which we were referred to Blue Book "Commercial No. 24," pp. 168, 169, which was inclosed.

That, as regarded Article IX of the proposed Convention for the protection of submarine telegraphs, the opinion of the Departments more immediately concerned with its provisions, viz., the Post Office‡ and the Board of Trade, was that it should either be expunged entirely from the draft of Convention, or else that its application should be made optional in each country party to the Convention.

That copies of letters from the Departments concerned, giving their views on the above-mentioned points, were inclosed, together with two letters in which the Board of Trade§ forwarded statements respecting the provisions of English law with regard to injuries to submarine telegraph cables.

Draft of Additional Article as to Treaty taking effect only in time of peace.

That Mr. Lister was further to submit to us the draft of an Additional Article, which appeared to be necessary in order to carry out the understanding arrived at, that the Convention should only take effect in time of peace. That that Article would enable any Power to withdraw from it if engaged in war.

That it would further appear desirable, in the communication to the Powers in which the assent of Her Majesty's Government to the proposed Convention was given, to call attention to the necessity of providing, by legislation in each country (where such provision might not already exist), for the punishment of offenders breaking or causing injury to a submarine cable within foreign territorial waters, and escaping from those waters before means could be taken to bring them to justice in the territorial Courts.

That, as the proposed Convention was limited exclusively to offences committed beyond territorial waters, it was conceived that that subject might more properly be dealt with by a separate arrangement among the Powers.

That in transmitting to us these papers Mr. Lister was to request that we would be so good as to favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with such observations as we might have to offer on the draft of the proposed Convention, and the amended Article X, and the Additional Article respecting the power to withdraw in time of war, and proposed arrangement respecting the punishment of offences committed within territorial waters, more especially as regarded the new legislation which might be required in this country to give them effect.

We were also honoured with your Lordship's further commands contained in a letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 3rd instant, stating that, with reference to the letter from your Lordship's Department of the 24th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Italian Ambassador at this Court‖ containing observations on the part of the Italian Government on Articles X and XII of the proposed Convention for the protection of submarine telegraph cables.

That, as regarded Article X, an amended version of which was submitted for our consideration in the above-mentioned letter of the 24th ultimo, we would observe that the Italian Government proposed that the procès-verbaux referred to in the Article drawn up by naval officers should be "authenticated in such a way as to make it quite clear that the reporting Commander had been specially deputed for the purpose, so that the document should have the value of evidence in Court." That it was to be remarked, however, that naval officers would seldom be "specially deputed" to attend to the protection of submarine telegraph cables, and that the preferable course might be, as seemed to be contemplated in Article X, to confer the powers to be exercised under that Article in general terms on officers commanding the ships of war, or ships specially commissioned for the purpose, of the Powers parties to the Convention.

That, as regarded Article XII, it would appear that the Italian Government thought it advisable that "common rules should be adopted by the several Contracting Governments" with respect to the penalties to be imposed under the provisions of that Article.

That it was to be observed, however, on that proposition, that while advantage would arise from an interchange of views on the subject, in order to establish some degree of uniformity of treatment, it would hardly be practicable to establish by Treaty definite and precise punishment for each offence. That the Treaty would provide in general terms that the penalty should be fine or imprisonment, or both, and that the Powers might, with advantage, discuss details under that general provision, to be kept in view in legislation necessary to give effect to the Convention, but that it would hardly be possible in an arrangement of that nature, to which many Powers might be parties, to make full and complete provisions for punishment of offences, and that much, it would seem, must be left to the legislation and the Courts of each nation.

That, in transmitting the note (which was inclosed), together with the foregoing observations, for our consideration, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the points thus raised, with our Report on the subject generally, as stated to us in Mr. Lister's letter of the 24th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the views taken by the other Powers represented at the Conference, it does not seem likely that any arrangement more satisfactory than that contained in Article VIII would be agreed to.

Opinion on Articles VIII, IX, and X.

That, as regards Article IX, we would observe that its meaning is not very clear. If the Article is confined to proceedings taken for the purpose of enforcing penalties of some kind for offences against, or contraventions of, the Convention, there would not seem to be any great objection to providing that such proceedings should be by the State or in its name. This does not appear necessarily to impose upon the State the costs of such proceedings, or the obligation to initiate them. We are not clear that the language used would include the case of a claim by a person injured under Article VII, though possibly the non-payment of a sum claimed under that Article might be deemed a contravention of the Convention, and so within Article IX.

If the Article were confined to what we should term prosecutions, viz., the enforcement of a penalty for an offence, there would seem to be considerable ground for throwing the obligation upon the Contracting States if the Convention is to be made really effective.

We are not quite sure that we understand the purpose of the proposed Article X, so far as regards its operation in this country. The Article, as it at present stands in the Convention, does not provide that the procès-verbaux, taken as prescribed therein, are to be used as evidence before the Tribunals of any of the Contracting Parties in support of proceedings instituted for an offence against the Convention. And this is not provided for in the proposed Article.

Is it intended that these procès-verbaux are to be used as evidence before the Tribunals of this country? Unless it is, we do not see much advantage in the variations with respect to them between Article X of the Convention and the proposed Article. If the idea is that these procès-verbaux should be made available as evidence before any Tribunal, this could only be accomplished by legislation, and we doubt very much whether the Legislature could be induced to go the length of enacting that all procès-verbaux, taken under the conditions prescribed by the proposed Article, should be admissible in evidence.

We doubt, too, whether the Legislature would be prepared to give the somewhat arbitrary and serious powers which are conferred upon vessels of war by the provisions of the proposed Article, which not only gives an extensive right of search, but enables a vessel or its crew, if believed guilty of an offence against the Convention, to be forcibly taken into port. For the prevention of some offences the Legislature might be prepared to give such powers, but we are not satisfied that it would be willing to do so merely for the purpose of protecting submarine cables.

We agree in thinking that the question of the punishment of those offending within territorial waters had better be dealt with separately.

We think that legislation would be necessary in this country for the purpose of making the offence described in Article II of the Convention a punishable offence in this country, whether committed within or without territorial waters.

Injuring a submarine cable by "culpable negligence" is not at the present time an offence, but only renders the person guilty of it liable to an action for damages. "Wilful" injury to a cable, if occurring in this country, would probably be in general within the provisions of the Acts providing against malicious injury to property. But as legislation will be necessary, both heads of the offence should be treated alike, and comprised in one enactment.

Proposed modification of Additional Article.

We would suggest a modification of the proposed Additional Article I. It might, we think, perhaps be better to frame it as follows:—

"The High Contracting Parties further agree that the present Convention shall not be obligatory as regards any Power if and whilst it is engaged in war, provided that notice has been given by such Power to the other Powers of its withdrawal during the time of such war.

"The Convention shall remain," &c. (as in draft submitted to us).

Without some such change in the wording, the Convention would not revive at the conclusion of the war, and we gather that it is only during a time of war that it is desired that the Convention should not operate.

With regard to the points raised by the Italian Government which are communicated to us in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 3rd February, we concur in the view suggested upon those points in his letter, and have no further observations to add thereon.

(New.) ARTICLE X.

LORSQUE les officiers commandant les bâtiments de guerre ou les bâtiments spécialement commissionnés à cet effet de l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes ont lieu de croire qu'une infraction aux mesures prévues par la présente Convention a été commise, ils peuvent exiger du patron du navire auquel une contravention est ainsi imputée d'exhiber la pièce officielle justifiant de sa nationalité. Mention sommaire de cette exhibition est faite immédiatement sur la pièce produite.

Les officiers commandant les dits bâtiments ne peuvent pousser plus loin leur visite ou leur recherche à bord d'un navire qui n'appartient pas à leur nationalité, à moins, toutefois, que cela ne soit nécessaire pour relever les preuves d'une infraction de la présente Convention.

Ils apprécient la gravité des faits de leur compétence parvenus à leur connaissance et constatent le degré de l'infraction commise, et, le cas échéant, du dommage éprouvé.

Ils dressent, s'il y a lieu, procès-verbal de la constatation des faits telle qu'elle résulte tant des déclarations des parties intéressées que du témoignage des personnes présentes.

Si le cas lui semble assez grave pour justifier cette mesure, le Commandant d'un des dits bâtiments aura le droit de conduire le navire en contravention dans un port de la nation du Tribunal compétent. Il pourra même prendre à son bord une partie des hommes de l'équipage pour les remettre entre les mains des autorités de cette même nation.

Le procès-verbal prévu au présent Article est rédigé dans la langue du Commandant du bâtiment de guerre ou du bâtiment spécialement commissionné et suivant les formes en usage dans son pays.

Les inculpés et les témoins ont le droit d'y ajouter ou d'y faire ajouter, dans leur propre langue, toute mention ou témoignage qu'ils croiront utile. Ces déclarations devront être dûment signées.

Anglican Bishopric for the north of Europe.

AS the law now stands, this cannot be done under the Suffragan Bishops Act (26 Henry VIII, cap. 14), because the Bishop of London has already one Suffragan Bishop, and the Act allows only one for the same diocese.

Appointment and jurisdiction of.

The authority exercised by the Bishops of London over British clergymen, &c., on the continent of Europe being not diocesan, or legal, but merely customary, and entirely voluntary on the part of those who submit to it, I do not think that it would be consistent with the principles of our legislation to ask Parliament for any new powers in aid of it. Even if Parliament could be expected to authorize the consecration of a titular Bishop of Southampton to assist the Bishop of London in the superintendence of British clergy, &c., on the continent, he would not really be a Suffragan of the diocese of London in any sense hitherto known to the law. I do not think it would be wise to make such a proposal to Parliament, especially as the same thing, in substance (though not in form), might be done if it were thought desirable under the powers of the Jerusalem Bishopric Act (5 Vict., cap. 6), but to me it seems to be contrary to sound policy and to the amity of nations for the British Parliament to legislate concerning the performance of episcopal functions within the dominions of other civilized European States; and I should be averse, not only to any such new legislation, but to the use, for that purpose, of the Jerusalem Bishopric Act.

It is of course quite possible (and theoretically unobjectionable) to create a Bishopric of Heligoland, with powers to exercise a voluntary episcopal superintendence over British congregations (without legal jurisdiction) in the north of Europe similar to that exercised by the Bishop of Gibraltar in the south. Whether there are any valid political reasons against it (assuming that the State were not called upon to provide a stipend) is a point on which I have no information enabling me to judge. From a domestic (i.e., British) point of view I do not perceive any.

Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor.

Codification of private international law.

Concur in terms of note as to.

I AGREE in the general substance of Sir Julian Pauncefote's note, though I confess I am not particularly sanguine as to any very useful result.

Obstacles presented by differences between British and foreign marriage laws.

Foreign Judgments appear to offer the most hopeful ground. Marriage and divorce are both attended with greater difficulties, unless the rule of domicil (as distinguished from nationality, or simple residence) is adopted as the basis. What I fear is that the countries which have adopted the Code Civil will not accept that basis, while we, on the other hand, in this country, are not likely to accept that of nationality. It would, I think, be out of the question to recognize foreign marriages or divorces, when the parties were subject, as to their personal status, to English law, as having effects inconsistent with the law of England; and it would be very difficult to lay down any rule, to have effect in England, which would make the validity of marriages boná fide contracted in England between persons, either of whom was at the time properly subject to English law, dependent upon positive conditions imposed by some foreign law (e.g., that of France) to which the other party might be subject. Uniformity of laws and conditions, on all these subjects, in all civilized countries, would be most desirable. But, at present, we have not such uniformity even between England and Scotland, though it was recommended, and the means of arriving at it were pointed out by the elaborate Report of a Royal Commission, many years since—a Report which has been absolutely neglected. The passing of the Wife's Sister Bill (should it pass) will be but a single, and comparatively small, step towards the assimilation of our law of personal capacity to contract marriage to that of the Continent or of America; and our divorce law is equally different from theirs, nor is it at all probable (even if it were desirable, which I do not think) that we should, for a long time to come, endure the laxity and facility of Continental or American laws on the subject of divorce.

Nationality of son, born at Breslau, of Mr. J. Mosenthal, naturalized in Cape Colony, after release from German nationality.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us a correspondence* relative to the claim of Mr. J. Mosenthal, who had obtained a certificate of British naturalization in the Cape Colony, after having been legally released of his former allegiance as a German subject, to have his son, recently born at Breslau, registered as a British subject.

That our opinion was requested as to whether we concurred in the terms of the reply which it was proposed to return to Mr. Mosenthal's representation, or whether, in view of the fact that Mr. Mosenthal's son had apparently no nationality except in the Cape Colony, and that his nationality in that part of Her Majesty's dominions was British, we considered that he might properly be registered as a British subject.

That a copy of the General Instructions for Her Majesty's Consular officers was inclosed, and that our particular attention was called to paragraph 14, p. 29, "Registration of Births and Deaths, &c."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

He is entitled to British nationality.

That inasmuch as Mr. Mosenthal's son has no nationality except in the Cape Colony, and that he is entitled to be treated as a native in that Colony, which is a part of Her Majesty's dominions, we think that he might without impropriety be registered asa British subject.

We understand that Mr. Mosenthal is only temporarily residing in Germany, and that his German nationality is not revived by such residence, and that the fact of the child's birth in Germany does not make him, according to the law of that Empire, a German subject.

(No. . Treaty.)

My Lord, Foreign Office, May , 1883.

I HAVE had under my consideration your Excellency's despatch No. 14, Treaty, of the 26th February last, relative to the claim of Mr. Mosenthal to have his son, born at Breslau, registered as a British subject.

In reply, I have to observe that the precedents furnished by your Excellency appear to me to have arisen in cases of naturalization under the Imperial Act, 1870, which is not applicable to the present case, as Mr. Mosenthal was naturalized, not under that Act, but at the Cape under a Local Act, differing in its terms from the Imperial Act.

If, therefore, it is clear that neither the father nor the son are by German law deemed German subjects, I am of opinion that there is no objection to the registration of the birth of Mr. Mosenthal's son at the British Vice-Consulate at Breslau.

As, however, there seems to be a doubt on this point, I should be glad to learn your Excellency's opinion as to the exact bearing of the German law as to the nationality in Germany of Mr. Mosenthal and his son.

of naturalized British subjects as such, and not as "British subjects," because it was uncertain whether such children would fulfil the conditions of section 10 (5) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," and thereby acquire the status of British subjects. If they should not fulfil such conditions, they would retain their nationality of origin, and, although the mere fact of registration at a Mission or Consulate has no legal effect as regards the status of the child, it is more convenient that the question of nationality should be left open on the register. But, in the present case, if by German law Mr. Mosenthal's son is not a German subject, he has no nationality except that derived from his father's British nationality in the Cape Colony, and therefore no inconvenience could arise from registering him as a British subject. There is no objection, however, to the instruction No. 44 of the 12th February, 1873, being followed in this instance, and to Mr. Mosenthal's son being registered as the son of a naturalized British subject.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received July 17.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, July 16, 1883.

Blockade of port of Jérémie in hands of insurgents.

Decree of Haitian Government.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th instant stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the margin[*] which related to the publication by the Government of Haïti of a Decree dated the 5th June, declaring the port of Jérémie to be in a state of blockade.

That it was presumed that as Jérémie was in the possession of the insurgents, the Decree was not intended as a municipal law closing the port to foreign commerce, but as a Notification of a blockade jure gentium.

Blockade not enforced.

That your Lordship proposed to insert a copy and translation of that Decree in the next issue of the "London Gazette;" but that inasmuch as Mr. Hunt reported that at the date of his despatch the blockade had not been enforced by the presence of any Haïtian vessel of war, your Lordship further proposed, with our concurrence, to call on Mr. Hunt to inquire and report at once whether the blockade was (as was presumed) one jure gentium, and, if so, whether it was now effectively maintained by the presence of ships of war in sufficient number to prevent ingress and egress.

That on receipt of Mr. Hunt's reply it would be laid before us for our advice as to whether the blockade was lawful as against neutrals, or whether it would be necessary to insert a further notice in the "London Gazette."

That on that point Sir Julian was to inclose a copy of a Notification issued in the case of the Texan blockade of Tampico and Vera Cruz in 1842.

That the draft of the proposed instruction to Her Majesty's Representative at Port-au-Prince was inclosed, together with a copy of the Notification proposed to be inserted in the "Gazette;" and that Sir Julian was to request that we would take those papers into our immediate consideration and favour your Lordship with our early opinion as to whether the course proposed was right and proper under the circumstances, or whether the fact should be published simultaneously with the Decree that at the date of the latest reports no Haïtian vessel of war had appeared at Jérémie.

[*] Mr. Hunt, No. 18, May 26; ditto, No. 20, June 11, 1883; Decree of the Haïtian Government of June 5, 1883; Notification of the Texan blockade of Vera Cruz and Tampico in 1842, dated September 21, 1842 (State Papers, vol. xxxiv, p. 1262).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve proposed instructions to Mr. Hunt.

That we think the course proposed to be taken is correct. It may be well to explain more explicitly to Mr. Hunt the difference between a blockade jure gentium and one existing under municipal regulation.

Notification in "Gazette" sufficient.

The Notification in the "Gazette" is sufficient, and we think should contain no reference to the absence of Haïtian vessels of war.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Hunt.

(No. .)
Sir, Foreign Office, July , 1883.

I HAVE received your despatch No. 20 of the 11th ultimo, with its inclosures, announcing that the Haïtian Government have declared (1) that the district of Grand'Anse is in a state of siege; and (2) that the port of Jérémie is in a state of blockade.

You state, however, that the reports which have reached you from the masters of British vessels show that the blockade was not effectively maintained, there being no Haïtian war-vessel near Port Jérémie.

I have therefore to instruct you to inquire and report at once whether the blockade is (as I presume it is intended to be) one jure gentium, and, if so, whether it is effectively maintained by the presence of ships of war in sufficient number to prevent ingress and egress.

Can only recognize an effective blockade jure gentium, and not one established by a municipal law.

If the blockade should not be effective, Her Majesty's Government could not recognize its validity; nor could they do so if the Decree is intended to operate only as a municipal blockade closing the port of Jérémie to foreign commerce by a municipal law. Jérémie being in possession of the insurgents, the only valid blockade that can be lawfully established as against neutrals is one recognized by international law as a blockade jure gentium, and such blockade must be effectively maintained as a condition of its validity.

Blockade of the Ports of Jeremie and Jacmel not likely to be effective.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, September 29, 1883.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to the letter from the Foreign Office of the 14th July, and to our reply of the 16th of the same month, relative to the blockade of the port of Jeremie in Haiti, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of the Secretary of State, the despatch ,noted in the margin* of his letter from Her Majesty's Representative at Port-au-Prince, forwarding a notification received by him from the Haitian Government of the blockade of Jacmel, and stating that it was not likely to be an effective one, and that the port of Jeremie was still open. That Mr. Currie was at the same time to transmit to us, as by the accompanying list,† a correspondence which had taken place with the Atlas Steam-ship Company, and also a letter,‡ which, by your Lordship's direction, had been addressed to the Board of Admiralty, requesting them to instruct the British officer commanding Her Majesty's ships in Haitian waters to report whether the blockade of Jacmel and Jeremie was effective or not, and if it was clearly not effective to warn the Haitian authorities that Her Majesty's Government protested against any interference with British vessels proceeding to those ports.

That Mr. Currie was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified, if the blockade was clearly non-effective, in preventing by force the seizure of British vessels, having regard to the small prospect of any remedy in a Haitian Prize Court.

That a Memorandum,§ drawn up by the Librarian of the Foreign Office, was annexed, bearing upon the question of the forcible prevention of seizure for violation of blockade; and Mr. Currie was at the same time to ask to be favoured with our opinion whether the reply to the Atlas Steam-ship Company was a sufficient one.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in preventing by force the seizure of British vessels.

That, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified, under the circumstances, in preventing by force the seizure of British vessels. If the Haitian Prize Courts should act in clear defiance of law and justice, Her Majesty's Government would be entitled to insist upon redress on behalf of any British subjects injured by such action.

Approve reply to Atlas Steam-ship Company.

We think the reply to the Atlas Steam-ship Company is a sufficient one.

Draft of Letter to the Atlas Steam-ship Company.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September , 1883.

WITH reference to your letter of the 25th ultimo, I am directed by Earl Granville to state to you that if the blockade of the ports of Jeremie and Jacmel, notification of which has been received from the Haitian Government, is not effective, it must be held to be invalid.

But there is no reason, because the blockade is not effective on one day, that it should not be effectively carried out on the next day.

The fact of the proper maintenance of the blockade can only be ascertained at the time, when the question arises, and on the spot, and in case of capture of a vessel for breach of the blockade, it is a question for the decision of a Prize Court.

Meanwhile, instructions will be sent to the officer in command of Her Majesty's forces in Haitian waters to report whether the blockade of these ports is effective or not effective, or doubtful, and, if clearly not effective, to warn the Haitian authorities, both civil and naval, that Her Majesty's Government protest against any interference with British vessels proceeding to those ports. On receipt of a reply to these inquiries, a further communication will be addressed to you.

I am, at the same time, to forward to you copies of the notices inserted in the "London Gazette" of the three ports of Miragoane, Jeremie, and Jacmel.*

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, October 10, 1883.

Haïtian revolution. Alleged breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 31st August last, stating that by direction of the Secretary of State he had to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which related to an alleged breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act in connection with the revolutionary movements at present in progress at Haïti.

That the circumstances were briefly as follows:—

Revolutionary expedition alleged to be fitting out in the Island of Inagua (Bahamas).

That in consequence of representations addressed to the Colonial authorities by the Haïtian Government (Inclosure in Colonial Office letter of the 6th June, 1883), that the British Island of Inagua (one of the Bahama Islands in the West Indies) was being used for the purpose of fitting out a revolutionary expedition to overturn the existing state of things in Haïti, Her Majesty's ship "Foam" was ordered to proceed to the island in question to investigate the facts (Inclosure in Admiralty letter of the 1st May, 1883). That on her arrival Lieutenant and Commander Baker found some fifty or sixty Haïtian exiles residing there, ill provided with money and without arms or ammunition. That two days after the arrival of the man-of-war appeared the American steamer "Tropic," ostensibly bound to Port Antonio for fruit. That her master boarded the "Foam," and requested permission to embark the refugees, to which Captain Baker, entertaining no suspicion as to the object in view, gave his consent. That later in the same day the British steamer "Alvo," of the Atlas line, arrived at Inagua with another batch of Haïtian refugees from Kingston, General Boyer Bazelais, one of the revolutionary party, being their leader.

That the "Tropic," which had previously left Inagua, reappeared, and thereupon Captain Baker sent an officer on board the "Alvo" to say that he would not permit the transshipment of her passengers to the "Tropic," but that they might be landed, and having sent for the master of the latter vessel, he inquired the reason of his return, and was told that it was to receive the "Alvo's" passengers. That Captain Baker explained that he could not allow this, and the "Tropic" again left.

That General Bazelais, the leader of the refugees who had been landed from the "Alvo," wished to charter a vessel to sail at once for Navassa, but Captain Baker advised Mr. Sargent, the Acting Resident Justice, not to permit him to leave until twenty-four hours after the sailing of the "Tropic," and there being then nothing further to be done, the "Foam" left for Turk's Island.

Transshipment on the high seas of Haïtian refugees from the British vessel "Lizzie Wall" to the United States' steamer 'Tropic."

That it appeared (Inclosure No. 2 in Colonial Office letter of the 6th June, 1883) that General Bazelais subsequently managed to charter the British vessel "Lizzie Wall," belonging to Nassau, Bahamas, in which he and his party left Inagua, and effected a transshipment to the "Tropic" on the high seas. That they were supplied on board that vessel with arms and accoutrements and subsequently effected a hostile landing in Haïti (Consul Clipperton, No. 10 of the 13th June, and Colonial Office of the 28th June).

Condemnation of the master and chief officer of the "Tropic" for a breach of the Neutrality Laws.

That on the return of the "Tropic" to the United States proceedings were instituted against the master and chief and second officer for a breach of the Neutrality Laws, which resulted in the condemnation of the two former (Mr. West's despatch No. 170 of the 25th May, and Consul Clipperton's despatches Nos. 10 and 12 Consular, of the 31st May and 16th July, 1883).

Power of the local authorities at Inagua, or one of Her Majesty's ships, to prevent such transshipment.

That Mr. Currie was then to refer us to a letter from Sir E. Commerell, Her Majesty's Naval Commander-in-chief on the North American Station, to the Admiralty (Inclosure in Admiralty letter of the 13th August, 1883), in which he asked instructions for his future guidance, as to whether it would have been legally competent to the local authorities at Inagua, or to one of Her Majesty's ships to have prevented the transshipment of the refugees from the British ship "Lizzie Wall" to the United States' steamer "Tropic" on the high seas.

That Mr. Currie was to refer us to sections 11 (1) and (2), and 21 (4), of the Foreign Enlistment Act, of which a copy was inclosed, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which might properly be returned to the inquiry contained in the last paragraph of the Admiralty letter of the 13th August.

That we would observe from the despatch of the Governor of the Bahamas, contained in the Colonial Office letter of the 6th June, that evidence was at that date being collected with a view to proceedings being taken against the "Lizzie Wall," but no information had since been received of the result.

* Admiralty, May 1; Mr. West, No. 170, May 25; Consul Clipperton, No. 10, Consular, May 31; Colonial Office, June 6, June 28; Consul Clipperton, No. 12, Consular, July 16; Admiralty, August 13, 1883.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the question raised in the last paragraph of the Admiralty letter of the 13th August is not free from difficulty.

British officers, &c., would have no right to interfere with the vessels or subjects of a foreign Power, though acting in concert with a vessel and subjects of Her Majesty engaged in a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, but British officers could compel the British vessel to return to a British port.

The Foreign Enlistment Act contains no provisions expressly dealing with such a case, and we think that neither British naval officers nor civil officials would have any right to interfere with the vessels or subjects of a foreign Power though acting in concert with a vessel and subjects of Her Majesty engaged in a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act. But inasmuch as any British ship engaged in an expedition prepared in Her Majesty's dominions in contravention of that Act is by section 11 forfeited to Her Majesty, we think that the officers of one of Her Majesty's ships would be warranted in resisting the object of such expedition being attained, and could interfere upon the high seas and compel the vessel to return to a British port.

Sale of the "Eider," a British vessel, to Haïtian insurgents.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us the papers relating to the sale to the Haïtian insurgents of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's vessel "Eider;"* and that he was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether action should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should warn authorities of British ports,

That we think it would be expedient to put the authorities at any of the neighbouring British ports to which the "Eider" might be taken for the purpose of being equipped on their guard, in order that any breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act by the arming or equipping the ship in such ports may be prevented.

and make inquiries into the case.

We think, too, that a searching inquiry should be made into the circumstances connected with the sale and dispatch from a British port of the "Eider," in order to see whether proceedings should not be instituted for a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act. It seems to be suggested that the "Eider" was, in fact, used as a transport.

Status of the "Eider after sale to insurgents.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty,† inquiring, with reference to the case of the "Eider," what status a ship purchased by rebels in those circumstances would have if met with on the high seas.

That our opinion was requested on that point.

That Mr. Currie was at the same time to inclose, for our further information, a despatch received that day from Her Majesty's Consul at Port-au-Prince, reporting that the "Eider" had been seen by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Fantôme" in the port of Jacmel, under the Haïtian flag.[*]

† Admiralty, October 8, 1883.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it is not possible to express a positive opinion upon the point raised by the Admiralty without further information than we possess.

Status of vessel is Haïtian,

The vessel purchased was an unarmoured merchant-vessel, and she, no doubt, became the lawful property of those who purchased her. She appears to be now flying the Haïtian flag, and if, as is presumably the case, she is the property of Haïtian subjects, she is entitled to the status of a Haïtian vessel. If she should hereafter be used for belligerent purposes on the high seas, her status would depend upon the position of those who so used her.

and she should be treated as belonging to a belligerent.

We gather that the rebel party in Haïti are recognized and treated by the Haïtian Government as belligerents, and in that case they, and any vessels they may employ, should be so treated by us, just as the Confederate Government and their cruizers were during the time of the civil war in the United States.

Blockade of Haïtian ports.

Search of the British schooner "Research" by Haïtian officers.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the letters from the Foreign Office of the 10th and 21st ultimo, he was to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the letter from the Colonial Office,[†] forwarding a despatch from the Officer Administering the Government of the Bahamas relative to the proceedings of a Haïtian war-vessel in boarding and searching the schooner "Research," belonging to the port of Nassau, commanded by a British subject named Erskine J. Stuart, when 10 miles distant from the port of Jeremie, the schooner being at the time on a voyage from Jamaica to Nassau.

That Mr. Currie was to request that we would take that paper into our consideration with those then before us relating to the blockade of the Haïtian ports, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what action, if any, should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

As the rebels appear to have acquired the position of belligerents, the action of the Haïtian officers, though unnecessarily rude, was probably warranted by international law, but Haïtian Government should be asked for an explanation.

That the rebel force appears to be in complete possession of a part of Haïti, and to have acquired such a position as to be treated by the Government of Haïti as belligerents.

If such a state of war exists, the vessels of war belonging to the Haïtian Government would have a right to seize any contraband of war destined for the enemy, and to search any vessel near the enemy's shores which might be supposed to contain such contraband.

The Haïtian officers seem to have acted with unnecessary rudeness, and to have made use of unjustifiable threats; but their action in searching the vessel was probably, in strictness, warranted by international law.

It would be well, however, to call the attention of the Government of Haïti to the matter, and ask for an explanation.

Sale of the "Eider" to Haïtian insurgents

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to Mr. Currie's letters of the 29th September last, and to our replies of the 23rd October, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, papers relating to the case of the "Eider."[*]

That Consul Zohrab had sent home an account of the circumstances under which the sale of the "Eider" to Mr. Lamb was effected, and of the action of the Haïtian Consul at St. Thomas in order to prevent the departure of the vessel from the island. (Mr. Zohrab, Consular, No. 18, and extract of private letter to Mr. Lister.)

That information had also reached Her Majesty's Government that the "Eider" had been sold to the Haïtian insurgents at Jacmel, and was lying at that port under the Haïtian flag. (Mr. Hunt, No. 32, and Admiralty, No. 34, [sic] September 27.)

Proposed reply to complaint of Haïtian Government as to conduct of British Colonial authorities and Consul at St. Thomas.

That the Haïtian Minister at this Court (M. Villevaleix, October 9) having forwarded to your Lordship a complaint from his Government as to the attitude of the British Colonial authorities in Jamaica and Inagua during the rebellion in Haïti, and also as to the conduct of Her Majesty's Consul at St. Thomas in the matter of the "Eider," a reply had been drawn up, addressed to the Haïtian Chargé d'Affaires, M. Apollon, the draft of which was forwarded therewith.

That our opinion was requested as to whether the letter to M. Apollon was right and proper.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was also to point out that, with reference to our Report of the 23rd October, that the "Eider" was sold at, and cleared from, the Danish Island of St. Thomas, and not from a British port. It appeared that her transfer had been legally completed to Haïtian subjects, and she was now under the Haïtian flag, her British certificate of registry having been given up to Her Majesty's Consul (Inclosure 10 in Mr. Zohrab's No. 18, and private letter of the 21st October). That under these circumstances your Lordship desired to know whether we still considered it necessary, as suggested in our former Report, to caution the authorities at any of the neighbouring British ports to which the "Eider" might be taken for the purpose of being equipped, in order that any breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, by the arming or equipping the ship in such ports, might be avoided.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve reply to Haïtian Government. Should warn British authorities against breaches of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

That, in our opinion, the letter to M. Apollon is right and proper.

As it appears highly probable that it is intended to equip the "Eider" for war-like purposes, we still consider it very desirable that the authorities at neighbouring British ports, where the equipment is likely to be attempted, should be put on the alert, so as to avoid the risk of a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act being committed within Her Majesty's dominions.

I now beg leave to state that Her Majesty's Government have received with surprise the complaints and accusations brought by the Haïtian Minister for Foreign Affairs against the British Colonial authorities and Her Majesty's Consul at St. Thomas, and they can only attribute the unmeasured language and the unfriendly tone adopted by his Excellency to a misapprehension of the facts to which he refers, and to the excitement caused by the regrettable incidents which are now disturbing the peace of Haïti.

Her Majesty's Government deny altogether the imputation of "persistent hostility" on the part of the British Colonial or Consular authorities towards the Haïtian Government, or of a disregard by them of the prescriptions of international law and of the mutual obligations of friendly States.

M. Fouchard has failed to adduce a single instance in which they have omitted to observe and enforce, wherever it has been possible to do so, the prescriptions of municipal and international law for the maintenance of the neutrality of this country during the contest which has unfortunately arisen in the Republic. The allegations of M. Fouchard are couched in such general terms that they cannot be answered more precisely; but as his Excellency refers to the case of the "Lizzie Wall" at Inagua, it is proper that he should be informed that proceedings were taken against that vessel for a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which resulted in her condemnation and forfeiture, a proof that the Colonial authorities do not neglect their duty.

in case of the "Lizzie Wall"

As regards the case of the "Eider," also referred to by M. Fouchard, Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to understand in what respect Mr. Zohrab, Her Majesty's Consul at St. Thomas, has failed in his duty, or has laid himself open to the strong terms of condemnation in which he is assailed by the Haïtian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The "Eider" was a merchant-vessel belonging to a British Company, and was sold at St. Thomas, a Danish Colony, to Mr. Lamb, a British subject. It is alleged by M. Fouchard that the latter had ceased to be a British subject by reason of his having become a burgher of St. Thomas; but Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that he did not lose his British nationality on that account. All the formalities prescribed by the British Merchant Shipping Act were duly observed, and Her Majesty's Consul had no power to prevent the sale of the vessel to Mr. Lamb, and much less to prevent her departure from St. Thomas. The "Eider" carried no armament, and Her Majesty's Government are informed that it is not the fact, as stated in M. Fouchard's despatch, that she took Haïtian rebels on board.

nd of the "Eider."

Even if the "Eider" had been fitted and equipped for warlike purposes, and was about to clear from St. Thomas on a hostile expedition against the Haïtian Government, the duty of stopping her would have devolved on the local authorities, and not on Her Majesty's Consul, who had no power to do so. But the Governor of St. Thomas refused the application of the Haïtian Consul to detain her, thus supporting the view of Her Majesty's Consul that no breach of municipal or international law had been committed.

It is unnecessary to state that if the "Eider" had attempted to clear from a British port on any hostile expedition against the Government of Haïti, or to violate in any way the Foreign Enlistment Act, she would have been immediately seized and dealt with according to law.

I trust, M. le Chargé d'Affaires, that the above explanations will satisfy your Government that the protest of M. Fouchard against the action of Her Majesty's Consul at St. Thomas is not well founded, and that there is no real ground for the grave charges which his Excellency brings against the British Colonial authorities, who, on the contrary, are all anxious, to the fullest extent of their powers, to enforce the duty of neutrality within their respective jurisdictions.

Any attempt on their part to evade this international obligation would meet with the severe censure of Her Majesty's Government; and I can only add, M. le Chargé d'Affaires, that either M. Fouchard does not give sufficient consideration to the fact that British officers, in the exercise of their powers, are bound to keep within the limits of strict legality, or that his Excellency entertains views as to the rights and obligations of neutrals at variance with those of Her Majesty's Government.

Sir, Foreign Office, December , 1883.

I HAVE received your despatch No. 44, Political, of the 29th October, transmitting a printed Circular addressed to the foreign Representatives at Port-au-Prince by the President of Haïti, together with a separate note annexed thereto, vindicating the right of the Government of the Republic during the state of civil war now existing, to close the Haïtian ports hitherto open to foreign commerce, and complaining of the abusive exercise of the right of asylum by foreign Legations. As regards the closing of the ports, Her Majesty's Government do not dispute the proposition laid down by President Salomon if it be intended to apply to ports in the possession and under the control of the Government of the Republic.

But Her Majesty's Government must protest against the doctrine that ports which, like those of Jacmel and Jeremie, are no longer in the possession and under the control of the Haïtian Government, can be closed to foreign commerce by a municipal Decree.

Her Majesty's Government hold that in such cases an effective blockade is necessary to warrant the seizure of neutral vessels resorting thereto.

As regards the right of asylum, Her Majesty's Government are not aware that its exercise by Her Majesty's Legation and Consulates in Haïti has been carried beyond the limits prescribed by humanity, and as President Salomon admits the propriety of its exercise to that extent, I have no further observations to offer upon that part of the Circular.

I have to instruct you to address a communication to the Haïtian Government in the above sense.

Claims on Haïtian Government of Maxwell Savage and Son, and White and Co. Damages by troops.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, a letter from Messrs. My Lord, Compulsory service of British subjects in civil capacities.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 5th instant, inclosing a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Central America,* with copies of correspondence between himself and Her Majesty's Consul at Puerto Cortes, on the subject of the right asserted by the Government of the Republic of Honduras, of compelling British subjects resident within its territory to serve the State in a civil capacity, such as that of Justice of the Peace or member of a Municipality, if elected to such a post. That Mr. St. John referred to a correspondence annexed therewith, which took place upon the subject in 1859,† and requested to be furnished with instructions for his guidance in the event contemplated.

That accordingly Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the position assumed by Mr. Wyke in 1859, upon which no further action was taken at the time, could be maintained.

That there was no Treaty in existence between Great Britain and Honduras to which an appeal could be made, all such having been denounced by the latter in 1877.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

In the absence of Treaty rights British subjects, resident in Honduras, cannot claim exemption.

That in our opinion the position assumed by Mr. Wyke in 1859 cannot be maintained, in the absence of any Treaty rights securing the immunity claimed.

British subjects resident in a foreign State subject themselves, whilst so resident, to all the laws of that State.

And if those laws impose upon all residents, natives and foreigners alike, the duty of filling civil offices if duly elected thereto, no exemption from this liability can, on principles of international law, be claimed for British subjects.

That the facts of the case would be found in the letters from Messrs. Smiles, dated the 4th August, 1882, and the 10th instant. That our special attention was directed to the Report contained in the despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Rome, No. 387 of the 29th October last, as to the form of procedure required by Italian law to give effect to the request of the Judge of the Court in which the suit in question is pending with a view to its communication through the Diplomatic channel.

That it appeared to your Lordship that some doubt arose as to the extent and nature of the support to be accorded to the guardians in that case; whether the action of Her Majesty's Ambassador should be limited to the communication to the Italian Government of the documents forwarded by Messrs. Smiles, with a request that effect be given to the Order in Chancery attached to them; or whether his Excellency should be instructed to press the matter strongly upon their attention, and formally apply for the delivery of the children to the custody of their legal guardians.

That our opinion was requested on the questions submitted in that letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer upon the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Order in Chancery to be enforced either through Italian Ambassador or Italian Courts.

That we think the documents should be handed by Her Majesty's Ambassador to the Italian Minister for Foreign Affaires, with a request for his assistance, in order that effect may be given to the Order. If, as is probable, the Italian Minister replies that the proper mode of enforcing the Order is through the Italian Tribunals, we see no reason why this course should not be followed, and we do not think that his Excellency should be instructed, in that case, to apply formally for the delivery of the children to the custody of their legal guardians. He might, however, bespeak such aid as the Italian Minister could properly render in the proceedings.

This seems to be all that Messrs. Smiles and Co. ask, and in this country certainly a similar object could only be attained by an appeal to the Tribunals.

Assault by Mr. Reid on Quasimodo, a French subject, at Marancetra.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th September last, relative to the charge brought against Mr. Reid, of an attempt to murder a French subject in Madagascar, he had the honour to transmit to us further correspondence* which had taken place with Mr. Pakenham, Her Majesty's Consul at Tamatave, on the case, together with the draft of the reply which it was proposed to address to him, and that our opinion was requested as to whether the proposed draft could properly go forward.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed draft can properly go forward.

Suggesting additions in despatch to Consul Pakenham as to jurisdiction of French Consuls in Madagascar, and his conduct with regard to the trial of Mr. Reid.

But we would suggest that in the last sentence, after the words "miscarriage of justice," there should be inserted: "supposing Mr. Reid to be guilty of the offence charged against him," and that at the end of the draft the following sentence should be added:—

Foreign Office, May , 1883.

Sir,

I AM directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches No. 26, Slave Trade, of the 24th October last, and Nos. 4 and 5, Slave Trade, of the 22nd February and 12th March respectively, regarding the charge against Mr. Reid of attempted murder.

Her Majesty's Government will not lose sight of the inconvenience caused by the fact that French Consular Officers in Madagascar are not invested with the necessary powers to exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over French subjects on the spot. With regard, however, to your conduct in this case, Earl Granville regrets that you appear to have acted with little discretion.

It was within your competency to deal with the case yourself, with assessors, under sections 14 and 16 of the Order in Council of the 4th February, 1869; and this was the proper course under the circumstances. The step taken by you in sending the accused for trial to Mauritius, well knowing that the French witnesses could not, or would not, appear there to give evidence, and that there must necessarily be a miscarriage of justice, supposing Mr. Reid to be guilty of the offence charged against him, could only tend to complicate matters, and if Mr. Reid be innocent of the offence charged, the course taken was such as to inflict serious hardship upon him.

Proceedings of Admiral Pierre

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 17th instant stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list which related to the recent proceedings of Admiral Pierre, commanding the French naval force at Tamatave.*

That the questions which appeared to arise were:—

constituted a violation of British rights or an insult to the British flag, entitling Her Majesty's Government to demand reparation.

2. Whether Admiral Pierre exercised the strict rights of a belligerent with such unnecessary or unreasonable harshness as to afford grounds of complaint to Her Majesty's Government.

That the facts were so fully set forth in the correspondence, and commented upon in the Memoranda marked C, D, and E, that it was unnecessary to offer any further observations thereon.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted to us into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the questions submitted in Sir Julian's letter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

There is grave reason to complain of his conduct.

That the perusal and consideration of the documents submitted to us have caused us to come to the conclusion that there is grave reason to complain of the conduct of the French Admiral.

Treatment of Consul Pakenham.

The treatment to which it was intended to subject Mr. Pakenham, as shown by the letter of Admiral Pierre, dated the 21st June, is open to much observation, but it is possible he was not aware of the extent of Mr. Pakenham's illness, and as his death occurred before the time mentioned for his removal, we think that this ground of complaint should not be prominently relied upon.

Arrest of Mr. Shaw and other British subjects.

We also feel that it would not be expedient, without further information, to make any serious complaints on account of the arrest of Mr. Shaw and the other British subjects. The latter were promptly released, and although it may be that if Mr. Shaw's innocence be established serious representations may have to be made in consequence of the treatment he has received, yet the information at present in the hands of Her Majesty's Government does not appear to us to establish that the French Commander has exceeded his possible rights of action. Full liberty of action in respect of all these arrests should, however, be reserved until Her Majesty's Government are in complete possession of the facts relating to them.

French Government should be requested to afford Mr. Shaw every facility for preparing his defence, &c.

We think that the course pursued towards Mr. Shaw justifies Her Majesty's Government in requesting from the French Government that a full opportunity shall be afforded to Mr. Shaw to prepare for and present his defence, and that for that purpose he should have every facility afforded him to enable him to communicate with legal advisers.

Conduct of Admiral Pierre towards Commander Johnstone.

But the cause of complaint which the present information establishes against the French Admiral exists in the tone assumed and the language employed by him towards Commander Johnstone. As Commander of one of Her Majesty's ships stationed at Madagascar, it was the duty of Captain Johnstone to afford protection and the means of safety to any of Her Majesty's subjects who were in danger, and, therefore, apart from the natural claim to courtesy, which sprung from his position as Commander of one of Her Majesty's ships, he deserved every consideration in consequence of his being, under the circumstances, the protector of British interests.

But Admiral Pierre seems entirely to have overlooked all these considerations, and, in an apparent tone of great irritability, employed language of an undignified character which amounted to insult towards Commander Johnstone. We refer especially to the contents of the letters of the 4th, 8th, 10th, 17th, 18th, 20th, 21st, and 23rd June, and that of Lieutenant de Préville of the 23rd.

Proclamation of June 21.

The Proclamation of the 21st June, being a formal official document, and published to persons of all nations, containing serious reflections upon British officers, deserves especial reference in any representation which may be made to the French Government.

It is true that Commander Johnstone showed great zeal in the performance of his duties which might have caused irritation upon the part of the French Admiral, but in all the representations and requests he made he maintained a most courteous tone, and it is to be observed that Admiral Pierre appears to have been sensible of this courtesy when, in writing Commander Johnstone on the 4th June, he refers to "la distinction de votre langage."

The omission of Commander Johnstone to remove his ship as requested may have caused some not unnatural irritation. But we do not think there was either in this or in any other conduct of Commander Johnstone, a justification for the tone and language adopted by the French Admiral.

Bombardment of Fenoarivo without notice.

The bombardment of Fenoarivo without affording any notice to Commander Johnstone, or the inhabitants of the town, appears to deserve grave consideration.

No doubt, in one sense, the Commander of a hostile force has the right to regulate the manner in which he will conduct his hostilities, and to call upon him at all times to give notice of his intended operations would be absurd. But when an unarmed town is about to be bombarded, we conceive that humanity has created a practice which ought not to be deviated from to the effect that those residents who are non-belligerents should have an opportunity afforded to them of removing themselves and their property out of the danger created by the warlike operations in which they take no share.

Can express no opinion on the refusal to allow a British soldier to wear his sword, and the course pursued with regard to the mails.

We are not in a position to judge whether the refusal to allow a British soldier to wear his sword would be regarded as so contrary to practice as to amount to an act of discourtesy. For a like reason, and also on account of the want of information as to the facts, we express no opinion as to the course pursued in reference to the receipt and delivery of the mails.

The treatment of Commander Johnstone and the bombardment of Fenoarivo, should be represented to the French Government.

It is not for us to advise to what extent "reparation" should be demanded from the French Government, but we submit that Admiral Pierre's conduct towards Commander Johnstone, and the bombardment of Fenoarivo without giving any notice to the inhabitants, should be represented to the French Government in terms which should obtain at least a clear admission of error and expression of regret.

Claims of British subjects for loss or injury should be reserved for further consideration.

Any claims which British subjects may have to make in consequence of personal loss or injury by arrest or otherwise should be reserved for further consideration.

We have, &c.

investigation of the case, there would, of course, be no ground for claiming compensation. The question submitted to us may therefore be conveniently considered in three aspects: first, the cause of the arrest; secondly, Mr. Shaw's treatment whilst under arrest; and, thirdly, the duration of his detention.

1. The ground of arrest alleged in the first instance was either the having harboured, or the not having produced, two Hovas who were at his residence. But the cause of his continued detention apparently was that alleged for the first time after he had been fifteen days in confinement, viz., that he had dispersed in the vicinity of his house some bottles of claret and other liquids which had been poisoned, with the intention of injuring the French picquet which was to be stationed in his house. On the 23rd July the charge appears to have been somewhat altered; the allegation of the intent to poison was dropped, and the accusation against Mr. Shaw was limited to his not having used sufficient prudence, after he knew that his cellar had been broken open, and the bottles dispersed, to prevent the French sailors from being injured by such as might be lying about. We are not fully informed as to the facts which were before the French authorities, and which led to the imprisonment; but it would seem that one or more of the soldiers stationed in Mr. Shaw's house did drink wine that was found in his garden, and became intoxicated, either in consequence of this alone, or of their also drinking the contents of some of the medicine bottles. The explanation given by Mr. Shaw of the presence of these bottles in his garden is a perfectly natural one. There can be no doubt that his premises had been broken into, and the bottles found in the cellar scattered about. He states that he informed the officer in command of the troops of the pillage of the cellar and dispensary, and the officer was thus put on his guard.

Cause of arrest preposterous.

Under these circumstances, and in view of its improbability, the charge of the intent to poison appears a preposterous one, and we do not think there was any substantial case of criminal imprudence fairly to be inferred from the facts.

Grounds for French action should be asked for.

At the same time, we think the charge ought not to be assumed to be wholly unfounded without affording the French authorities an opportunity of stating the evidence in their possession which caused the charge to be preferred. In considering the sufficiency of that evidence—if it should be communicated—it must be remembered that the charge against Mr. Shaw is now abandoned.

Treatment of Mr. Shaw too harsh.

2. Mr. Shaw's treatment certainly appears to have been unnecessarily and exceptionally harsh. He was awaiting his trial. All that was necessary or proper was to secure his safe custody until the trial took place; yet he was confined in a cabin unfit for constant habitation. His food was meagre in quantity and miserable in quality, and served in a manner wholly unsuitable to a person accustomed to civilized modes of life. All intercourse with the outside world was strictly denied him; he was not allowed to receive a visit even from his wife. Even if there had been stronger evidence of guilt than existed, this treatment appears to us to have been uncalled for and cruel, the more so considering the position of Mr. Shaw, both as a British subject, who happened to be residing in a place attacked by a foreign Power, and also as a missionary.

His detention too long.

3. The detention, too, was prolonged for a period greater than would seem necessary for a preliminary investigation. The witnesses were all on the spot, the facts lay in a narrow compass, and it is not easy to see why the "Ordonnance de non-lieu" was not arrived at long before.

Should reserve question of compensation until receiving explanations.

We submit, therefore, that the attention of the French Government should be directed to the whole facts connected with Mr. Shaw's arrest, and with his treatment during that detention, and the duration of it, and full explanation should be asked upon all these points.

If the course we have suggested should be determined upon, it would be for Her Majesty's Government to consider, after they have received such explanations as the French Government may offer, whether any, and, if so, what demand of compensation or redress should be made. In the meantime, care should be taken fully to reserve these questions, for, as the facts are now presented, it appears to us that a British subject has been subjected to treatment by the French authorities which was unwarranted, cannot be justified, and which entitles him to compensation.

My Lord,

Action of French Admiral in case of the "Taymouth Castle."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers from Sir D. Currie on the subject of the action of the French Admiral towards the mail-steamer "Taymouth Castle" at Tamatave,* and that he was to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the circumstances gave ground for making any representations to the French Government in the matter, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Despatches for enemy contraband of war.

That despatches carried by a neutral vessel to the enemy would be contraband of war, and there would be a right to search for and seize them.

We think, therefore, that the French Admiral was probably acting within his rights in requiring to see the contents of the mail.

Explanations as to French sentries on board.

We do not understand on what grounds French sentries were placed upon a British vessel and instructed to search any persons coming on board. We think, with regard to this, some explanation should be demanded of the French Government.

We observe that Sir Donald Currie states in his letter that Captain Hay took on board the Admiralty despatches against the wish of the French naval authorities and under protection of the "Dryad's" guns. The Captain does indeed state in his letter that he informed Captain Johnstone that he would have to send his despatches first on the French Admiral's ship. But we cannot find, in his account of what transpired, any trace of such an intimation having been received from the French Admiral, or of any request to the French Admiral to permit him to receive direct from him Captain Johnstone's despatches.

Should ascertain facts as to French demand to see despatches of "Dryad" before making representations.

If the French Admiral did insist on receiving the despatches before they were put on the "Taymouth Castle," it would be matter for grave representations to the French Government. But before making any such representations it would be expedient to ascertain the exact facts more accurately.

Position of neutrals during an invasion. Instructions.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th October last, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of the Secretary of State, the accompanying Memorandum† as to the position of the subjects of a neutral State residing in the country of a belligerent during a hostile invasion, which had been drawn up for the guidance of Mr. Graves and Mr. Pickersgill, who had been appointed respectively Her Majesty's Consul for Madagascar and British Vice-Consul at Antananarivo, and who were to start for their posts on the 28th October.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the Memorandum into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion, whether it was correct in point of law or whether it called for any amendment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Memorandum correct.

That we think the Memorandum is correct in point of law.

Necessity of explanation as to intervention of naval officers.

We think, however, that the statement in the Law Officers' Report of 1879 that "Her Majesty's Naval Commander may be instructed to take every measure short of actual intervention by force for the protection of British life and property" may be liable to misconstruction if taken without qualification. This definition would include a threat of force. So, too, it would include the placing one of Her Majesty's ships in such a position that the rights of the belligerent could only be enforced at the risk of damage to the ship or her crew. The measures taken must be of a peaceful character, and consistent with the exercise of a strict neutrality. We have no doubt that this is what the Law Officers meant. My Lord,

Action of the French Admiral towards the mail steamer "Taymouth Castle."

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the accompanying letter, which, on the receipt of our Report of the 24th October respecting the action of the French Admiral towards the British mail-steamer "Taymouth Castle" at Tamatave, was addressed to Sir D. Currie, asking for the further information which we stated it would be expedient to obtain before a representation could be made to the French Government on the subject, together with the reply which had then been received from Sir D. Currie.*

Question as to representation to French Government.

That Sir D. Currie's previous letter and our Report above referred to were also inclosed for reference,† if necessary; and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether the facts therein stated afforded grounds for a representation to the French Government in relation to the complaint made by Sir D. Currie, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Insufficiency of information as to despatches from the "Dryad."

That is not even now clear, from the letter of Sir Donald Currie, what were the exact facts with regard to the alleged refusal of the French Admiral to permit the "Dryad's" despatches to be carried by the "Taymouth Castle" unless they were first put on board his ship.

Sir Donald Currie states in his letter that "it is perfectly true, not only that the Admiral intimated the wish, but distinctly ordered, that the mails should be sent on board his ship," but he does not state whether this order was communicated to Captain Hay by the French Admiral, or in what other way the order was given, or whether it was merely inferred by Captain Hay that the order as to the outward mail applied to the "Dryad's" letters.

Sir Donald Currie reports that in answer to a question put by Captain Hay to the French officer in charge, after getting his clearance and bill of lading, that officer replied that Captain Hay could only take the "Dryad's" letters on condition that they were first put on board the Admiral's ship. But it does not appear what was the rank or position of this French officer, and we do not gather that when Captain Hay, shortly afterwards, went on board the French Admiral's ship, he made any inquiry or request with reference to carrying the despatches of the Captain of the "Dryad."

Importance of exact information on certain points.

We submit that it would be well to point out to Sir Donald Currie that Her Majesty's Government are not in a position to make any demand of the French Government with reference to this matter unless they are in possession of the exact facts relating to it. It is important to know whether the Admiral himself gave the order complained of, or, if not, by whom it was given, and whether the person giving it was in such a position that his act may fairly be presumed to have been the act of the Admiral.

Foreign Office, May , 1883.

Sir,

Circular of the 24th December, 1875, applies to custody of documents.

IN reply to the inquiry contained in your despatch No. 12 of this series of the 30th March last, as to whether any obligation rests on Her Majesty's Consulate-General to accept the deposit and be responsible for the safe keeping of wills and other important documents belonging to British subjects, I have to inform you that on the 24th December, 1875, a Circular was addressed to Her Majesty's Consuls abroad,† inclosing a notice to masters, seamen, and others defining the extent to which Her Majesty's Government held themselves responsible for money and valuables deposited in Her Majesty's Consulates.

Not responsible for documents deposited for private convenience.

After specifying the sums of money for which Her Majesty's Government would hold themselves responsible, the notice went on to say, "With regard to all other sums of money or property deposited with Her Majesty's Consular officers for private convenience, Her Majesty's Government admit no responsibility whatever," and as it appears that no special instructions have been given to Her Majesty's Consuls with regard to the custody of wills, such documents would come under the category of articles meant by the word "property," which is used in the Circular above referred to.

No obligation to accept deposit.

I am, however, to add that there is no obligation upon you to accept the deposit of wills, deeds, or any such documents.

I am, &c.

Flogging of Jewesses at Dar-el-baida,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Morocco, reporting the steps which he had taken with reference to the recent flogging of several Jewish women at Dar-el-baida, by order of the Governor of that place.

at instigation of J. Amiel, interpreter to British Vice-Consul.

That it would appear that that punishment was inflicted at the instigation and in the presence of Mr. Joseph Amiel, a native Jew, who filled the post of Interpreter to the British Vice-Consul, Mr. Lapeen, at Dar-el-baida, and enjoyed British protection.

That Sir J. D. Hay directed Vice-Consul Lapeen to dismiss Amiel from his employment, but, for the reasons stated in his despatch, to continue British protection to Amiel for a limited time, until his departure from the country.

United States' Consul protests and demands his trial by British Tribunal.

That we should observe that Colonel Matthews, the United States' Consul, protested against Amiel being allowed to quit Morocco until he had given adequate redress for having caused the servant of "an American protégé" to be flogged, and requested that he should be tried by a British Consular Tribunal, before the withdrawal of British protection.

That it was understood that Amiel has since removed, with his family, to Jerusalem, viâ Gibraltar. That Sir J. Pauncefote observed that Her Majesty's Consul had no legal power to detain him in Morocco, under the Order in Council of the 27th August, 1857, unless he had committed a criminal offence, and that, as pointed out by Sir J. D. Hay, Article IX of the Madrid Convention was adverse to the claim of the United States' Consul to intervene on behalf of Ester Amar, who was the servant of the partner of Mr. Isaac Benzaquin, a Moorish Jew under American protection as clerk to the United States' Vice-Consul at Dar-el-baida.

That our opinion was requested as to whether, on the facts stated, Amiel committed any offence punishable by British law, and whether the protest of the United States' Consul was justified.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the despatch of Vice-Consul Lapeen does not disclose precisely the nature of the occurrences which took place.

But we gather that Amiel appealed to the Moorish authorities to put the law in force against the women who were flogged, and that the chastisement was inflicted by officials acting under the authority of the Moorish Governor.

Amiel not punishable by British law.

If this was the case, we do not think Amiel, however improper his conduct, committed any offence punishable by British law.

Protest of United States' Consul not justified.

We do not think the protest of the United States' Consul was justified, as he had no authority to intervene officially in relation to the flogging of the women.

Mosquito Arbitration. Greytown duties.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 24th April, stating that he was to transmit to us papers[*] which related to questions connected with the Award of the Emperor of Austria in the matter of the Mosquito Arbitration, which formed the subject of our Reports of the 5th April and 6th June, 1882, together with the papers on which they were founded.

That our opinion was requested as to whether Her Majesty's Minister in Central America might be authorized to accept the settlement of the matters at issue as proposed by the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs in his letter to Mr. Hall, the United States' Minister at Guatemala. (Inclosure 3.)

Settlement proposed by Nicaraguan Government.

That in that letter Señor Medina proposed the official publication, periodically, of the amounts raised by local taxation in the port of Greytown, and of the purposes to which those sums were applied, under the condition, however, for which the Nicaraguan Government stipulated, that no fresh questions or claims would be raised by the British Government on account of duties levied at Greytown, prior to the promulgation of the Decree of the 9th February, 1882, publishing the Award of the Emperor of Austria.

That we should observe that that mode of settlement was suggested at the close of Lord Granville's despatch to Mr. St. John No. 50 of the 27th September, 1882, on the grounds therein explained.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should accept settlement,

That we think that Her Majesty's Minister in Central America should be authorized to accept the settlement of the matters at issue as proposed by the Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs in his letter to Mr. Hall.

and abandon claims prior to Decree of 1882.

The claim on account of duties levied prior to the promulgation of the Decree of the 9th February, 1882, were of so unsubstantial a character, that they should not be allowed to prevent the proposed satisfactory settlement of the question involved.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us papers relating to the case of Mr. O. Arsenian, which was the subject of our Report of the 30th November last and of previous Reports.

1883

That, in our Report of the 30th November, we suggested that, in order to guide the action of Her Majesty's Government in the future, inquiry should be made of Mr. Thomson whether the question of the right of Persians naturalized in Russia to Russian protection in Persia had ever been distinctly raised between the Russian and Persian Governments, and, in what class of cases naturalized Persians have, in Persia, received Russian protection as against Persian authorities, and whether such cases had frequently arisen.

That Mr. Thomson was instructed accordingly, and the inclosed despatch with inclosures had been received in reply.

That that despatch appeared to leave no doubt as to the fact that Russia claimed and exercised the right of protecting, in Persia, Persian subjects who had obtained Russian naturalization.

That copies of the replies of Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tabreez and the Russian Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran to communications addressed to them by Mr. Thomson on that subject would be found in Inclosures 3 and 4 of his despatch, and that Inclosure 6 contained the names of Persians who had become naturalized Russian subjects, and were then residing in Persia under Russian protection.

That our attention was requested to the letter from Messrs. Fox of the 15th ultimo, in which they asked, for the reasons stated by them, that Mr. Arsenian might receive the protection of Her Majesty's Legation at Tehran.

That the practice followed by Her Majesty's Government as to granting protection, in Persia, to persons born in British India of parents being subjects of Persia, was explained at p. 71 of the Report of the Naturalization Commission (inclosed).

That that practice, as it existed in 1850, was opposed to the grant of British protection in Persia to such persons, though natural-born British subjects, and à fortiori to Persians who had obtained British naturalization.

But that the instructions contained in Lord J. Russell's despatch of the 25th August, 1860, were subject to the course adopted by the other European Governments, which at that time was unknown at the Foreign Office (paragraphs 3 and 7).

That our opinion was requested as to whether the Report furnished by Mr. Thomson, on the question referred to him, would justify Her Majesty's Government in claiming the right to grant protection as against the Persian authorities, both in Persia and in Turkey, to Mr. O. Arsenian, as a naturalized British subject, under the Article IX of the Treaty between Great Britain and Persia, which secured most-favoured-nation treatment to this country.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Her Majesty's Government justified in protecting Mr. O. Arsenian.

That we think the Report furnished by Mr. Thomson on the question referred to him would justify Her Majesty's Government in claiming the right to grant protection as against the Persian authorities both in Persia and Turkey to Mr. Arsenian as a naturalized British subject, under Articles IX and XII of the Treaty between Great Britain and Persia.

But it will be a matter of delicacy and requiring care, owing to the course which has hitherto been taken by Her Majesty's Government, in ignorance of the circumstances now established, of allowing the Persian authorities at Constantinople to assume jurisdiction over Mr. Arsenian's property.

Seizure by Chileans of notes belonging to a British bank in Lima.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the accompanying list,[*] which related to the seizure by the Chilean authorities, during their occupation of the city of Lima, of the sum of 1,465,000 soles in notes of 500 soles each, belonging to the branch of the London Bank of Mexico and South America (Limited), established in Lima, under the circumstances stated in their letter of the 10th January last (vide Mr. St. John's No. 41).

Conditional surrender of notes into Mr. St. John's custody.

That a Memorandum on the facts of the case and of the action taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Legation at Lima, had been drawn up, dated the 24th November, from which we would perceive that the Chilean authorities were persuaded by Mr. A. St. John, who was in charge of Her Majesty's Legation at that place, to surrender the notes to his custody, and that they were subsequently deposited by him with the London Bank in a separate sealed safe, of which he retained the key (Mr. St. John, Nos. 59, 66, 68).

That Mr. St. John had now applied for instructions by telegraph as to what course he should take in the event of his receiving an application from the manager of the Lima branch of the bank, after the evacuation of Lima by the Chilean troops, and its reoccupation by the Peruvians under General Yglesias, an event which had already taken place[†] for the return of the notes which were in the possession, as described above, of Her Majesty's Legation (Mr. St. John, No. 99).

That Mr. St. John had obtained the custody of the notes from the Chilean authorities on the express condition set out in his written receipt for them (a copy of which formed Inclosure 2 in his despatch No. 68 of the 31st July), that he would retain them until the conclusion of the judicial inquiry which had been instituted into the alleged fraudulent issue of the notes.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Mr. St. John should be directed not to part with the notes without the consent of the Chilean authorities, from whom he had received them, and of the de facto Government of Peru which might be established after the withdrawal of the Chilean forces, and if so, whether application should be made at once to the Chilean Government for their consent.

Collision between "City of Mecca" and "Insulano."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 23rd February, stating that he was to transmit to us, together with previous correspondence on the subject, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon,* containing the answer of the Portuguese Government to the communication which, in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 21st September last, was addressed to them on the part of Her Majesty's Government. That that communication contained the arguments which were urged by Her Majesty's Government, in reply to the objections of the Portuguese Government to their proposal, that the question of the liability of Portugal for the consequences of the disregard by the Portuguese Tribunals of the International Sailing Rules in the case of the collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano" should be submitted to arbitration.

Rejection by Portugal of proposal for arbitration.

That we should perceive, from Senhor de Serpa's note of the 9th December, that the Portuguese Government again declined to entertain that proposal as being derogatory to the sovereign rights and dignity of Portugal. That his Excellency endeavoured to explain away the passage in the Judgment of the Portuguese Court, in which it was implied that the "City of Mecca" ran down the "Insulano" through the criminal fault of the captain of the former vessel, and still maintained that the Portuguese Courts were perfectly justified in making the "City of Mecca" bear the whole damages, in spite of the facts that the captain of the "Insulano" failed to comply with Article 14.

Proposed draft to Her Majesty's Minister, recording protest against Portuguese action.

That, under those circumstances, it appeared to your Lordship that the only course left to Her Majesty's Government was to record their protest against the attitude adopted by the Portuguese Government in that case, and that Sir J. Pauncefote was accordingly to transmit to us, for such observations as we might have to offer thereupon, the draft of an instruction which, with our concurrence, your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon on the subject, for communication to the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve proposed instructions.

That we concur in the proposed draft instruction.

We have, &c.

Draft of Despatch to Sir C. Wyke.

(No. . Commercial.)

Foreign Office, , 1883.

Sir,

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Baring's despatch No. 91, Commercial, dated the 17th December last, relative to the case of the collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano," and transmitting the reply of the Portuguese Government to the communication contained in my despatch No. 66, Commercial, of the 27th September.

In that reply the Portuguese Government once more reject the friendly proposal of Her Majesty's Government to refer the whole question in difference to arbitration.

The Portuguese Foreign Minister nevertheless declares in his note that it is his most earnest and sincere wish that a good understanding should be maintained between the two countries, and he expresses his conviction "of the advantages and justice of arbitration as a means of settling any disputed question between friendly and allied nations."

In view of those assurances, I have to express the surprise and regret of Her Majesty's Government at the decision arrived at. The case is one which, as before pointed out, involves not merely private rights, but the general interests of navigation, and it is a matter of especial concern to this country, as one of the great maritime nations of the world, that the International Sailing Rules should be jealously guarded and scrupulously observed in the decision of collision cases by the Tribunals of the nations which have subscribed thereto.

It is manifest that if any of those Tribunals ignore the violation of an important Sailing Rule by the Commander of a vessel who seeks reparation for the damage he may have sustained in a collision and award him full compensation, without reference to his share in the responsibility for the disaster, the efficacy of the Rules will be seriously impaired, and great laxity will result in their observance apart from the injustice of such an application of them.

For this reason the Legislature of this country has declared, by enactment in section 17 of the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1873," that if in any case of collision it is proved to the Court that any of the Rules have been infringed, the ship by which such Rule has been infringed shall be deemed to be in fault, unless it be shown that the circumstances of the case made a departure from the Rule necessary. Now in the case of the "Insulano," it is admitted that the commander, owing to his erroneous interpretation of Rule 14, violated that Rule by persisting in his attempt to cross the bows of the "City of Mecca," instead of getting out of her way, as he was bound to do, and there is not a vestige of evidence to show that the circumstances of the case rendered a departure from Rule 14 necessary. He was therefore clearly to blame, and though the Portuguese Code declares that where there is blame on both sides each party shall bear his own damages, the Portuguese Tribunals awarded him full compensation for the damage he sustained from the collision which ensued, on the ground that the "City of Mecca" was to blame for not taking timely measures to avert the catastrophe to which the original violation of Rule 14 by the "Insulano" undoubtedly gave rise.

In reply to the question, why the Article of the Portuguese Code was not applied, which declares that where there is blame on both sides each party shall bear his own damages, it is answered that the "City of Mecca" did not set up that defence. It follows, therefore, that the salutary enactment of the Portuguese Code above referred to is rendered inoperative, and a plaintiff in a collision case, who has violated an important Sailing Rule, escapes the consequence of his fault because the defendant has not admitted in his pleadings that there was blame on both sides, but seeks to throw the whole blame on the plaintiff. Her Majesty's Government consider that there has been a grave miscarriage of justice, not only to the prejudice of the British ship-owners, but also to the detriment of the general interests of navigation.

I do not propose, however, to prolong the discussion, in view of the attitude of the Portuguese Government in relation to this case. It only remains for me to add, that Her Majesty's Government fully appreciate the effort made by Senhor Serpa to remove the painful impression created by the unjustifiable attack made from the Bench on the captain and crew of the British vessel; but in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the language complained of, taken in conjunction with the statement of the Judge, that the collision occurred "evidently through the criminal fault of the captain," hardly leaves room for explanation.

I have to request that you will read this despatch to the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs, and leave a copy of it with him.

I am, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 25, 1883.

Collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano."

Publication of correspondence.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that a question had arisen as to the proper course to be taken (under the circumstances thereinafter stated) with regard to the correspondence relative to the case of the "City of Mecca."

Action brought against owners of the "City of Mecca."

That it would be perceived that at p. 8 of the First Revise for Parliament of "Further Correspondence," marked B, it was said that a personal action "is still pending before the English Courts of Justice." That a statement on that point on behalf of Lloyd's was given at p. 130 of the Final Revise for Parliament (marked A), "Commercial No. 46 (1882)." That that personal action, it appeared from those papers, was that brought by Lloyd's (the underwriters) against the owners of the "City of Mecca," to recover the amount of the Judgment obtained by them before the Portuguese Tribunal.

That it was, in fact, an action on a foreign Judgment.

That questions having been asked in the House of Commons on that case, a promise was given that the correspondence relative to it should be laid before Parliament, and accordingly, last December, the paper "Commercial No. 46 (1882)," (A), was presented to Parliament. That before, however, it could be distributed, the Portuguese note which formed the inclosure in the first letter in the further correspondence (B) was received, and it was thought more expedient to defer publication until the whole correspondence could be issued. That on the receipt of our Report of the 3rd instant, in which we expressed concurrence in the reply about to be made to the note above referred to, the despatch of the 9th instant was sent off, and that continuation paper was thereupon prepared for Parliament.

That in considering the whole correspondence, however, a question had been raised as to whether the distribution of the papers would prejudicially affect the interests of the plaintiffs in the personal action above referred to, and still pending; and, if so, whether that would involve the Secretary of State in any responsibility.

That a Minute on the point whether these papers came within the Acts of Parliament passed for the protection of persons employed in the publication of Parliamentary papers, and its inclosures, were likewise transmitted.

That our opinion was requested as to whether there was any objection to laying and issuing those two Parliamentary papers relative to the case of the "City of Mecca" under the circumstances above mentioned.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No objection to publication of the correspondence. It will not involve the Secretary of State in any responsibility.

That we do not think that there is any substantial objection to laying and issuing the two Parliamentary papers relative to the case of the "City of Mecca."

We do not think that their publication can involve the Secretary of State in any responsibility.

Collision between the "City of Mecca" and the "Insulano."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 11th June last, stating that with reference to our Reports dated the 3rd and 25th April last, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers* which relate to the case of the "City of Mecca."

Portuguese protest against British observations on case.

That we should observe that in the note, of which a copy and translation were inclosed in Sir C. Wyke's despatch of the 19th ultimo, the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs protested generally against the tenour of the observations on the case, which, in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 3rd April, were embodied in your Lordship's despatch to Sir C. Wyke dated the 9th of that month, and that it remained a matter for consideration whether any rejoinder on the part of Her Majesty's Government to Senhor Serpa's note would be either necessary or expedient.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the question submitted in that letter, and with any further observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No detailed answer expedient.

That we do not think it would be expedient to make any detailed answer to the despatch of Senhor Serpa of the 15th May, 1883. The discussion may well be treated as concluded.

Should refuse to admit validity of objections to arbitration.

It might be desirable, however, in acknowledging the receipt of that despatch, to state that Her Majesty's Government cannot admit the validity of the objections to arbitration, and regret they should have been put forward, inasmuch as the question which Her Majesty's Government suggested should be referred to arbitration was the responsibility of Portugal for a disregard by her own Tribunals of the International Sailing Rules.

That our opinion was requested as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Betts, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

My Lord,

Case of the "Trevilley." Suit for breach of charter-party.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a further correspondence in the case of the "Trevilley,"* which formed the subject of our Report of the 16th October last, which was inclosed.

Indemnity granted to Consul.

That on the 26th October the Secretary of the Steam-ship Owners' Mutual Protection and Indemnity Association forwarded to your Lordship's Department a written guarantee on behalf of the Association to indemnify Consul Wooldridge against any claims arising out of his retention of the deposit pending further instructions.

Further proceedings as to deposit.

That Mr. Wooldridge was accordingly instructed not to part with the deposit, and he was to refer us to his despatches numbered 18 to 25 respectively for a narrative of the subsequent proceedings.

That a copy of the Agreement under which the deposit was made formed Inclosure 2 in his No. 19, and we would observe that it stipulated that the deposit should remain in the Consulate "until the case in question is settled by final decision according to the Russian Law," and that if, at the expiration of six months (from the 8th April last), the decision in favour of Mr. Smith should not be reversed, the case should be considered as finally settled, and the Consul should be bound to pay the deposit to Mr. Smith.

That the six months expired on the 8th October last. That the Senate of St. Petersburgh on the 6th October (O.S.) (18th, N.S.), reversed the decision, not on the merits, but entirely on technical grounds, and ordered a new trial (Mr. Wooldridge's No. 21). That it was stated by Mr. Smith that the new trial came on in Court, but was suspended because no one appeared to represent the defendant (the captain of the "Trevilley"), and that he was therefore debarred by the conduct of the defendant from pursuing his remedy (Consul Wooldridge's No. 25).

That Mr. Smith claimed the deposit under the Agreement on the ground that the decision in his favour was not reversed "within six months." That, on the other hand, the Association claimed the deposit on the ground that the decision having been quashed, Mr. Smith was not entitled to the money.

That the Russian Court at Taganrog declined to make an order that the money should be paid into Court.

That the Association declined to refer the case to arbitration, and apparently refused to appear on the new trial, when the case could be decided on the merits.

That, in those circumstances, Mr. Currie was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be followed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The money should be paid to Mr. B. Smith, in accordance with the agreement.

That we think the money should now be handed to Mr. Berthold Smith.

The deposit was made as security for the Judgment of the Commercial Court in place of the ship, which was then under arrest, and to procure her release.

The Judgment of the Commercial Court has not been reversed on the merits, but only in respect of certain informalities of procedure. The case is still pending in that Court, a new trial having been ordered. The difficulty of bringing that trial to a determination appears to arise from the fact that the defendant is not present or represented. If, then, the deposit was returned to the parties who made it, Mr. Berthold Smith, however just his claim, would probably be left without the means of enforcing it.

It seems now to be clear that the receipt given by the Consul correctly represents the terms upon which the money was deposited. According to those terms, in the events which have happened, Mr. Berthold Smith is entitled to the money. And in existing circumstances we see no reason why the Agreement upon which the release of the ship took place should not be carried out and the money paid to Mr. Smith.

Temple, January 18, 1883.

My Lord,

Nationality of Mrs. Newinski, a British subject married to a Pole.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers* relating to the issue of a passport by Her Majesty's Consul-General at Philippopolis to Mrs. Newinski, a British subject by birth, but married to a Russian Pole, and also to the registration as British subjects of the children born of the marriage.

That it was alleged that the husband, at the time of the marriage, had forfeited his nationality of origin, and that he had acquired no other nationality since. That the children having been born out of Her Majesty's dominions, were clearly not entitled to be registered in Her Majesty's Consulate at Philippopolis; but that the question had arisen whether the mother, a natural-born British subject, had become divested of her British nationality by her marriage with Mr. Newinski, the latter having possessed no nationality at the time of the marriage, and section 10 (1) of the Naturalization Act being, therefore, inapplicable to such a case.

That your Lordship desired our opinion on that question, and also that we would inform your Lordship whether, assuming Mrs. Newinksi to have lost her British nationality, the protection of a British passport might, nevertheless, be granted to her under the peculiar circumstances of her case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it does not appear clear that Mrs. Newinski is not a Russian subject.

Unless Mr. Newinski has forfeited his Russian nationality a British passport should not be granted to his wife.

Mr. Jones, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Philippopolis, states in his letter of the 25th November, 1882, that "Mr. Newinsky was forced to quit his country in consequence of the part he took in the rebellion of 1863." He further states that Mr. Newinski had forfeited his nationality before his marriage. But how this was accomplished he does not state, and we cannot very well understand. It seems probable that he lost his civil rights by reason of his complicity in the rebellion, and his flight from the country, and that from this it has been inferred that he has "forfeited his nationality." But the two things are very different, and though he may have forfeited his civil rights in Russia, we think it probable that he is still to be regarded as a Russian subject. Under the circumstances we do not think it can be accepted, as a fact, that he is not one, and until it be established that he is not a Russian subject, we do not think a passport could properly be granted to his wife as a British subject.

If this should be established, and Mr. Newinski is to be regarded as having no nationality, a British passport might probably without impropriety be granted to Mrs. Newinski.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 31.)

My Lord,

Case of the "Trevilley." Suit for breach of Charter Party.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th instant, stating that in our Report of the 5th instant on the case of the "Trevilley," we advised that in the events which have happened, Mr. B. Smith was entitled to the deposit placed in the hands of Consul Wooldridge. That as the date of the reversal of the Judgment of the Commercial Court at Taganrog by the Senate at St. Petersburgh was most material, your Lordship, before taking any further action as to the disposal of the deposit, caused a telegraphic communication to be addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh,* instructing him to ascertain the precise date of the reversal of the Judgment, and, if possible, to send by mail an official copy of the Judgment on appeal. That Sir E. Thornton replied by telegraph on the 10th instant, that the date of the reversal, by the Senate, of the Judgment of the Commercial Court of Taganrog was the 13th (25th) September last, and the date of the Ukase of the Senate setting forth the reversal was the 6th (18th) October last.

That his Excellency subsequently telegraphed† that there was a difficulty in procuring a copy of the Judgment alluded to, but that that was rendered immaterial, as the document in question had then been supplied, together with a certified translation, by the agent of the Steam-ship Owners' Mutual Protection Association, who had made the deposit on behalf of the owners of the "Trevilley," and now claimed its restitution.

That by the terms of the Agreement the deposit was to remain in the Consulate until the case should be settled "by final decision according to Russian law," and that it was only in case the Judgment should not have been reversed before the 8th October, that the deposit became payable to Mr. B. Smith.

That the case not having been "settled by final decision according to Russian law," your Lordship apprehended that the Indemnity Association who made the deposit were not entitled to its return, and that, therefore, the only question which arose was whether Mr. B. Smith was entitled to the deposit on the ground that the Judgment was not reversed before the 8th October.

That on that point we should observe that, according to Sir E. Thornton's telegram, the actual reversal of the Judgment took place on the 25th September, but that the Ukase by which it was carried out was dated the 18th October (N.S.).

That in those circumstances, Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the deposit should be handed to Mr. B. Smith, or should remain in the Consulate "until the case in question is settled by final decision according to Russian law."

That inclosed were the papers previously submitted to us, and in addition thereto the copy of the Judgment on appeal, Sir E. Thornton's telegram of the 10th instant, and our Report of the 5th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Deposit should remain with Consul if Judgment was reversed on the 25th September

That if the actual reversal of the Judgment took place on the 25th September, we think the deposit ought not to be handed to Mr. Berthold Smith, but should remain in the Consulate until the case in question is settled by final decision according to Russian law.

---

* To Sir E. Thornton, January 9, 1883.

† Telegram, January 17, 1883.

Should inquire as to exact nature and effect of proceedings.

It does not, however, appear perfectly clear whether what took place on the 25th September amounted to an effective reversal of the Judgment, the Ukase being a formal proceeding, which necessarily followed the other, and which might be issued at any time, or whether, on the other hand, the reversal could not be said to be complete until the issue of the Ukase. We think inquiry should be made on this point, and as to the exact nature of the proceedings, but in the meantime the deposit should remain in the Consulate.

Collisions between the "Minine" and the "Redesdale" and "Fitzroy."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers relative to the collisions that occurred in the Bay of Gibraltar on the 8th October last between the Russian frigate "Minine" and the British vessels "Redesdale" and "Fitzroy."*

Claim on Russian Government.

That it would be seen from the letters of Messrs. Cooper and Co., the Solicitors of the owners of the "Redesdale" and "Fitzroy," that the latter preferred claims against the Russian Government on account of damages caused to those vessels through the collisions in question.

Proposed reference to Admiralty Court.

They asked that their claim might be laid by your Lordship before the Russian Government, and that, in case the Russian Government should raise any difficulty as to their liability, it might be arranged that the matter be referred to the Judge of the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice.

That your Lordship desired to be advised whether there is a case, as set forth in those papers, in which a representation could properly be addressed to the Russian Government in the sense indicated by Messrs. Cooper and Co.

That copies of Reports of the Law Officers and the Queen's Advocate relating to similar applications in the case of collisions between British vessels and foreign ships of war were inclosed for reference, and that copies of the Protests of the masters of the two British steamers would be found in Messrs. Cooper and Co.'s letter of the 26th November.

That our opinion was requested on the question submitted in that letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Desired representation can properly be addressed to Russian Government.

My Lord,

Vice-Consul Colledge v. "Globe." Charge as to wrecking conspiracy.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us papers* relating to a charge brought against Mr. Colledge, the British Vice-Consul at Kertch, of complicity in a conspiracy in wrecking or running ashore vessels coming from Constantinople.

Application by defendants for papers.

That Mr. Colledge, having taken proceedings at the Bow Street Police Court against the proprietor of the "Globe" newspaper for libel, in consequence of a paragraph inserted in that paper in connection with that matter, Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, who appeared for the defence, had applied to your Lordship for such documents as might be required to be produced at the adjourned examination.

That your Lordship desired our opinion as to whether, and to what extent, your Lordship would be justified in producing in Court any official documents, or in supplying other evidence in relation to the case.

That the proceedings at Bow Street had been adjourned to Thursday, the 13th instant.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated the 12th instant, inclosing correspondence† relative to the application of the Russian Government for the arrest of Mr. Colledge.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should consider request for any specific document, but not one for papers generally.

That, if Mr. Lewis should request the production of any specific document for the purpose of producing it in evidence, we think his application should be considered, but at the same time it would be unadvisable, upon an application general in its terms, to produce all documents bearing upon Mr. Colledge's conduct, now in possession of the Foreign Office.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received January 13.)

Temple, January 12, 1883.

My Lord,

Nai Rahtchinda v. Chin Sin Peng, a British subject. Suit for recovery of value of rice mill destroyed by fire.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 8th December last, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, a note from Prince Prisdang,‡ the Siamese Minister, inclosing a despatch from his Government in which they expressed their dissatisfaction at the Judgment delivered by the British Consular Court at Bangkok in a case where the plaintiff was a Siamese and the defendant a British subject (Anglo-Chinese), and their desire to be informed of the Tribunal to which the plaintiff might be allowed to appeal.

That Sir Julian had the honour to call our attention to the statement contained in Inclosure 2, from which it would be seen that the plaintiff sued the defendant for the value of a rice mill rented of him by the latter, during whose occupancy it was burnt down. That the plaintiff produced an Agreement under which any loss by fire was to be made good by the defendant, but as that document contained alterations not satisfactorily accounted for, the Court rejected the evidence of such contract and gave Judgment only for the arrears of rent due.

Proceedings in Consular Court.

Failure to appeal to Singapore.

That the proceedings took place in accordance with Article 2 of the Supplementary Agreement between the two Governments of Her Britannic Majesty and their Majesties the First and Second Kings of Siam, of the 13th May, 1856, and Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 28th July, 1856, copies of which were inclosed.* That the plaintiff was informed that formal notice of an appeal to Singapore must be given within fifteen days of the Judgment (Order in Council, section 5), but instead of taking the proper steps, he referred the matter to his Government, and a correspondence ensued, of which a copy formed Inclosure 1 in Prince Prisdang's note.

That Sir Julian was directed by your Lordship to submit, for our approval, a draft reply, which your Lordship proposed to address to the Siamese Minister. That Sir Julian was at the same time to observe that, as the contract related to land in Siam, it was presumed that, apart from the disputed Agreement, it should have been governed by Siamese law as regarded the liability of the tenant for loss by fire, and that if by Siamese law the defendant was liable, as appeared to be the contention of the Siamese Government, it would follow that there had been a failure of justice.

Question as to appeal to Privy Council.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was therefore to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, if the Singapore Court of Appeal cannot, by reason of the plaintiff's failure to give the required notice, entertain the appeal, the plaintiff could obtain any relief by direct application to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or by petition to the Queen in Council.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Approve reply to Siamese Minister.

That we approve the inclosed draft reply which your Lordship proposes to address to the Siamese Minister.

Circumstances of case do not justify appeal.

We are disposed to think that the Queen in Council could, on the recommendation of the Judicial Committee, entertain an appeal from the decision of the Consular Court. But where the party aggrieved had failed to prosecute an appeal before the proper Court, the Judicial Committee would certainly only give leave to appeal under very exceptional circumstances. And we do not think that circumstances exist in the present case which would, or, in our judgment, ought, to induce the Judicial Committee to take so unusual a course.

Case should again be brought before Consular Court upon fresh grounds.

At the same time we quite agree that if the law of Siam be as suggested, there appears to have been a failure of justice. The decision given is only to the effect that the Agreement cannot be admitted as evidence, and "therefore" the claim is rejected. The question, what were the rights of the parties in the absence of the Agreement, does not appear to have been entered upon. And if this question has not been disposed of, we think it might be well to take steps to bring the case again before the Consular Court on this, and also upon the ground that the destruction of the mill was due to the negligence of the tenant, which appears to be raised by the plaintiff and not to have been investigated.

Omission in proceedings in Consular Court.

We observe that by the IInd Article of the Supplementary Treaty, which provides that the British Consul alone shall hear and determine such cases as the present, it is also provided that the Siamese authorities shall be at liberty to attend and listen to the investigation of the case, and copies of the proceedings will be furnished from time to time, or whenever desired, to the Siamese authorities till the case is concluded.

We cannot find any trace of this course having been pursued in the present instance. If it had been, it is quite possible that the difficulty which has arisen would have been avoided.

We have &c.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from Earl Granville to Prince Prisdang.

M. le Ministre, Foreign Office, , 1883.

YOUR Highness did me the honour to call my attention, in a note of the 26th August last, to the case of Nai Rahtchinda, a Siamese subject, who has, in the opinion of your Government, suffered injustice at the hands of Her Majesty's Agent at Bangkok, by a Judgment delivered by him in the Consular Court, and by his refusal to admit of an appeal to Singapore.

I understand, from the papers submitted to me by your Highness, that Nai Rahtchinda sued a British subject, named Chin Sin Peng, for the value of a rice mill hired from him by the latter, during whose occupancy it was burnt down; and that the Court, having rejected the plaintiff's claim for compensation, and only allowed for the unpaid rent, he applied to have the case re-tried. He was informed at Her Majesty's Agency that the case could not be re-tried at Bangkok, but that if he sought to reverse or alter the decision he must give formal notice of appeal within fifteen days from the date of the decision, and give security for costs. He did not take this course, but obtained the intervention of the Siamese Government, who complain not only that Mr. Palgrave declined to discuss the matter further with them, but that he had acted contrary to precedent in not endeavouring to come to an understanding with the Siamese authorities in a case affecting one of their countrymen before giving his final decision.

I am aware that, by the IInd Article of the Treaty of 1855, it is provided that any disputes arising between British and Siamese subjects shall be heard and determined by the British Consul in conjunction with the proper Siamese officers, but I have the honour to remind your Highness of the modification introduced into this arrangement by the IInd Article of the Supplementary Agreement, where it is laid down that all civil cases, in which the defendant is a British subject, shall be heard and determined by the British Consul alone.

With regard to the plaintiff's right to appeal, I beg to point out to your Highness that he was warned that it would expire fifteen days after the delivery of the Judgment, but that, instead of giving the formal notice required, he placed his case in the hands of the Siamese Government, who laid it before Her Majesty's Agent after the time for appeal was past.

With regard to the allegation that there has been no formal trial, and that the decision to which exception is taken was merely the result of a request on the part of the plaintiff for the good offices of the Court (in which event it would still be open to him to institute a formal trial), I beg to observe that this view is not borne out by the papers before me, which show that the case was formally instituted, tried, and decided by the Court. That being so, Her Majesty's Agent has no power to waive the rule regarding the fifteen days' notice; neither would the Supreme Court at Singapore have power to hear the appeal.

But the decision given is only to the effect that, as the Agreement showed on the face of it alterations which were not satisfactorily accounted for, it could not be received in evidence, and therefore the claim was rejected. The question, what were the rights of the parties apart from the Agreement, does not appear to have been entered upon. Her Majesty's Government are advised that if this question has not been disposed of, it is still competent to the plaintiff to commence a fresh suit in the Consular Court for damage for the loss of the mill, by reason of the defendant's legal liability as tenant to compensate the landlord, apart from any Agreement, and also by reason of the defendant's negligence, if such can be proved.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received February 3.)

My Lord, Temple, February 2, 1883.

Nai Rahtchinda v. Chin Sin Peng. Suit for recovery of value of mill destroyed by fire.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo,* stating that, with reference to our Report of the 12th ultimo on the case of Nai Rahtchinda, a Siamese subject, who recently instituted a suit against Chin Sin Peng, a British subject, in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Bangkok, to recover the value of a rice mill destroyed by fire, he was directed to request our opinion as to the form in which the case should be brought again before the Consular Court, whether by the plaintiff instituting a fresh suit for damages for the loss of the mill by reason of the defendant's negligence, and by reason also of his liability, by Siamese law of landlord and tenant, to make good the loss apart from the question of the agreement entered into between the parties, or whether the plaintiff should apply to the Consular Court to grant a new trial or to review its Judgment, or whether the Court should take the initiative in reopening the case for that purpose, after notice to the parties.

That your Lordship was aware that it was unusual to request us to advise as to the conduct of legal proceedings pending in a Consular Court, but that, in the present case, owing to the fact that no legal advice was obtainable on the spot, and that the Consul was not a professional Judge, it was very desirable, in order to avoid further difficulties and complications, to supply him with distinct directions as to his powers and duties in the matter.

That, under those circumstances, your Lordship would be obliged to us if we would be good enough to supplement our previous Report by advising your Lordship on the points above indicated.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Course to be pursued with regard to a fresh suit.

That the proper course to be taken must depend upon what was the exact question raised in the suit brought by the plaintiff, and upon which the decision was pronounced. The information before us is somewhat meagre, but we gather that the only matter put forward and dealt with by the Consul was a claim founded on the terms of the agreement.

If this be so, we think the proper course would be for the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for damages for the loss of the mill by reason of the defendant's negligence, and also of his liability, by Siamese law, to make good the loss apart from the terms of the agreement entered into between the parties.

There is, no doubt, a difficulty in this course, inasmuch as the claim would be the same as that previously adjudicated upon, though based upon different grounds; but seeing that legal advice was not obtainable on the spot, and that the Consul was not a professional Judge, we do not think this ought to stand in the way of the plaintiff if he really has substantial grounds for a claim against the defendant which has not yet been the subject of a judicial decision.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 7, 1883.

Trial of Ai Baa, illegitimate son of an Englishman, for murder of a Siamese policeman.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 27th January last, stating that by your Lordship's direction he submitted to us the accompanying papers* which had been communicated to your Lordship by the Siamese Minister at this Court relative to the case of Ai Baa, who was sentenced by the Consular Court at Bangkok to three years' imprisonment.

That Ai Baa had been handed over for trial to Mr. Palgrave, the British Consul-General, it having been ascertained that the prisoner was the son of a British subject. That the crime charged against him (and which the Siamese Government allege that he has confessed) was that of murdering a Siamese policeman.

Complaint of Siamese Government as to inadequacy of sentence.

That the Siamese Government took exception to the sentence as a wholly inadequate one, considering the nature of the offence.

That it was believed that the prisoner, who was born in Siam, was an illegitimate son of an Englishman by a Siamese woman. That such persons, according to the usage prevailing in Siam, were treated as British subjects by the Siamese authorities, and enjoy British protection. But there is no provision in the Treaty between Great Britain and Siam as to "British protection," and the Orders in Council regulating the exercise of civil and criminal jurisdiction in Siam by Her Majesty's Consular officers

* For list of papers, see Report of January 12, 1883.

* Inclosures 3 and 4 in Prince Prisdang's letter of the 15th November, 1882.

contained no provision empowering them to exercise that jurisdiction in the case of persons not being British subjects, but only enjoying "British protection." Copies of the Treaty of 1855 and Supplementary Agreement of 1856, and of the Orders in Council of 1856 and of 1876, were transmitted therewith.*

That Article II of the Supplementary Agreement (p. 11) provided that criminal cases in which the defendant was a British subject should be tried and decided by the British Consul alone, but that the Siamese authorities might attend the trial, and copies of the proceedings should be furnished to them from time to time, or whenever desired, until the case was concluded.

That by the Order in Council of 1876 the maximum punishment which a Consular Court could inflict was three years' imprisonment, but by Article 22 of the Order of 1856 the defendant might be sent for trial to Singapore and be dealt with there as if the crime had been committed within the colonial jurisdiction. That in the present case, Ai Baa was tried before the British Consular Court, found guilty, and the maximum sentence of three years' imprisonment was inflicted. That it did not appear from the correspondence whether he was tried with assessors, as required by Article 14 of the Order of 1856 and Article 4 of the Order of 1876. But, in reply to the complaint of the inadequacy of the sentence, Consul-General Palgrave informed the Siamese Government that the case was confused; that the truth could not be obtained from the evidence; that although there was not sufficient evidence to convict the prisoner according to British law, there was sufficient "presumption of guilt" to warrant his undergoing the full sentence of the law applicable to his case, namely, three years' imprisonment; that if he had been sent to Singapore for trial he would have been acquitted. (See Correspondence, pp. 5, 8, and 12.) That Mr. Palgrave declined to comply with the application of the Siamese Government for a copy of the proceedings, on the ground that the case was concluded. (Ibid., pp. 16 and 19.)

Irregularity of proceedings of Mr. Palgrave.

That it appeared to your Lordship that Mr. Palgrave's proceedings in the case were very irregular, and that the tone of his letter of the 14th June (p. 19) to the Kromatah was not justified under the circumstances.

That your Lordship apprehended that if Ai Baa be illegitimate (as to which there can hardly be any doubt), the sentence pronounced on him was illegal by reason of the absence of any provision in the Order in Council empowering the Consular Court to exercise jurisdiction over any but British subjects. That in any case, if, as stated by Mr. Palgrave, the evidence was insufficient and "the truth could not be obtained," the prisoner should have been discharged; and that, under the circumstances, copies of the proceedings should have been furnished to the Siamese authorities, although the case was concluded. That as regarded the question of jurisdiction, your Lordship was informed that there were many persons in Siam enjoying British protection to whom it would be a great hardship to be handed over to Siamese jurisdiction.

Question as to jurisdiction over protected persons in Siam.

That it appeared, therefore, to your Lordship, that it might be impolitic to discharge Ai Baa on the ground that the Consular Court did not possess jurisdiction in his case, and that it would be preferable that a short Order in Council should be passed to extend British jurisdiction to persons enjoying British protection in Siam, and to legalize the past exercise of such jurisdiction. That the registration of "protected persons" might be provided for as in the Order in Council for the Ottoman dominions,† of which a copy was transmitted therewith.

Proposed Order in Council.

That, in the meanwhile, your Lordship proposed to instruct Mr. Palgrave to report on the status of Ai Baa, to send home a copy of the proceedings, and also to furnish copies of the proceedings to the Siamese authorities, pending the further consideration of the case by Her Majesty's Government.

Proposed instructions to Mr. Palgrave.

That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether we concurred in the above view of the case, and in the course proposed to be followed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we concur in the course proposed to be followed, and in the above view of the case so far as regards Mr. Palgrave's proceedings, which appear to have been very irregular.

Concur in instructions and view as to Mr. Palgrave's action.

But with reference to the suggestion, that a short Order in Council should be passed to extend British jurisdiction to persons enjoying British protection in Siam, and to legalize past exercise of such jurisdiction, we have to make the following observations:—

---

* Treaty of the 18th April, 1855, and Supplementary Agreement of the 13th May, 1856. No. 411. Orders in Council of the 28th July, 1856, and the 23rd October, 1876. Confidential Nos. 575 and 2963.

† Confidential No. 2873.

By the Treaty between Her Majesty and the Kings of Siam of the 18th April, 1855, and the Supplementary Agreement thereto of the 13th May, 1856, jurisdiction is conferred on the British Consul in those cases only in which the defendant is a "British subject." No such jurisdiction appears to be conferred in respect of persons who are not British subjects, but only enjoy British protection in Siam. As at present advised, we think the Order in Council could not confer on the Consul any valid jurisdiction in Siam beyond the limits defined by the Treaty.

Opposed to Order in Council, as Treaty does not confer jurisdiction over foreigners under British protection.

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, March 15, 1883.

Fezoolabhoy Abdoolaly. As to jurisdiction of Consul at Bangkok in cases of bankruptcy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he had to transmit to us, by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the accompanying list,* which related to a complaint preferred by an Indo-British subject, named Fezoolabhoy Abdoolaly, against Mr. Palgrave, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Siam, in connection with proceedings in bankruptcy pending in Her Majesty's Consular Court at Bangkok, and in the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements.

That the case of the complainant was stated by him in his letter of the 13th January, and Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the explanations given by Mr. Palgrave in the Memorandum inclosed in his despatch No. 5.

That it would appear from the above document that the Consular Court had hitherto exercised jurisdiction in bankruptcy, although such jurisdiction was not vested in Her Majesty's Consuls by any of the Orders in Council for regulating the exercise of Her Majesty's jurisdiction in Siam. Copies of those Orders were sent herewith.

That the complainant filed a Petition in the Consular Court praying for relief as a bankrupt, and stating that he not only traded under his own name in Bangkok, Singapore, and Surat, but also as a partner to the extent of a third share in the firm of Hyderbhoy Moothabhoy and Co., of Bangkok.

That a meeting of creditors was held and his assets were realized and paid into Court.

Recourse of bankrupt to Supreme Court at Singapore.

That in the meanwhile the complainant who had proceeded to Singapore where some of his creditors resided, filed a Petition in bankruptcy in the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, having been advised that Her Majesty's Consular Court at Bangkok had no jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

Refusal of Consul to remit assets to Singapore.

That Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bangkok was thereupon requested by him and also by the Sheriff of Singapore to remit to the Supreme Court of the Colony the assets in the custody of the Consular Court.

That Mr. Palgrave declined to do so, and it would seem from his despatch No. 5, that he was about to proceed with the distribution of the separate estate of the insolvent among the creditors at Bangkok.

That the Supreme Court of Singapore had power under Article 24 of the Orders in Council of 1856 to stay proceedings in the Consular Court, in suits of a civil nature between British subjects, but had declined to make any Order in the present case presumably on the ground that it did not come within the terms of the enactment.

That the assets or part of them were in the custody of the Court at Bangkok, and no assignment appeared to have been made by the bankrupt of his property.

That he had selected the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements as the forum of his bankruptcy, and wished the assets then in Court at Bangkok to be administered in Singapore.

That if, as your Lordship apprehended, the Consular Court at Bangkok had no jurisdiction in bankruptcy, your Lordship would be glad to be advised whether with the previous assent of the Supreme Court at Singapore, the assets might properly be transmitted to that Court as desired by the bankrupt.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent in the matter for the guidance of Her Majesty's Consulate at Bangkok.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Consular Court has no jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

That it appears clear that under the Order in Council of 1856, the Consular Court at Bangkok has no jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

Consul should, with its assent, transmit assets to Court at Singapore.

We think, therefore, that under the circumstances Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok may properly be instructed to transmit the assets in his hands to the Supreme Court at Singapore, as desired by the bankrupt, if that Court assent to their being so transmitted.

Ai Baa. Sentenced by Consular Court at Bangkok.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us the papers* which related to Ai Baa, who was sentenced by the Consular Court at Bangkok to three years' imprisonment, and which formed the subject of our Report of the 7th February last.

That it now appeared that it was upon evidence taken by Siamese officials that Mr. Palgrave sentenced the prisoner; and that our opinion was requested as to whether, in view of the irregularity of Mr. Palgrave's proceedings in the case, instructions should be sent to the Acting British Agent and Consul-General at Bangkok, by telegraph, directing him to set Ai Baa at liberty, and not to interfere with any action which the Siamese authorities might take against that person.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Irregularity of proceedings do not invalidate his trial.

That, although taken before Siamese officials, it appears, from the statement at the end of the depositions, that they were read over to the witnesses by the Consul in the presence of the accused. Presuming, as we do, that an opportunity was given to him to interrogate the witnesses, we do not think that any irregularity sufficient to invalidate the trial has occurred, though the course taken was very objectionable.

Not advisable to release him on account of the Siamese authorities.

We would also suggest that, if Ai Baa were now released, he would probably receive very hard treatment at the hands of the Siamese authorities. Under these circumstances, we doubt whether it would be advisable to order the release of the accused.

British Consular jurisdiction over protected persons, and its recognition by Siamese Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 7th February last, in the case of Ai Baa, of which Report a printed copy was inclosed, he had the honour to transmit to us the papers relating to the exercise of jurisdiction by the British Consular Court in Siam over protected persons, and its recognition by the Siamese Government.* That our opinion was now requested as to whether, under the circumstances stated by the Acting Consul-General at Bangkok, he should be instructed to obtain a Declaration (by an exchange of notes or otherwise) from the Siamese Government, recognizing British jurisdiction over protected British subjects, and whether such Declaration would be sufficient to support such an Order in Council as was suggested in the reference to us from the Foreign Office of the 27th January last, and which was embodied in our Report of the 7th February.

Proposed to obtain Declaration from Siamese Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Newman presents the question in a new aspect. It would appear that very many of the children of British subjects who receive British protection, though illegitimate according to our law, if they were the children of Englishmen, are the offspring of the marriage of the subjects of British India and other parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

And such offspring would, as we understand, be regarded as legitimate in those dominions, and also legitimate according to the law of Siam. If this be so, we think they may properly be regarded as British subjects.

Offspring of male British subjects should be treated as British subjects till proved illegitimate.

There may, of course, be children of British subjects who do not come within this category, and are not, strictly speaking, entitled to the privilege of British subjects. But we quite recognize the difficulty pointed out by Mr. Newman, of ascertaining decisively in all cases the status of the children of British male subjects. Under the circumstances, therefore, the practically convenient course would probably be to treat them as British subjects, unless the fact of illegitimacy should be brought to the knowledge of the Consulate.

Not expedient to raise question with Siamese Government.

As it is not likely that there will be many such cases, it might be more expedient to avoid raising the question with the Siamese Government until some practical necessity for so doing arises.

R. Morier's despatch, and generally of the correspondence comprised in the print, whether we were still of opinion that the Spanish Consul could be charged with any suppression of fact to which could be attributed the unfortunate error committed by the British officials, and if not, whether, having regard to the provisions of the Extradition Treaty, we were of opinion that the part taken by the Spanish Consul in bringing about the surrender of the fugitives by way of expulsion from Gibraltar, and preconcerted arrest by the Spanish police, was such as to justify Her Majesty's Government in addressing any complaint or remonstrance to the Government of Spain.

Cases of P. Lawler and Spanish emigrants sent from Gibraltar in 1844.

We were honoured also with a further letter from Mr. Currie, of the 20th December, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, marked in the margin,* relating respectively to the case of Patrick Lawler, a convict, who, having escaped from Gibraltar in 1860, was recaptured at Algeciras, and was subsequently set at liberty on the Neutral Ground, and to the circumstances under which certain Spanish emigrants were sent away from Gibraltar in August 1844.

That those papers might be of assistance to us in forming an opinion on the question connected with the Cuban refugees which was submitted to us in Mr. Currie's letter of yesterday's date.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Cannot charge Spanish Consul with suppressing facts;

That, having perused the Report of the Committee and the correspondence comprised in the accompanying print, we do not think that the unfortunate error committed by British officials can justly be said to be due to "a suppression of fact" by the Spanish Consul in the sense in which those words would be ordinarily understood.

The Consul appears to have communicated two documents as he received them to General Baynes. In the first (the copy of the telegram from the Governor of Algeciras) Maceo is described as "the exiled Cuban." In the second (the telegram from the Governor of Cadiz) the description is the same, but the following words are added: "This implies that he was undergoing imprisonment."

There is nothing before us to show in what sense General Baynes read these descriptions, except the employment by him of the phrase "fugitive criminal" in the Memorandum of the 16th August, addressed by him to the Police Magistrate, which leaves his interpretation still in doubt. But if General Baynes did draw the inference from the expressions referred to that Maceo and his companions were criminals of a class whose extradition could be demanded, he ought not to have done so, and we do not think that the Spanish Consul can be held responsible for such an error, if it existed.

But the fact remains that the application by the Spanish Consul, based upon no ground of international right, was the foundation and the cause of the error that has been committed, whether that error proceeded from a wrong inference drawn from the phrases employed, or from a wrong exercise of discretion applied to the true state of facts.

The second question submitted to us presents different considerations. If it were clear that the Consul had requested that a political offender should be delivered over by arrangement under cover of a mere order of expulsion, we should feel disposed to answer the question in the affirmative, but it seems doubtful whether this is the case.

On the one hand, the formal application requests that Maceo may be expelled from the garrison "if possible," yet it must be observed that the same documents show that the Spanish authorities desired "the apprehension" of Maceo, and the informal note of the 16th August expresses the hope "that we may do something in the matter should they" (the fugitives) "come to this place."

There was also perfect readiness on the part of the Spanish police to accept the surrender, as distinguished from expulsion, and to take advantage of the opportunities presented to rearrest Maceo and his companions.

Nor Spanish authorities with having acted in bad faith.

Grounds for strong representations.

Leaving the exact nature of the request in doubt, we think that no charge should be made against the Spanish authorities of having acted in bad faith, or even of having with intention made a demand they had no right to make; but there appears to us to be ground for representing most strongly to the Spanish Government that the application made by their Representative was the source from which the error of the British officials has proceeded, and that the excessive desire of those officials to act in a friendly spirit towards the Spanish Government having led them into that error, advantage ought not to be taken of an act occasioned by such a cause, and which certainly cannot be justified as between Her Majesty's Government and their officials, or between the British Government and the persons arrested.

The seizure of convict Lawler not a parallel case.

We do not think the case of the convict Lawler can be quoted to the Spanish Government as one parallel to the present. The prisoner was then brought from Spain without the knowledge, and not by the action, of the Spanish authorities.

In the opinion of the Law Officers, the man having been made insensible, and brought away in that condition by a British official, the case was the same as if his removal from Spanish territory had been forcible, and it was therefore clear that a breach of international law had occurred. Nothing of the kind, however, can be alleged here.

My Lord,

"Léon XIII." Sir R. Morier's note to Spanish Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th November last, in the draft instructions which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid in the case of the "Léon XIII," he was directed to transmit to us the draft of the instructions which were finally addressed on the 14th November to Sir R. Morier, and his despatch No. 178 of the 17th ultimo, in which he transmitted copy of a note which, in pursuance of those instructions, he had addressed to the Spanish Government. That it would be observed that Sir. R. Morier in that note had supplemented the reply, which he was instructed to make to the Spanish note of the 30th August, with various explanations respecting the law of habeas corpus, the accuracy of which, in point of law, appears open to doubt. Thus he stated that the writ of habeas corpus was a remedy given to the subject against irregularities by "agents of the law," whereas your Lordship apprehended that it was a remedy against all illegal or unjust restraint of personal freedom. That he (Sir R. Morier) further stated that in the present case the writ could only be procured when the matter got into the hands of a responsible and respectable body like that of the Association of Engineers, at Singapore, and that that remedial act could not be initiated at Aden.

That our opinion was requested as to the extent to which the terms of Sir R. Morier's note should be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Should be approved except statements as to writs of habeas corpus.

That we think the terms of Sir R. Morier's note should be approved with the exception of those portions of it to which reference is made above, and which contain inaccurate statements with respect to the law applicable to writs of habeas corpus.

That the former of these statements is imperfect, as it states only one of the cases to which the remedy by writ of habeas corpus is applicable.

No impediment to application for writ of habeas corpus at Aden.

That the latter contains more positive error. There was no legal impediment to the application for the writ at Aden.

Case of the "Tangier." Fired on by Spanish authorities at Carthagena.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 12th January last, stating that with reference to his letter of the 3rd January relating to the case of the "Tangier," he informed us, by direction of your Lordship, that in accordance with the advice communicated by us verbally on the 4th January, your Lordship caused a telegraphic instruction to be dispatched on the following day to Sir Robert Morier, of which a copy was inclosed.[*]

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to inclose, for our consideration, a draft of a despatch[†] which your Lordship proposed to address to Sir Robert Morier on the same subject. That Sir Julian was also to inclose a despatch which had just been received from Sir Robert Morier,[‡] transmitting a copy of a note which he addressed to the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs in pursuance of the telegraphic instructions above referred to. That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would be good enough to inform your Lordship whether we approved of the terms of the draft despatch then submitted for our consideration.

We were also honoured with Mr. Currie's letter of the 24th January last transmitting to us herewith, for our consideration in connection with the papers then before us, two despatches[§] from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, forwarding copies and translations of two notes from the Spanish Government defending the action of their authorities in the case of the "Tangier."

That Mr. Currie was to add that as it would now be necessary to substitute for the proposed instructions to Sir Robert Morier a rejoinder to the Spanish notes, your Lordship would be glad if we would favour you with our opinion as to the general terms of such reply.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 31st January, transmitting to us the accompanying despatch[‖] from Sir Robert Morier containing further observations on the case of the "Tangier," together with a chart of the harbour of Carthagena, and he was to request us to take that despatch into our consideration, together with the papers at present before us relative to the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Approving instructions to Sir R. Morier with alterations, and suggesting answer to Spanish notes.

That we approve generally of the terms of the draft despatch submitted to us on the 12th ultimo.

We, however, suggest that the subsequent correspondence renders it unnecessary to emphasize any complaints in relation to the constitution of the Court, or the sentence imposed upon the master of the "Tangier." The position taken up by Sir Robert Morier in reference to these subjects may be maintained, and it may be well to show that the account contained in the despatch of the Spanish Minister cannot be accepted as accurate. Sir Robert Morier's Memorandum affords grounds for establishing that the story is not a consistent one, and that some of the circumstances relied on by the Spanish Minister himself prove that the "Tangier" cannot have been departing with the haste and at the speed suggested. We think, too, the fact that no formal representation was made to the master of that vessel, and no steps taken to ascertain that he understood what was meant by the official who desired him to stop, increases the gravity of the action subsequently taken. Stress, too, may well be laid on the very trivial grounds upon which, even accepting the Spanish story, so violent a course was adopted, and it should be borne in mind that the vessel had cleared for Valencia, and therefore steps could be taken (as indeed they were) against the vessel and captain at that port, so that there was the less excuse for imperilling the lives of the crew.

But the nature of the arguments contained in the despatch of the Marquis de la Vega of the 4th January, causes the act of firing rifle ball cartridge to become one of serious and prominent importance, and renders it necessary to make the strongest protest against the suggestion that whenever a vessel is hailed by the Spanish authorities and refuses to stop, the lives of the crew may be taken in order to enforce obedience to the order. It may be pointed out that the established and recognized habit of firing blank charges, and then shot from a cannon, is founded upon the intention of first warning and then impeding the vessel's course—a result which would be obtained by the course pursued. But the firing of rifle bullets cannot injure the vessel, whilst it probably will destroy human life, and as such firing is not generally recognized as a warning to stop the vessel's course, no captain would choose to do so when such an act would necessarily bring his crew into greater danger. If death had resulted in this instance, we presume Her Majesty's Government would have felt compelled to insist that compensation should be paid to the relatives of any person killed on board the English vessel. If this view be correct we think that the Spanish Government should be informed that Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the right of the Spanish authorities to take or endanger the lives of English subjects for so insufficient a reason as that existing in this case, and that it most strongly protests against the course that has been pursued.

Case of the "Tangier." Fired on by Spanish authorities at Carthagena.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was to inclose, for our consideration, a draft of a despatch to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid relative to the case of the "Tangier."

That the instructions which it contained had been altered in accordance with the suggestions made in our Report of the 10th instant upon the subject, and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we concurred in the amended despatch as then transmitted.

That our Report of the 10th instant was returned for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

Concur in despatch to Sir R. Morier, but suggest further alterations.

That we concur in the amended despatch as now transmitted. But we would suggest that the concluding language should be somewhat stronger, and so couched as to leave the matter somewhat more open for further action.

After the words "the one existing in this case" in the last paragraph but one, some such words as the following might, perhaps, with advantage, be added:—

"Her Majesty's Government entertain a confident expectation that on further consideration the Spanish Government will come to the conclusion that the course which was taken by the authorities at Carthagena cannot be justified, and that it would be most prejudicial to the interests of maritime commerce, including that of Spain itself, if it were to be maintained that such acts of violence were justifiable as regards the crew of foreign vessels under such circumstances as existed in the present case, even assuming the version of the Spanish authorities at Carthagena to be accurate.

"In the meantime, Her Majesty's Government protest most strongly against the course which has been pursued, and which is warranted by no international usage."

the 24th November last. I have to convey to you my approval of all your proceedings as therein reported.

The correspondence which has passed renders it unnecessary that I should recapitulate the facts of this deplorable incident, or that I should emphasize the complaints already put forward with regard to the constitution of the Court and the sentence imposed upon the master of the "Tangier."

The account contained in the Spanish Minister's note of the 4th ultimo cannot be accepted as accurate.

A careful examination of the two versions laid before Her Majesty's Government and of the analysis of the conflicting statements furnished in the Memorandum accompanying your despatch No. 15, leads to the certain conclusion that the Spanish account is not a consistent one, and that some of the circumstances relied upon by the Spanish Minister himself prove that the "Tangier" cannot have been departing with the haste and at the speed suggested. The trivial nature of the offences charged against the master of that vessel and the fact that no formal representàtion was made to him, and that no steps were taken to ascertain that he understood what was meant by the official who desired him to stop, increase the gravity of the action subsequently taken.

Moreover, the "Tangier" had cleared for Valencia, and, therefore, steps could be taken (as indeed they were) against the vessel and captain at that port. Consequently, there was all the less excuse for imperilling the lives of the crew.

But the nature of the arguments contained in the Marquis de la Vega de Armijo's note of the 14th January, causes the act of firing rifle ball cartridge to become one of serious and prominent importance, and renders it necessary for Her Majesty's Government to make the strongest protest against the suggestion that whenever a vessel is hailed by the Spanish authorities, and refuses to stop, the lives of the crew may be taken in order to enforce obedience to the order.

The established and recognized usage of firing blank charges and then shot from a cannon is founded upon the intention of first warning, and then impeding the vessel's course. But the firing of rifle bullets cannot impede or injure the vessel whilst it probably will destroy human life; and as such firing of rifle bullets is not generally recognized as a warning to stop, no captain would be likely to do so when such an act would necessarily bring his crew into greater danger.

An assault of this character on a trading-vessel of a friendly Power by harbour officials is, so far as I am aware, quite unparalleled in the history of the commerial relations of this country with any nation; and, indeed, it is only necessary to refer to the Declaration between Great Britain and Spain, signed on the 2nd March, 1865 (of which I inclose a copy), to show that the practice of firing on merchant-vessels was condemned by the Spanish Government even in the case of the neglect to obey the precautionary rules imposed on vessels approaching the British and Spanish ports in the Straits of Gibraltar.

And in the case of the "Mermaid," to which you refer in your despatch No. 15, the Spanish Government actually paid an indemnity for the sinking of that schooner by a shot fired from the Spanish battery at Ceuta in 1864, before the date of the Declaration above mentioned.

Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the right of Spanish authorities to take or to endanger the lives of British subjects for so insufficient a reason as the one existing in this case; and they entertain a confident expectation that on further consideration the Spanish Government will come to the conclusion that the course which was taken by the authorities at Carthagena cannot be justified, and that it would be most prejudicial to the interests of maritime commerce, including that of Spain itself, if it were to be maintained that such acts of violence were justifiable as regards the crew of foreign vessels under such circumstances as existed in the present case, even assuming the version of the Spanish authorities at Carthagena to be accurate.

In the meantime Her Majesty's Government protest most strongly against the course which has been pursued, and which is warranted by no international usage.

I have to instruct you to address a communication to the Spanish Government in the sense of this despatch.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received April 25.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, April 25, 1883.

Case of the "Tangier," fired on by Spanish authorities at Carthagena.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 20th instant, stating that, with reference to the case of the "Tangier," which had been the subject of our Reports printed at pp. 52 and 55 of accompanying print,* he was to submit the following question for our consideration and advice.

That from a despatch just received from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, your Lordship had reason to believe that the Spanish Government were disposed to come to an amicable adjustment of the case by means of an exchange of notes, in which they would be prepared to state that the firing of rifle ball-cartridge at the "Tangier" under the circumstances was unjustifiable, and that the Captain of the Port, who was answerable for that proceeding, had been dismissed from his office.

That, before assenting to the termination of the controversy in the manner proposed, your Lordship desired to invite our attention to the claim of the owners of the "Tangier," and of the master of that vessel, for compensation, and to the correspondence which had taken place on that subject, which we should find at p. 17 (No. 14), p. 33 (No. 27), p. 51 (No. 41), p. 53 (No. 43), p. 54 (No. 44), p. 54 (No. 46), p. 55 (No. 47) of the accompanying print.

That some of the items of claim given at pp. 17 and 18 (No. 14) were no doubt inadmissible, and others greatly exaggerated.

That, moreover, the question whether the "Tangier" had or had not contravened the Spanish regulations, and was or was not liable to be detained, had not been judicially established.

That all that was admitted by the Spanish Government was that the action resorted to by the port authorities in their efforts to stop her was unjustifiable. That the damage resulting from the firing of rifle ball-cartridge was fortunately insignificant.

That our opinion was requested as to whether the claim of indemnity put forward by the owners and captain of the "Tangier," or any part thereof, should be pressed against the Spanish Government in view of their admission that the action of their port authorities was unjustifiable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Claims of owners and master should not be pressed.

That we do not think that, under the circumstances, the claims of the owners or master should be pressed.

The damage which actually resulted from the outrage of firing at the "Tangier" was too insignificant for consideration, and we do not think that compensation should be claimed as a solatium to the captain for the risk he ran. It might with as good reason be claimed for every one of the crew.

The question, then, is whether either the owners or master are entitled to have a claim for compensation pressed in respect of the occurrences after the return of the "Tangier" to Carthagena.

It is to be observed that what then took place was entirely independent of the attempt to stop the "Tangier," and was the result of legal proceedings instituted before a Spanish Tribunal for an alleged offence against the local law, which the master of the vessel was, beyond doubt, bound to obey.

It is certainly open to question whether the decision of the Spanish Court was a right one.

But the damage resulting from it appears to be limited to a temporary inconvenience to the captain and a short delay of the vessel.

The results of legal proceedings do not warrant demand for reparation.

And we do not think the proceedings constituted any such violation of natural law and justice as to warrant Her Majesty's Government in insisting on reparation at the hands of the Government of Spain.

Expulsion of Salvationists.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd February last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne,* relative to the proceedings of certain members of the so-called Salvation Army at Geneva, and to the treatment which they had received from the Cantonal and Federal authorities, as well as the appeal which they had made to Her Majesty's Minister to the Swiss Confederation for protection and support.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote further annexed a copy of the latest Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Establishment between Her Majesty and the Swiss Confederation and two Memoranda which had been left at the Foreign Office by the representatives of the Salvation Army in this country.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to invite our particular attention to the letter addressed by the complainants to Mr. Adams which was contained in his despatch No. 15 of the 19th February, and to the accompanying Memorandum drawn up by him in consultation with Professor König, the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Legation, who had expressed his concurrence therein.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the whole of those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the circumstances of the case warranted the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's communications of the 27th (2)† and 28th February‡ and the 3rd March,§ transmitting to us further papers to be considered with those transmitted with his letter of the 22nd February.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That there can be no doubt that if the law of Switzerland permits the expulsion from that country, or the law of one of its cantons permits the expulsion from that canton, of persons whose presence is dangerous to public order, an expulsion on such grounds lawfully carried out according to the municipal law could not be taken exception to on any grounds of international law by a Power whose subjects had been so expelled. At the same time such an expulsion might be carried out in a manner so unnecessarily harsh and oppressive as justly to warrant diplomatic action.

Unable to give opinion as to legality of expulsion.

We have not the materials before us to enable us to determine whether the expulsion of the two ladies was in accordance with Swiss law, supposing the authorities to have come to the conclusion that their presence was a source of danger.

But whatever may have been the public excitement and possible tumult produced by the meetings of the Salvation Army, there hardly appears to have been reasonable ground for contending that the mere presence of the ladies in Geneva was a source of danger to the State, and on that ground justified their expulsion. They had yielded to the action of the authorities and had abandoned any public proceedings prior to their expulsion. And the grounds upon which the expulsion purports to be founded appear very trivial, and scarcely such as one can conceive would be a legal justification for the expulsion. The ladies appear also to have been compelled to leave with a haste which seems, in any view, harsh and unnecessary.

Expulsion carried out harshly, and the grounds for it trivial.

Salvation Army.

Expulsion of Miss Booth from Geneva.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 21st September last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 8th March last, he had the honour to transmit to us, by direction of the Secretary of State, the papers* noted in the margin of his letter, which related to the rejection by Swiss Federal Council of an appeal made by Miss Booth against the Decree of the Cantonal Government expelling her from the Canton of Geneva, and to the question of appeal from that decision.

That Mr. Currie was to invite our special attention (a) to the opinion of Professor König upon the treatment of the Salvation Army in Geneva, which was inclosed in Mr. Adams' despatch No. 33 of the 7th March last; (b) to the despatch from Mr. Thornton No. 51 of the 25th April, which contained copy of a letter from Miss Booth forwarding her appeal to the Federal Council; (c) to the answer of the Federal Council, of which a copy was inclosed in Mr. Adams' despatch No. 93 of the 30th July; (d) to Mr. Booth's letter of the 31st July asking whether any further steps would be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter; and (e) to the opinion of Professor König respecting the power of further appeal to the Federal Tribunal, which accompanied Mr. Adams' private letter of the 2nd August last.

That Mr. Currie was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the Judgment of the Federal Council called for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with Mr. Currie's communications of the 27th September, the 1st October, and the 6th October, transmitting further papers† on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the Federal Council rejected Miss Booth's appeal exclusively on the ground that her expulsion was warranted by the reasons upon which the Department of Justice and Police of the Canton of Geneva based its Decree, and considered it unnecessary to enter into the further reasons contained in the Decree of the Council of State of Geneva.

Mr. Booth appears therefore to be in error when he states in his letter of the 26th September last that the Federal Council charged Miss Booth upon the authority of the Council of Geneva with having infringed the Law of "Collectes à Domicile." The passage which he quotes from the Decree of the Federal Council is a mere recital of the proceedings of the Council of State of Geneva.

The Department of Justice and Police founded their justification of the expulsion of Miss Booth upon the fact that the Salvation Army had organized collections of the employment of which she had not furnished justification, although called upon to do so, and though it was in her power to do so, as the result of the collection was contained in a book of which she acknowledged the existence, but which she refused to produce, and that such proceedings constituted a grave breach of public order which could not be tolerated.

The foundation of the decision of the Federal Council is to be found in paragraph 7 of their considerations. It asserts that Miss Booth, by her admitted position in relation to the Salvation Army, was responsible for the acts of the members of the Army under her orders, and consequently was undoubtedly under the obligation to render a complete account to the police authorities of collections made at Geneva in public assemblies organized by the "Army." It further asserts that she neglected to do this, notwithstanding repeated notices, and was unable to explain her conduct satisfactorily. It then states that it was not necessary to inquire whether the notices in question were given under a Law applicable to the particular case or in virtue of the right of surveillance and police control over public collections or begging, "a right which belongs incontestably to every political authority."

It becomes essential, therefore, to examine these reasons, by which alone the expulsion of Miss Booth is justified by the Federal Council, and the other reasons which have been put forward may be disregarded.

Status of British subjects in Switzerland.

We think the Federal Council are correct in the view that the right of British subjects to reside in Switzerland under the Treaty of 1855 is not absolute, that they are only entitled to do so on the condition of their obeying the laws of the country, and that they may be expelled either by judicial sentence or by a measure of police lawfully adopted and executed.

We think, too, that the Federal Council are probably right in the view that the laws of the particular canton where the British subjects are residing must be obeyed by them, and that such right of expulsion and police control as exists is vested in the authorities of that canton.

We do not think it would constitute a violation of the rights secured by the Treaty if laws should be passed from time to time under which British subjects, in common with other foreigners, might become liable to expulsion, and be expelled from a canton in Switzerland. Of course, if such laws were colourably passed for the purpose of evading the stipulations of the Treaty, the case would be different; but no such question arises here.

Under the Alien clause in the Crimes Act (Ireland) recently passed, a Swiss subject might, under the circumstances provided for, be compelled to quit this country; but we should not admit that such an expulsion would amount to a breach of the Treaty between Great Britain and Switzerland.

At the same time, where, as in the present case, the expulsion does not result from a judicial sentence, but from the act of the Executive, Her Majesty's Government is entitled to scrutinize the facts; and if the action of the Executive has been arbitrary and unfounded, or the mode of its enforcement unnecessarily harsh or oppressive, may properly make the matter the subject of protest or representation to the Swiss Government.

Grounds for expulsion frivolous, and expulsion harshly carried out.

Examining the case in the light of these considerations, it appears to us that the grounds upon which the expulsion took place were frivolous, and the expulsion itself carried out with unnecessary harshness.

Unless the facts deposed to by Miss Booth (p. 15) should prove to be inaccurately stated, the charge that "she neglected, in spite of repeated notices, either to render an account of the collections made by the 'Salvation Army,' or to give a satisfactory explanation of her conduct," appears entirely unfounded. The reason why she could not at once produce such accounts was abundantly explained.

We observe that Professor König states that, according to the law of Geneva, she was under no obligation to produce to the police an account of collections made under such circumstances as existed in the present case (p. 41).

The Federal Council insist that she might be called upon by the police to produce such accounts under the general right of surveillance and police control over public collections or beggings which is vested in the Executive of every State.

It may be that where a person was found begging for money from the public, it would be within the authority of the police of the State to require an explanation of the circumstances and the production of the accounts, just as a person begging in the streets is, in this country, liable to be penally dealt with. But in view of the circumstances of the case, and of the explanations given by Miss Booth, it seems almost absurd to contend that such considerations were applicable to it.

Moreover, Miss Booth appears to have been compelled to leave the canton with a haste which was harsh and quite unnecessary.

No action called for with regard to arrest of Miss Booth and Mr. Becquet at Neuchâtel.

With regard to the arrest of Mr. Becquet and Miss Booth at Neuchâtel, which is the subject of the further papers transmitted by Mr. Currie in his letter of the 6th October, we do not think that any action is, at present, called for on the part of Her Majesty's Government. They were proceeded against for an alleged violation of the law of the country where they were residing, and were, after trial, acquitted. The question raised appears to have been as to the legality of a Decree of the Council of State, and whether the accused were justified in disregarding it. The proceedings were conducted, as we gather, with strict regularity, and without undue harshness. At all events, there is no evidence before us to found any complaint in these respects.

Proceedings were regular and not too harsh.

The accused were allowed to remain at large on moderate bail, which they had no difficulty in procuring, and their subsequent arrest was due to their own voluntary acts in removing the bail.

My Lord,

Expulsion of Miss Booth, of the Salvation Army, from Canton of Geneva.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 1st ultimo, he was to transmit the additional papers* relative to the proceedings of the Salvation Army in Switzerland, and to the expulsion of Miss Booth from the Canton of Geneva.

That our special attention was called to the Report by Professor König† inclosed in Mr. Adams' No. 116 of the 8th October, and relating to the trial of Miss Booth, Mr. Becquet, and four Swiss citizens, at Boudry, in Neuchâtel, and to the Decree of Expulsion of the 8th October last;‡ and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion whether those papers in any way modify or alter the opinion expressed in our former Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Adhere to former opinion on case. Desirable to obtain opinion as to legality of Decree, and as to mode of testing it legality.

That the papers now transmitted do not modify or alter the opinion expressed in our above-mentioned Report. But we think it would be desirable to obtain the opinion of Professor König as to the legality of the expulsion of Miss Booth by the authorities of the canton, under the Decree of the 8th October last, and whether there is any mode in which its legality can be tested.

That it appears clear that both the prisoner and the deceased were drunk at the time the offence was committed, and there does not seem to have been any personal quarrel or ill-will between them until just at the time of the occurrence. What then took place, prior to the blow being struck, cannot exactly be ascertained. But it seems probable that something more passed than was deposed to by the deceased man in his dying declaration. Considering his state of intoxication, his recollection in this respect cannot be altogether relied on.

We think the justice of the case will be met by a sentence of five years' imprisonment.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Granville.—(Received August 17.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, August 16, 1883.

Arrest of G. Mangano by French military authorities for attack on a French officer.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 25th July last, stating that he had to transmit to us by direction of your Lordship, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the case of a Maltese British subject, Giovanni Mangano, who was arrested by the French military authorities at Tunis under the circumstances detailed in Consul-General Reade's despatch No. 33 (Print, p. 20).

That it appeared that Mangano was one of a crowd of persons who had collected at the booking-office of the Italian Railway Station, and were striving for precedence in obtaining their tickets, when he came into bodily contact with a French officer, a Captain Nicolas. An altercation ensued, followed by a succession of blows from the French officer upon the head or face of the Maltese, who was seized and rendered powerless by the French military present at the time.

That in that condition, according to the testimony of eye-witnesses, he was struck by the French Captain across the head with his drawn sword, and subsequently conveyed to the military guard-house.

Mr. Reade's claim to jurisdiction.

That Mr. Reade's demand that the prisoner should be handed over to the charge of Her Majesty's Consulate was refused, and he was informed by the French Representative that it was impossible to prevent the case going through the regular course of procedure by court-martial, whilst Baron d'Estournelles at the same time maintained that the case of Mangano did not affect the question of Consular jurisdiction or Treaty rights.

French claim to military jurisdiction.

That in reply to a representation which Lord Lyons was instructed to make on that subject to the French Government, the Minister for Foreign Affairs had replied, as we would see from the inclosure in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 441 of the 14th July, that the attack by the Maltese on a Captain attached to the French army constituted an offence committed in a foreign country against a person attached to an army occupying that country, and that consequently, according to international law, the offender is subject to the jurisdiction of the military Tribunals of that army.

That the legal justification put forward by the French Government for that assumption of military jurisdiction over Mangano was supported in an article contained in the accompanying number of the "Journal du Droit International." (Nos. 9 and 10 of 1882, p. 511.)

That it appeared, however, to your Lordship that it might be urged that the French occupation of Tunis was effected on the express understanding that all the rights and privileges of foreigners would be respected, and that even if martial law should be held to over-ride the ex-territorial jurisdiction secured to foreigners in the Regency during actual hostilities, or resistance to the military occupation, the season of martial law had then ceased, and its continuance was inconsistent with the establishment of the French Protectorate, and of French Tribunals, and of Civil Government by the French authorities.

That if the plea advanced in the present cases be admitted, there seemed to be no reason why military jurisdiction should not prevail in numerous cases so long as the French had troops in Tunis; and judging from the treatment received by Mangano, the question assumed considerable importance.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on the validity in point of law of the grounds on which the French Government justified the action of their military authorities against Mangano, and with any general observations we might have to offer on the case.

We were also honoured with Sir Julian Pauncefote's communication of the 1st instant, transmitting a further despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Usual rule as to military jurisdiction in case of occupation of territory affected by Capitulations.

That we think it cannot be disputed as a general rule of international law, that an attack on an army of occupation, even although directed against its individual members, falls properly within the cognizance of the military tribunals of that army.

And we think this jurisdiction continues so long as an army is in occupation of a foreign country, even though actual hostilities have ceased. It seems to have been exercised, and the propriety of its exercise to have been recognized by jurists, whilst the German army was in occupation of certain parts of France pending the payment of the indemnity.

We think, too, as a general rule, that the right to deal with offences cognizable by the military Tribunals would apply to the case of offences committed by foreigners equally with those committed by subjects of the country occupied.

In the present case, however, the existence of the Capitulations, and the undertaking by the French Government to respect them, are undoubtedly important elements in the consideration of the questions submitted to us.

Her Majesty's Government should reserve their freedom of action.

It is open to contention that the effect of them is to withdraw British subjects from the operation of the ordinary rules relating to the cognizance by military Tribunals of offences committed against members of the army of occupation. But the arguments against this view which are urged with great force in the "Journal du Droit International," appear to us very cogent. And it will probably not be necessary or expedient in the present circumstances to express any definite opinion upon the point either by way of admission or denial, but to reserve for Her Majesty's Government freedom of action in relation to it hereafter.

If occupation is to be permanent, British Consular Court has jurisdiction over British subjects

We are not aware what is the exact opinion of the French authorities in Tunis at the present time, or for what purpose their army is maintained there, and whether the occupation is intended to be permanent. If, as we gather, the French have established a Protectorate over Tunis intended to be of a permanent character, and the army is stationed there in support of their authority, and civil Courts have been established and are maintained by them, we think it may well be contended that the army has ceased to be an army of occupation in a foreign country within the ordinary sense of those terms, and that charges against British subjects should, under the Capitulations, be dealt with in the British Consular Court.

After restoration of peace, military Tribunals have jurisdiction only over acts of hostility against army.

But apart from this we think that where an army remains in occupation after peace and order are restored, at all events where such rights exist as are enjoyed under the Capitulations in Tunis, the military Tribunals can only properly claim cognizance of offences against a member of the army of occupation when the offence is an act of hostility to the member as such. The jurisdiction is claimed and exercised for the safety of the army, and individual assaults upon its individual members may endanger its safety as much as an organized attack. But we do not think that on any sound principle the jurisdiction can be extended to the case of an offence against an individual member of the army, which is not directed against him as such, and which cannot properly be regarded as an act of hostility to the army, but arises out of some private quarrel or dispute.

Consul's claim to jurisdiction well founded.

Mangano's assault not an act of hostility to army.

Outrage by French officer very gross.

Strong grounds for remonstrance and investigation.

It seems to us that on these grounds the claim of the British Consul was well founded. Even if the French officer's statement be correct, the assault by Mangano was in no sense committed against that officer in consequence of his being a soldier, but resulted from circumstances which would equally have affected a private person. But in fact the outrage appears to have been a gross one on the part of the French officer, and seeing that Mangano was detained for some days in custody, and that the charges against him were found insufficient for instituting a prosecution, we think there is, independently of the considerations to which we have alluded above, strong ground for remonstrance and for a claim that the conduct of the French officer should be investigated.

My Lord,

Abrogation of foreign Consular jurisdiction in Tunis.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 4th September last, stating that by direction of the Secretary of State, he transmitted to us the accompanying papers,* which related to the establishment of French Tribunals in Tunis, under the Law of the 27th March last, and to the question of the abrogation of foreign Consular jurisdiction in that Regency, which the French Government were desirous should be assented to by foreign Governments, in order that foreigners should henceforward be amenable to the new jurisdiction.

French request for.

That at p. 38 of the printed correspondence, we would find the note from the French Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, dated the 10th May last, inclosing the various Laws, Decrees, &c., establishing the new Tribunals, and requesting Her Majesty's Government to waive the British Consular jurisdiction in their favour.

That Her Majesty's Government having decided to withdraw the jurisdiction of their Consular Representative, under certain conditions to be determined upon, it was thought desirable to consult the late Sir Francis Reilly upon the subject, and a Memorandum from him,† stating his views upon various points upon which he was requested to report, would be found at p. 48 of the print.

Her Majesty's Government willing to consent on certain conditions.

That on the 20th June last your Lordship intimated to the French Ambassador that, subject to certain reservations, and to explanations on sundry points on which further information was required by Her Majesty's Government, they would take the proper measures to relieve Her Majesty's Consular Officers in the Regency of their judicial functions as soon as the other foreign Governments represented in Tunis had signified their willingness to adopt a similar course (p. 51). That in the meantime the papers on the subject were submitted to M. Treitt, the Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, whose Report was given at p. 56 of the print, being inclosure in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 414 of the 3rd July.

That the reply of the French Government to the inquiries put to them, as above stated, would be found at p. 60, and appeared to your Lordship to be, on the whole, satisfactory.

Objections to French proposals.

That there were, however, two points which appeared to your Lordship to give rise to objection:—

1. The absence of a right of challenging Assessors.
2. The limitation of the right of foreign advocates to practise before the French Tribunals, to those now practising there.

That as regarded the first point, Sir Julian Pauncefote was to refer us to the remarks of M. Treitt thereon; and as regarded the second point, Sir Julian was to observe that, in view of the large foreign community in Tunis, it would appear very desirable to press for the extension of that right to all duly qualified foreign advocates, under proper conditions and regulations.

That it further appeared to your Lordship that care must be taken to reserve every other right or privilege retained by any other nation, and notably by Italy, whose reservations, which were more extensive than those of Her Majesty's Government, would be found at p. 64.

That Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the papers transmitted therewith into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the above reservations were desirable and sufficient, and with any general observations which we might have to offer on the general question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Reservations desirable.

That we think the above reservations are desirable, and that care should be taken to reserve every right or privilege retained by any other nation.

Also appointment of Assessors of nationality of accused if possible.

It will certainly be desirable to secure, if it be possible, that in the case of a trial of a British subject one-half of the Assessors should be British subjects, in conformity with the proposal made by Italy for the benefit of her subjects. But there would probably be considerable difficulty in France making this concession general to all nations, as it may be difficult to find a sufficient number of suitable Assessors in the case of certain nationalities.

A CONFERENCE of the Representatives of the Great Powers is about to assemble in London for the purpose of dealing with several questions relating to the Danube, of which the first and most important is that of the prolongation of the European Commission, the duration of whose powers, unless prolonged by the Conference, expires on the 24th April next.

the Danube contains a complete history of the question. A summary of the Acts by which the powers of the European Commission have been prolonged from time to time will be found in a Memorandum (B) by Consul-General Sanderson, who is the British Delegate on the Commission.

Probable objection by Russia to its jurisdiction over the Kilia Mouths.

It is apprehended that Russia will oppose the prolongation of the Commission, except on the condition that the mouths of the Kilia branch of the Danube, which are comprised in the Bessarabian territory retroceded to Russia by Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin (G), should no longer be subject to the powers and jurisdiction of the Commission.

Such a concession to Russia would be attended with inconvenience, and possibly with great disadvantage to the interests of the other Powers concerned.

A question has been raised by Consul-General Sanderson as to whether the title of Russia to the mouths of the Kilia cannot be disputed on the grounds stated by him in the inclosed Memorandum (marked C), notwithstanding that Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin declares that the mid-channel of the Stary-Stamboul mouth, which is the most southern of the Kilia mouths, shall be the boundary.

The Kilia mouths form part of the Delta of the Danube, as shown by the map annexed to the Protocol of the 6th January, 1857 (D).

Ambiguity of Articles XLV and XLVI of Treaty of Berlin as to sovereignty over islands at Kilia Mouths.

But the line of frontier of Russia and Turkey in Bessarabia was declared by the Treaty of Paris of the 19th June, 1857 (E) to be determined in conformity with a topographical map which was prepared by the Boundary Commission at Kichenew, on the 30th March, 1857. A copy of that map on a reduced scale is annexed (F), from which it will be seen that the Kilia mouths were declared to consist of sixteen islands, which were specified as forming part of the Delta of the Danube.

By the last-mentioned Treaty, the whole of the Delta of the Danube, instead of being annexed to Moldavia as declared by the Treaty of Paris of the 30th March, 1856 (H), was replaced under the sovereignty of the Porte. It follows, therefore, that at the date of the Treaty of Berlin (G) the Kilia mouths were not in the possession of Roumania, although they are comprised in the territory which, by Article XLV, Roumania is declared to restore to Russia. It may be that this defect is cured by the fact that the Porte being at that time the Suzerain of Roumania, and the possessor of the sixteen islands in question, was a party to the Treaty.

But another element of uncertainty arises from the fact that by the following Article of the Treaty (Article XLVI) the islands forming the Delta of the Danube and the Sandjak of Toultcha, which comprises the district of Kilia, were added to Roumania.

It has been shown that the sixteen islands forming the mouths of the Kilia, are part of "the Delta of the Danube," and they were certainly comprised in the district of Kilia. It follows, therefore, that while the mouths of the Kilia were restored to Russia by Article XLV of the Treaty, they were added to Roumania by Article XLVI. You will observe that by Article XLVI the frontier-line is to be determined on the spot by a Delimitation Commission, but it seems doubtful whether this provision is not restricted to the territory named in the second paragraph of the Article.

By Article XLVII the question of "the division of the waters" is to be submitted to the arbitration of the European Commission; no such arbitration has yet taken place.

The mid-channel of the Stary-Stamboul mouth was also mentioned as the southern boundary of the territory restored to Russia in Article XIX of the Treaty of San Stefano (I); and yet the same Article declares that Russia is not desirous of annexing "the Delta Islands," and passages are cited in Consul-General Sanderson's Memorandum from the Protocols of the Congress of Berlin (K), showing that the Russian Representatives disclaimed any desire on the part of their Government to acquire the Delta of the Danube, or portions of territory the possession of which might constitute a menace to, or an interference with, the free navigation of the river.

Looking at the small extent of the sixteen islands at the Kilia mouth, as compared to the rest of "the Delta of the Danube," referred to in Article XLVI of the Treaty of Berlin, it may perhaps be contended that the Article must be read subject to the dispositions of the preceding Article, which had restored a small portion of the Delta to Russia. I am directed, however, by Earl Granville to request that you will consider the point, and favour him with your opinion as to whether the territorial rights of Russia are affected by the ambiguity arising from the terms of Articles XLV and XLVI of the Treaty of Berlin to such an extent as to justify his Lordship in raising the point at the Conference, should the attitude of the Russian Representative render this course otherwise desirable.

I am to add that the first meeting of the Conference will take place on the 5th February, and Lord Granville would be glad to receive your Report at your earliest convenience.

I am, &c.

February 3, 1883.

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 31st ultimo, we have the honour to report—

That it appears clear that if the terms of Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin be looked at by themselves, all the territory north of the mid-channel of the Stary-Stamboul mouth of the Danube is retroceded to Russia, and that this would include the islands at the Kilia mouth. On the other hand, it is equally clear that, if Article XLVI stood alone, these islands, forming, as they do, part of the Delta of the Danube, would be included in the territory added to Roumania.

There is thus no doubt an apparent conflict between the provisions contained in these two Articles.

It is, however, a well-settled canon of construction that in such a case the Articles should be so construed as, if possible, to give effect to each of them.

If a literal interpretation be placed upon Article XLVI, it is no doubt difficult to put any rational construction at all upon Article XLV.

The only one possible, apparently, would be that the Russian territory was to extend to the mid-stream of the Stary-Stamboul mouth, but that the islands north of that line, which formed part of the Delta of the Danube, were, nevertheless, to be part of the Roumanian territory.

Articles XLV and XLVI probably refer to parts of the Delta not retroceded to Russia.

But this would be a strange, and perhaps hardly conceivable, arrangement, and as it would certainly give to Russia two of the Kilia mouths, we do not know that it would answer the purpose in view to put forward this construction. If it be not the true one, the other alternative, and we confess it appears to us the sounder and more natural interpretation, would be to hold that Article XLVI refers to all that part of the Delta (and this is by far the larger part) which is not, by virtue of the preceding Article, included in the territory retroceded to Russia.

Difficulty in putting forward ambiguity in Conference.

We can conceive it possible that circumstances may arise in the course of the Conference which would render it expedient to put forward the ambiguity arising from the language of Articles XLV and XLVI. But, for the reasons we have pointed out, we do not think too much reliance should be placed upon it.

We have, &c.

Sir J. Pauncefote to the Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane.

Foreign Office, February 2, 1883.

Gentlemen,

European Commission of the Danube.

IN my letter of the 31st ultimo, in relation to the approaching Danube Conference, I had the honour to submit to you, by direction of Earl Granville, a question respecting the territorial rights of Russia under Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin.

Questions with regard to its prolongation.

I am now to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion on the following points :—

1. If, notwithstanding Article LIV of the Treaty of Berlin, no agreement be arrived at by the Conference for the prolongation of the term of twelve years, assigned by Article IV of the Treaty of London of 1871, as the duration of the European Commission, will the powers of the Commission expire on the 24th April next by effluxion of time, or will they continue until the dissolution of the Commission shall have been pronounced by the Powers parties to the Treaty of Paris of 1856, as provided by Article XVIII of that Treaty?

Is unanimity a necessary condition of the prolongation of the Commission, or of its dissolution?

2. If the dissolution of the European Commission shall be so pronounced, or if it shall take place by effluxion of time, will the Riverain Commission ipso facto be called into existence again, and "enjoy the same powers as those with which the European Commission shall have until then been invested," as provided by Article XVIII of the Treaty of Paris, or will the revival of the Riverain Commission depend on the "previous understanding between the Riverain Powers," and the conclusion of the Convention between the co-Signatory Powers contemplated by Article V of the Treaty of London of 1871?

3. In case, by reason of no such understanding being arrived at, or for any other reason, the reassembling of the Riverain Commission cannot legally take place, and no agreement is arrived at by the Conference, in relation to the control and regulation of the navigation of the Danube, what will be the position of the Powers interested as regards international rights?

I am to inclose :—

(A.) Treaties and other documents relating to the Navigation of the Danube ("Turkey No. 29, 1878," Parliamentary No. 2024).

(B.) Memorandum respecting the Navigation of the Danube, by Sir E. Hertslet (17th July, 1881, Confidential No. 4462).

(C.) Memorandum respecting the Prolongation of the European Commission, by Consul-General Sanderson (17th February, 1882). Confidential No. 4742, p. 20.

(D.) Memorandum on same subject, by Mr. Bertie (13th October, 1882, Confidential No. 4690).

(E.) Treaty of Berlin ("Turkey No. 44, 1878," Parliamentary No. 623).

(F.) Memorandum on same subject, by M. Möhler, Secretary-General of the European Commission, inclosed in Colonel Siborne's No. 60 of 9th December, 1881. Confidential No. 4596, p. 118.

Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum (B.) contains a complete history of the Danube question, and I am to refer you particularly to the résumé, which will be found at pp. 43 to 50.

The European Commission for the Navigation of the Danube was constituted under Article XVI of the Treaty of Paris of the 30th March, 1856. It was charged with the designation and execution of the works necessary below Isaktcha to clear the mouths of the Danube, as well as the neighbouring parts of the sea, from the sands and other impediments which obstructed them, in order to put that part of the river and the said parts of the sea in the best possible state for navigation. For these purposes power was given to the Commission to levy duties upon shipping.

The duration of the Commission was originally limited to two years, but it has at different times been prolonged, and by Article IV of the Treaty of London of the 13th March, 1871, it stands prolonged till the 24th April, 1883. Article LIII of the Treaty of Berlin confirms the Commission and the Treaties and arrangements relating to it, and provides that in future the Commission, in which Roumania shall be represented, shall exercise its functions up to Galatz, in complete independence of the territorial authority, and Article LV declares that one year before the expiration of the term assigned for the duration of the Commission the Powers shall come to an understanding as to the prolongation of its powers, or the modifications which they may consider necessary to introduce ("d'y introduire").

The territorial changes effected by the Treaty of Berlin in regard to that portion of the Danube which is placed under the control of the Commission are as follows :—

Under the Treaty of Paris (Articles XX and XXI) the left bank of the Kilia mouth of the Danube were ceded by Russia, to be annexed to the Principality of Moldavia, under the Suzerainty of the Porte. By the subsequent Protocol of Paris of the 6th January, 1857, and the Treaty of the 19th June following, the Delta of the Danube and the Isle of Serpents were placed under the immediate sovereignty of the Porte. The Sultan, therefore, was the supreme authority over the whole territory within which the functions of the Commission were exercised, and the Sulina mouth of the Danube, which is that most used by shipping, and to the improvement of which the labours of the Commission have been principally devoted, was under the direct sovereignty of the Porte.

By Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin, the left bank of the Kilia branch and the left bank of the whole river upwards from the point of divergence of that branch to the confluence of the Pruth with the Danube is ceded to Russia. By Article XLVI the Delta of the Danube, the Isle of Serpents, and the whole right bank of the river up to a point to be determined, in the neighbourhood and to the east of Silistria, is ceded to Roumania, which, by Article XLIII, is recognized, subject to certain conditions, as an independent State. By Article XLVIII the question of the division of the waters and fisheries is submitted to the arbitration of the European Commission; and by Article LI Roumania is substituted for the whole of the ceded territory to the rights and obligations of the Sublime Porte in regard to undertakings of public works and others of a like nature.

Consequently, Roumania is the territorial authority with which the Commission has to deal, except in so far as regards the sovereign rights of Russia as holding the left bank from Reni to Stary-Stamboul; the Commission being, however, placed in a position of complete independence.

Article LV of the Treaty of Berlin provided that the Commission, assisted by Delegates of the Riverain States, should draw up Regulations for the navigation, river police, and supervision of the Danube from the Iron Gates to Galatz.

These Regulations have accordingly been drawn up, but they have not yet been finally agreed to.

The questions which will be submitted for decision at the Conference are three, viz. :—

1. The prolongation of the Powers of the European Commission.
2. The extension of its powers from Galatz to Ibraïla.
3. The confirmation of the Regulations drawn up under Article LV of the Treaty of Berlin.

It is in connection with the first of those questions that the three points above stated arise, as to which Lord Granville desires to obtain your advice for his assistance during the approaching discussions.

Questions as to—
1. Prolongation of the European Commission.

As regards the first point, whether the Commission, if no act is done by the Powers, will expire, or will continue until its dissolution is formally pronounced, I am to refer you to the review of the history of the European Commission at p. 23 of Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum and to the résumé of the facts with regard to its duration at p. 43, and also to the Memoranda (C) and (D) by Mr. Bertie and Consul-General Sanderson.

The view taken at p. 44 of Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum is that the powers of the European Commission, though extended only up to the 24th April, 1883, by the Treaty of London of 1871, continue in force until the dissolution of the Commission shall be pronounced, as provided by Article XVII of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, having regard also to Artitle LIV of the Treaty of Berlin. It is contended by others that the powers of the European Commission, unless prolonged by agreement, expire on the 24th April next by effluxion of time, and that the pronouncement of its dissolution is only a preliminary condition of the substitution of new arrangements.

2. Reassembling of Riverain Commission.

As regards the second point, as to the reassembling of the Riverain Commission, I am to submit the following observations :—

By Article V of the Treaty of London of 1871, it was provided that the conditions of the reassembling of the Riverain Commission established by Article XVII of the Treaty of Paris of 1856 should be fixed by a previous understanding between the Riverain Powers, without prejudice to the clause relative to the three Danubian Principalities; and that in so far as any modification of Article XVII of the said Treaty might be involved, it should form the subject of a special Convention between the co-Signatory Powers.

By Article LIV of the Treaty of Berlin, it is provided that "one year before the expiration of the term assigned for the duration of the European Commission, the Powers shall come to an understanding as to the prolongation of its powers or the modifications which they may consider necessary to introduce therein."

It is to be observed that the Regulations framed by the Riverain Commission under Article XVII of the Treaty of Paris of 1856 were not agreed to by all the Powers assembled in Conference at Paris in 1858, who moreover declared that in their opinion "the work of the Riverain Commission could not be legally enforced until all the Signatory Powers had come to an understanding about it." (Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum, pp. 22 and 45.)

It would seem to follow from the foregoing, that if the European Commission should cease to exist on the 24th April next, either by effluxion of time or by its dissolution being pronounced, the substitution of the Riverain Commission, or of any other authority in its place, can only be effected by agreement among the Powers.

3. Rights of Powers with regard to the maintenance of freedom of the navigation of the Danube.

As regards the third point, namely, what will be the position of the Powers, as regards their international rights, if no agreement as to the future regulation of the navigation of the Danube should be arrived at by the Conference, I am to refer you to Article XV of the Treaty of Paris of 1856 (A, p. 1), and to Article LII of the Treaty of Berlin (E).

The principles established by the Congress of Vienna as to the free navigation of rivers which separate or traverse different States were declared by the Treaty of Paris to be applicable to the Danube, and the general conditions of such free navigation were explained.

By the Treaty of Berlin, it was declared that the freedom of the navigation on the Danube is recognized "as of European interest."

It is presumed that the emancipation of Roumania and Servia from the suzerainty of the Porte under the Treaty of Berlin does not relieve them from the obligations flowing from Article XV of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, to which the Porte was a party, and which declared that the arrangement thereby made as to the freedom of the navigation of the Danube should thenceforth form part of the public law of Europe, and place it under the guarantee of the Signatory Powers.

Therefore, in the contingency above suggested of no new agreement being arrived at by the Conference, it would seem to follow that all the Powers interested are equally entitled to the maintenance of the freedom of navigation on the Danube as defined by Article XV of the Treaty of Paris, and, if necessary, to enforce their rights under that Article on any of the Riverain Powers who may attempt to disregard and obstruct them. That, on the other hand, the Riverain States will, subject to the observance of those rights, be the supreme authority within the limits of their respective territories.

Temple, February 8, 1883.

IN obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. Of opinion that the European Commission will expire unless prolonged by agreement.

That we think the answer to the first question submitted to us depends upon what is the true construction of Article LIV of the Treaty of Berlin.

Whatever may have been the state of things created by Article XVI of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, we do not think that, looking at the terms of the Treaty of London, 1871, and bearing in mind what passed in the interval, it can be successfully contended that the European Commission would not, under that instrument, expire in April next, supposing nothing to have occurred subsequently to 1871 to prolong its existence.

The question therefore arises, whether Article LIV of the Treaty of Berlin has that effect.

At the sitting of the Berlin Congress held on the 2nd July, 1878, Baron Haymerle proposed, inter alia, that the duration of the European Commission should extend beyond 1883, until a fresh Agreement was concluded. To this proposal the Russian Representative objected.

Ultimately Article LIV, in the form in which it appears in the Treaty, was agreed upon, no doubt as a compromise, between the Representatives of Russia and Austria.

Various interpretations of Article LIV of Treaty of Berlin.

Two constructions have been put upon this Article. Each of them is a possible one, and may be supported by plausible arguments.

The one is that the Powers were, before the expiration of the term assigned for the duration of the Commission, to come to an arrangement either that the European Commission, as it now exists, should be prolonged, or, if modifications were deemed necessary, what these modifications should be. So that, if no modifications should be agreed upon, the prolongation of the Commission, with its existing functions, should result. If this be the true view, it follows that the Commission would continue, unless its dissolution or some modification of its functions were unanimously agreed upon. In support of this construction, it may be urged that the language used in the Article points to something more than a mere future conference of the Powers at which something may or may not be agreed to. The words "se mettront d'accord" seem, it may be said, to suggest that some agreement was to be arrived at on the subject, and that the choice was only between a mere prolongation and a modification.

It must, however, be observed that if this were the meaning of the parties, the language chosen is not happy, and is not what would have been expected.

The other possible construction of the Article is, that it merely provides that the Powers should come to an understanding on the subject of the prolongation of the Commission as it existed, or of any modification of it, the whole question being left open for arrangement. It will be seen that Count de St. Vallier, who was associated with the Russian and Austrian Plenipotentiaries in the drafting of the Article, used the following language with reference to the draft they had prepared:—

"The principle alone has been voted; the form is reserved for the Drafting Committee, and it is only intended to affirm the utility of an agreement before the lapse of the term assigned to the duration of the European Commission." So far as appears from the extracts from the Protocols before us (we have only what are contained in Sir E. Hertslet's Memorandum), no exception was taken by any of the Plenipotentiaries to the view thus enunciated.

Upon the whole, then, we think the balance is in favour of the latter construction.

2. The Riverain Commission can no longer meet.

2. With regard to the second question submitted to us, we think that the revival of the Riverain Commission must be governed by the provisions of Article V of the Treaty of 1871. It is clear that the Riverain Commission created by Article XVII of the Treaty of Paris can no longer meet. It is not applicable to the altered circumstances which now exist.

3. Concur in views respecting rights of Powers as to free navigation of the Danube.

3. As regards the third question submitted to us, we have only to express our concurrence with the views suggested thereon in the letter of Sir Julian Pauncefote.

Circulation of foreign coins in Ottoman dominions prohibited by Porte.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, inclosing copy of a note from the Porte stating that from a certain date the circulation of foreign coins in the Ottoman dominions would be prohibited, and requesting that steps might be taken for bringing that prohibition to the knowledge of British subjects.

Presume Porte has acted within its rights.

That in 1881 the export of the small copper currency was prohibited at Bagdad, and that in our Report of the 31st December of that year we advised that such prohibition could not be objected to, as such copper coinage could not be considered "a manufacture" within the meaning of the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Turkey; that, in this country the right of regulating the currency was one of the prerogatives of the Crown, and that it was conceivable that the measure in question might be deemed expedient to the Sultan for reasons of State. That it was presumed that, on the same principle, the right of Turkey to withdraw foreign coin from circulation must be admitted, there being no Treaty limiting that right; but that before instructing Mr. Wyndham to take steps for bringing the decision of the Porte in that matter to the knowledge of British subjects in Turkey, your Lordship desired our opinion as to whether such instructions might properly be given.

That the correspondence which took place in 1882 relative to the prohibition by the Porte of the importation of foreign coin into Turkey, and also a copy of the Treaty between Great Britain and Turkey of the 29th April, 1861, were inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve instructions to Mr. Wyndham to inform British subjects.

That we think the proposed instructions may properly be given.

Marriage at Bournabat by Smyrna Consular Chaplain.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 8th instant, transmitting to us the papers* relating to a question raised as to the validity of a marriage of British subjects, solemnized at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, at Bournabat, near Smyrna, on the 10th December last, by the British Consular Chaplain at Smyrna. That the same persons were subsequently married before Her Majesty's Consul, but not the 11th January. That the facts of the case were stated in Mr. Wyndham's No. 76 (Inclosure 4).

Its validity questioned.

That the Rev. Mr. Washington, Chaplain to the Embassy at Constantinople, questioned the validity of the religious marriage, on several grounds (Inclosure 1).

That Mr. Dennis, Her Majesty's Consul at Smyrna, also considered it illegal (Inclosure 4), while Mr. Fawcett, Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge of the Consular Court at Constantinople, held that it was valid under 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, which established "the validity of marriages solemnized by a minister of the Church of England in the chapel belonging to any British factory situated abroad, or in the house of any British subject residing at such factory" (Inclosure 6).

That it appeared to your Lordship doubtful whether Smyrna could now be considered "a British factory" within the meaning of the 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, and if so, whether Bournabat could be considered as part of such factory.

That it has always been held, however, that in heathen countries, marriages celebrated by a priest in Holy Orders were valid, though they were discouraged, since facilities have been given for marriages under the Consular Marriages Act.

Subsequent marriage at Consulate

That the subsequent marriage of the parties in the present case at the Consulate appeared to have been solemnized with all the formalities required by law, and to be perfectly valid. That the question of the validity of the first marriage at the chapel is therefore of no practical importance to the parties themselves, but that it was desirable to set the question at rest, if possible, for the future.

That copies of the Acts 4 Geo. IV, cap. 91, and 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, together with several Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown, and an opinion of Dr. Tristram on the question of the marriage of British subjects in heathen countries, were transmitted, and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the first marriage was valid, and any observations which we might desire to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That in our opinion the first marriage was valid.

Marriages by clergymen in non-Christian countries valid.

It has already been pointed out in the previous Reports of Law Officers, that the Statutes which have been passed relating to marriages in foreign countries, were not intended to render invalid, marriages solemnized in a manner which was previously valid, and that the marriage of British subjects in a non-Christian country by an English clergyman was always valid at common law. The disadvantage of such marriages is, that in case a question should afterwards arise with respect to them, there may be a difficulty in procuring proof of the marriage. This difficulty is avoided if the marriage takes place in accordance with the provisions of the 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68.

Disadvantage of such marriages.

Termination of Turkish Treaty and Tariff of 1861.

Notice given by Turkish Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in the letter of Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was to state to us that Mr. Wyndham, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, had called attention, in a despatch dated the 2nd instant, No. 70, to the manner in which notice had been given by the Porte for the termination of the Treaty and Tariff of 1861 between Great Britain and Turkey, and had inquired whether the notice which had been given is sufficient to terminate the Tariff. That the engagements contained in the Treaty of the 29th April, 1861, relative to the termination of the Treaty and Tariff respectively, would be found in the accompanying volume of Treaties, &c., regulating the trade between Great Britain and Turkey.

That copies of the communications with the Porte for the termination of the Treaty and Tariff were inclosed.

That it would be seen that in a note dated the 11th March, 1882, the Porte announced the desire to revise the Tariff of 1861, and the intention to terminate the Treaty itself. A distinction was there made between the Tariff and the Treaty.

That, in a note dated the 20th March, 1882, Lord Dufferin stated in reply that notice for the revision of the Tariff could not be given before the 1st September, 1882; and that, with regard to the Treaty, notice for its termination could not be given before the 1st October of that year. That the notice given in the Porte's communication of the 11th March, 1882, was therefore not accepted.

That on the 30th September last the Porte gave notice to terminate the Treaty of 1861, which announcement was formally accepted by Lord Dufferin, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, on the 7th November last. That the Treaty would therefore expire (as then arranged) on the 1st October next.

That the Tariff, however, was not mentioned in that note of the 30th September, 1882, and no express notice for its termination had been given between the 1st September, 1882, and the 1st March, 1883; and in a conversation reported in Mr. Wyndham's No. 68 of the 2nd ultimo the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the Porte considered the British Treaty and Tariff to be in force till the 30th September next.

Question as to existence of Tariff apart from Treaty, and sufficiency of notice of termination.

That the question then arose whether the Tariff could continue to exist apart from the Treaty; and, if so, whether the notes, above referred to, of the 30th September and the 7th November, 1882, were sufficient to make it lapse with the Treaty.

That it was, however, to be observed that in the recent correspondence the duration of the Treaty and Tariff had been taken to go together; and that Mr. Wyndham, in a note to the Porte dated the 13th ultimo, had applied to the Porte to engage definitely to accord to Great Britain most-favoured-nation treatment in the event of the lapse of the Treaty and Tariff of 1861 before negotiations for a new Treaty and Tariff should have been concluded.

That our opinion was requested on the point thus raised as to the duration of the Tariff of 1861, and the sufficiency of the notice given for its termination.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Further information on certain points necessary before giving an opinion.

That, by Article XXII of the Treaty of 1861, Commissioners were to be appointed for the settlement of the Tariff.

The new Tariff so concluded was to remain in force during seven years from the 1st October, 1861, and each party was to have a right during the seventh year to demand a revision of the Tariff. If this was not done, the Tariff was to be in force for seven more years from the expiration of the present term, and the same was to be the case with each successive period of seven years.

So far as the Treaty is concerned, it would seem that a revision could only be demanded during the years ending the 1st October, 1868, 1875, and 1882, and that if no such revision were demanded, the Tariff would in such case continue to have the force of law for seven more years.

It is stated, however, in a note by Sir E. Hertslet, that "the new Tariff came into force on the 1st March, 1862. It was not revised at the end of the first seven years, and is therefore not terminable before the 1st March, 1876."

Now, Article XXII of the Treaty does not make the duration of the Tariff in any way dependent on the date when it comes into force. It is to continue for a fixed term of seven years from the 1st October, 1861.

It appears to be provided by the Tariff settled by the Commissioners that it should remain in force from the 1st March, 1862, to the 1st March, 1869. It is also provided that either party may demand its revision and renewal within the last six months of its term; but if the six months should elapse after the time fixed without either party having demanded its renewal, the time should be extended "to the seven following years."

These provisions do not accord with those contained in the Treaty; and we do not see how the Commissioners by whom they are signed had any authority under the Treaty to do more than settle the Tariff, which was governed by its stipulations.

The names of the British Ambassador and the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs appear to be appended to those of the Commissioners, but we do not understand whether this is to be regarded as a mere verification of the Tariff or as a substantive agreement by them varying the terms of the Treaty. Seeing that it did not take the form of a new Treaty, ratified like the former, we should hardly judge that this was the case.

We think some explanation on these points is essential before we are in a position to advise on the question submitted to us.

We have, &c.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received May 19.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, May 18, 1883.

Expiration of the Anglo-Turkish Treaty of Commerce of February 28, 1861. Question as to position of British subjects and commerce.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 28th February last,* stating that he was to state to us that the question had arisen as to the position of British subjects and commerce in Turkey in the event of the Treaty of the 29th April, 1861, between Great Britain and Turkey lapsing before a new Treaty was concluded, and before the Treaties expire which other nations had concluded since or about that date, containing similar conditions.

---

* Memorandum (E. H.), February 7, 1883, Confidential No. 4736; "Treaties on Trade, &c., with Turkey" (Hertslet), pp. 41–52; draft to Mr. Wyndham.

That a Memorandum was inclosed on that point by Sir Edward Hertslet; also a volume containing (pp. 41-52) the Treaty of 1861, and other Treaties between the Porte and this country and different European Powers; and also a draft of a despatch which it was proposed to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople,* preferring, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, a claim to most-favoured-nation treatment in the event of the Treaty of 1861 lapsing in the circumstances above mentioned.

That our opinion was requested as to whether a despatch in those terms might properly be sent to Mr. Wyndham, and what alterations, if any, we would suggest in its terms as there proposed.

We are also honoured with a letter from Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, dated the 2nd instant,† on the above subject, and our opinion was requested on the following points:—

That Article XVIII of the Capitulations of 1675 provided that—

"All the Capitulations, privileges, and Articles granted to the French, Venetian, and other Princes who are in amity with the Sublime Porte, having been in like manner, through favour, granted to the English, by virtue of our special command, the same shall be always observed, according to the form and tenour thereof, so that no one in future do presume to violate the same, or act in contravention thereof."

That those Capitulations were expressly confirmed by the Treaties of the 5th January, 1809, by the Convention of the 16th August, 1838, and by the Treaty of the 29th April, 1861, which latter Treaty replaced the Convention of the 16th August, 1838.

That by Article I of the Treaty of the 29th April, 1861, it was agreed as follows:—

"All rights, privileges, and immunities which have been conferred on the subjects or ships of Great Britain by the existing Capitulations and Treaties are confirmed now and for ever, with the exception of those clauses of the said Capitulations which it is the object of the present Treaty to modify. And it is moreover expressly stipulated that all rights, privileges, or immunities which the Sublime Porte now grants or may hereafter grant to, or suffer to be enjoyed by, the subjects, ships, commerce, or navigation of any other foreign Power, shall be equally granted to, and exercised and enjoyed by, the subjects, ships, commerce, and navigation of Great Britain."

But that notice had been given by the Porte to terminate that Treaty on the 1st October next, and that the question had arisen whether, in the event of its being permitted to expire on that day, Her Majesty's Government would still be justified, under the Capitulations above mentioned, in demanding, for British subjects and commerce, enjoyment of the most-favoured-nation treatment in the Ottoman dominions.

That it would appear from a Report upon the Capitulations‡ which was drawn up Mr. Van Dyck, the United States' Consular Clerk at Cairo in 1880, and laid before the American Congress in the following year, that, in his opinion, "the Capitulations with the different Powers constitute, as it were, one single whole, which each nation can turn to its own advantage, by reason of the condition stipulated for with the Porte by every Power that it shall grant it the same privileges and rights conceded or that shall be conceded to any other Power. The Porte has thus bound itself to exercise no preference towards any one of the States with which it has Treaties, but to make them all share alike in the benefits of the provisions contained in the Treaties it has entered into with each of them."

That should we be of opinion, however, that a demand for most-favoured treatment could not be supported as a Treaty right, and that, on the abrogation of the Treaty of 1861, an appeal can only be made to the very letter of the Capitulations of 1675, our attention was directed to the fact that by Articles XXXIV, LIV, LVII, and LXVII of those Capitulations, it was declared that English merchants should pay a duty of 3 per cent. only on all goods by them imported and exported, and that our opinion was requested as to whether it might not be advisable, in the event of British commerce being denied most-favoured-nation treatment, to make a demand upon the Porte for the fulfilment of those privileges which were conceded to British merchants by the Capitulations of 1675.

That to do so would, no doubt, be to revert to a state of things which was found to work far from satisfactorily, as would be seen by a reference to p. 46 of Mr. Van Dyck's Report, but that the matter was so important to British merchants that your Lordship was of opinion that every appeal which can possibly be made to Treaty stipulations should be made, in order to secure for British subjects, who had so long enjoyed most-favoured-nation treatment in Turkey, that they be not subjected to less favourable treatment than other foreigners in the event of the Treaty of 1861 being allowed to expire.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That it is open to contention that the Ist Article of the Treaty of 1861 is to be regarded as an independent stipulation, not only confirming existing Capitulations, but granting for all time most-favoured-nation treatment, and that this latter right is not extinguished by the Treaty being put an end to.

But we do not think this view can be insisted on as clearly the sound one. We think the sounder view probably is that, when the Treaty of 1861 ceases, British subjects are remitted to their prior rights, and that they are entitled to the benefit of all Capitulations and Treaties prior to the Treaty of 1838, which was replaced by that of 1861.

Should claim either most-favoured-nation treatment, or privileges conceded by the Capitulations.

We think, therefore, that the claim should be put forward that British merchants are either entitled to most-favoured-nation treatment, or, if not, to the fulfilment of the privileges conceded by the earlier Capitulations. And, in the event of the former being denied them, we think the latter claim should be preferred.

Claim of Mr. Young, trustee under bankruptcy of A. Collie, for cotton seized in 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 11th November last, he was to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, inclosing copies of a recent correspondence which had passed between himself and the United States' Government in regard to the claim of Mr. Young against that Government, as trustee under the bankruptcy of Alexander Collie.*

That the previous papers on the subject were returned to us; and that Sir Julian Pauncefote was to request that we would take the same into our consideration in connection with Mr. West's last despatch on the subject, and favour your Lordship with our observations and opinion as to whether any further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government was called for at present.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No further action called for.

That we think no further action on the part of Her Majesty's Government is called for at present.

Free entry of British West Indian sugar into the United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Lister's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us the papers which related to a question raised by the West India Committee, that sugar the produce of the British West India Colonies should obtain the benefit of free entry into the United States about to be accorded to Mexican sugar, under the Treaty of Commerce between the United States and Mexico concluded on the 20th January last. That the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with whom your Lordship had been in communication with reference to that claim, had expressed a wish that our opinion should be obtained thereon.

That in Mr. West's No. 97, Commercial, of the 20th March, we should find a Judgment given in the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, on a claim to introduce sugar from a Danish West India Colony, under the provisions of the Treaty of 1875 between the United States and Hawaii, which Treaty, it was to be observed, was similar to the Treaty recently concluded between the United States and Mexico. That the Treaty stipulation in regard to most-favoured-nation treatment of imports between Great Britain and the United States was contained in Article II of the Convention of Commerce of the 3rd July, 1815 (Hertslet's Treaties, vol. ii, p. 387).

That our opinion was requested as to the questions submitted, and with any general observations we might have to offer upon the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

British West Indian sugar not entitled to "most-favoured-nation treatment.

That, in our opinion, sugar which is the produce of British West India Colonies is not entitled to the benefit of the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty between this country and the United States.

Sugar "manufactured" in England might be.

That clause accords the benefit only to the European territories of Her Majesty.

It is perhaps open to contention that sugar "manufactured" in England would be entitled to the benefit of the clause.

Abduction f Venezuelan fugitives from Patos or Goose Island.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 12th instant, stating that, with reference to the question of Patos, or Goose Island, which formed the subject of our Reports of the 27th April, 1880, and the 29th January, 1881, he was to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Carácas relative to the landing, in April last, of a party from an armed Venezuelan vessel on the island in question, and the abduction from thence of certain Venezuelan fugitives.

That according to the statements of witnesses examined by the British authorities (Colonial Office letter to Foreign Office, 16th June, 1882, and Mr. O'Leary's despatch No. 44 of the 26th May, 1882), it appeared that certain refugees from Venezuela sought shelter on Patos on the night of the 29th April last.

That the day following a vessel flying the Venezuelan colours anchored off the island, and sent a boat ashore to make inquiries. That subsequently two other boats landed armed crews, and the officer in command, on being warned that the island was British territory, replied that it had for four years belonged to Venezuela; and two of his men went in pursuit of the fugitives, some of whom eventually came down to the beach and went on board the Venezuelan vessel.

That the officer, it was said, uttered a threat that if the remainder did not surrender in the course of the following day, he would land troops to take them. That that threat did not, however, seem to have been carried out; and it appeared somewhat doubtful from the evidence whether the fugitives who went on board the Venezuelan vessel did so voluntarily or under coercion.

That Her Majesty's Representative at Carácas was instructed (No. 28 of the 29th June, 1882) to demand an explanation of those proceedings, and he accordingly addressed a communication in that sense to the Venezuelan Minister for Foreign Affairs (Mr. O'Leary's No. 68 of the 27th July, 1882).

That the latter replied in a note dated the 27th July, of which a translation was inclosed in Mr. O'Leary's despatch No. 77 of the 5th August, 1882.

That in that note Señor Seijas disputed the claim of Great Britain to the island.

He asserted that, even were the title of Great Britain admitted, a nation had a right to invade neighbouring territory, under the doctrine of self-preservation, in certain cases. He gave a different version of the facts of the present case from that on which the complaint of Her Majesty's Government was based, and argued that there was in no sense an armed landing; that no coercion was resorted to; and, therefore, that there was no violation of British rights.

That, in view of the attitude taken by the Venezuelan Government, your Lordship considered that a strong remonstrance was required, and that we were requested to favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer on the proposed instruction to Colonel Mansfield.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Approve draft to Colonel Mansfield.

That we approve of the proposed instruction to Colonel Mansfield.

We would observe, however, that considering the proximity of the Island of Patos to the Venezuelan territory, the sensitiveness of that Government with regard to its becoming a place of refuge for those who are endeavouring to create disturbances in its territory is not unnatural.

Recommending cession of Island to Venezuela.

Considering, too, the doubt we have expressed in our Report of the 29th January, 1881, it would seem desirable to come to an arrangement with the Government of Venezuela which should involve the cession of Patos at as early a date as possible.

Draft of Despatch to Colonel Mansfield.

Sir, Foreign Office, , 1883.

I HAVE had under my consideration, in communication with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. O'Leary's despatches Nos. 77, 78, and 87 of the 5th, 6th, and 16th August last respectively, relative to the recent proceedings of a Venezuelan vessel of war at Patos or Goose Island.

I have now to state to you that the explanations of these proceedings, contained in the note of the Venezuelan Minister for Foreign Affairs of the 4th August, and the grounds on which it is attempted to justify them, appear to Her Majesty's Government most unsatisfactory.

Her Majesty's Government must altogether decline, in connection with this affair, to discuss the question of title to the island, raised in the Venezuelan note. This island has been in the possession of Great Britain as long as the Island of Trinidad, and while Her Majesty's Government might not be indisposed to entertain a proposal for the cession of Patos to Venezuela to facilitate the settlement of other questions still pending, they will regard any violation of the territory of that island by Venezuela before such cession shall have taken place in the same light as if it had occurred in any other part of Her Majesty's dominions.

As regards the citations from jurists, contained in the Venezuelan note, and which are adduced to justify the action of the Commander of the "Revindicador," Her Majesty's Government consider that they have no application whatever to the circumstances of the present case. Señor Seijas, however, asserts that the persons removed from Patos were not forcibly taken on board the "Revindicator," but left of their own accord. There appears to be some conflict of evidence on this point, and Her Majesty's Government therefore accept the assurance of the Minister for Foreign Affairs that no violation of territory was intended, but they think it their duty to warn the Venezuelan Government that if any attempt should be made by them to set at defiance the sovereignty claimed by Great Britain over Patos, such attempt will be made at their risk of the consequences.

You will address a communication to the Venezuelan Government in the sense of this despatch.

I am, &c.

Case of the "Mercy."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was to transmit to us papers relating to the British sloop "Mercy," which had been detained by the Venezuelan authorities, and for which compensation was sought by the owner of the vessel.

That our attention was invited to Mr. M. O'Leary's despatch No. 69 of the 28th July, 1882, which contained a full résumé of the case, to the protest of the master and owner of the "Mercy," Mr. Billy, made before the British Vice-Consul at La Guayra, to the letter addressed to the Colonial Secretary at Trinidad by the Venezuelan Consul in that island, stating that no blame attached to Mr. Billy but to the charterer of the vessel only; and, further, to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Venezuela, of which a translation was inclosed in Colonel Mansfield's despatch No. 11 of the 8th February, 1883.

That the Secretary of State for the Colonies had suggested that the case should be referred to us, and that our opinion was requested as to whether the circumstances of the case as reported, afforded any grounds for preferring a claim for indemnity against the Venezuelan Government on account of the loss to which Mr. Billy had been subjected through the action of the Venezuelan authorities.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No grounds for claim against Venezuela for detention.

That, in our opinion, the circumstances of the case, as reported, do not afford any grounds for preferring a claim of indemnity against the Venezuelan Government, on account of the loss to which Mr. Billy has been subjected through the action of the Venezuelan authorities. The vessel appears to have been detained pursuant to the judgment of a duly constituted Court, though that judgment was afterwards in part reversed by a higher Tribunal. There was, in the circumstances of the detention, nothing so opposed to natural justice as to warrant diplomatic intervention.

Mr. Billy should take action against the charterer.

The real remedy of Mr. Billy would seem to be by legal proceedings against the charterer of the vessel, whose wrongful acts were the cause of the disastrous consequences which followed.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown and Dr. Deane to Earl Granville.—(Received February 11.)

My Lord, Royal Courts of Justice, February 9, 1884.

Case of T. Phillips, charged with assaults, and inciting natives to commit acts of war against Her Majesty's ship "Opal" at Aboh.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us papers relative to the detention and disposal of a British subject named Theophilus Phillips, of Sierra Leone,* who had been brought to the Colony of the Gold Coast from the Niger, on board Her Majesty's ship "Opal," as a prisoner charged not only with having been a party to the commission, in his own house, of an aggravated assault, by a native Chief named Opanbi Aramana, on a British subject named Vietch, at Aboh, on the Niger, but with having incited Opanbi Aramana to commit acts of war against Her Majesty's ship "Opal," whereby three of her crew were killed, and one officer was severely wounded.

That Phillips was in custody at the present time on board Her Majesty's ship "Bullfrog" at Accra, as a prisoner of war.

Aboh not in jurisdiction of any British Colony, but within Consular jurisdiction.

That Aboh, on the Niger, was not within the jurisdiction of any British Colony on the West Coast of Africa, but was within British Consular jurisdiction, which was regulated by Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 21st February, 1872. That the facts of the case were detailed in the Admiralty letter of the 13th and Colonial Office letter of the 18th December last. That the prisoner was brought from the Niger to Accra, and confined in the gaol there by order of the Governor of the Gold Coast. That he was subsequently removed to Fort St. George, Elmina, and finally he was transferred, under a warrant of the Governor, to Her Majesty's ship "Bullfrog," pending instructions from Her Majesty's Government.

Proposal to try prisoner at Akassa by British Consul.

That it was proposed by the naval authorities on the spot to send him to Akassa, within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consul, to be there tried under the Order in Council above referred to. But that we should observe that the extreme penalty which Her Majesty's Consul could impose for any crime or offence under that Order was a fine of 200*l.*, or banishment for twelve calendar months, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding twenty-one days (paragraph 14 of Order), and that he had no power to send an offender for trial or imprisonment to a British Colony, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, no provision to that effect having been inserted in the Order.

Inadequacy of Consul's powers to deal with case.

That Mr. Hewett, Her Majesty's Consul, who was then in England on leave, but was about to return to his post, in his letter of the 20th December points out the inadequacy of his powers to deal with such a case.

---

* List of papers sent to the Law Officers of the Crown, January 22, 1884:—Admiralty, December 13; Colonial Office, December 18; Consul Hewett, December 20; Admiralty, December 22, 1883; Order in Council, February 21, 1872, Confidential No. 2258; Regulations under Order in Council of February 21, 1872, Confidential No. 2182.

1884

That the reports received of this outrage were unaccompanied by any depositions, and consisted of general and somewhat vague statements. That it was probable, however, that clear evidence would be forthcoming to establish the assault by Phillips against Mr. Vietch.

That for that offence Phillips would seem amenable only to the Consular jurisdiction, and it was presumed that the proper course under the circumstances would be to let him take his trial accordingly before Her Majesty's Consul at Akassa, unless we should be of opinion that he could be dealt with for the graver offence of having aided and abetted the enemies of the Queen, for which he was seized by Captain Brooke, of Her Majesty's ship "Opal," and was then confined on board Her Majesty's ship "Bullfrog" as a prisoner of war.

That our opinion was requested as to the course which should be followed in that case, in order to bring Phillips to justice, and that we would favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Prisoner is amenable to Consular Court at Akassa for the assault.

That we think that Phillips, for the offence of assault committed by him, is amenable only to the Consular jurisdiction, and that the proper course will be to let him take his trial accordingly before Her Majesty's Consular Court at Akassa.

Do not see how he can be prosecuted for inciting to war against "Opal."

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we do not see how he can be effectually prosecuted in any Criminal Court for the more serious offence for which he was seized and is now in custody.

We have, &c.

Extradition of N. L. Rolland.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 27th March, stating that he was to transmit papers* relating to a demand made by the Belgian Government for the surrender of Nestor L. Rolland on a charge of forgery, under the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Belgium of the 20th May, 1876.

Refusal of the Chief Magistrate to issue warrant.

That the demand was originally made by Baron Solvyns, the Belgian Minister at this Court, on the 14th March, 1883, and was referred to the Home Office in the usual course; and that on the 19th the Secretary of State issued the order requiring the Chief Magistrate to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive. That nothing more was heard of the case in the Foreign Office until the 21st December, when Baron Solvyns made a further application for Rolland's surrender. That that application was referred to the Home Office, and in the reply of that Department of Jurisdiction in native African territories under Treaties with their Chiefs.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Robert Herbert's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to invite our attention to our Report of the 3rd August, 1880, to the Treaties made with Mankoroane and Montsioa which would be found at pp. 17 and 44 of C.—4194, and to the letter from Mr. Assistant Commissioner Wright at p. 145 of C.—4213; copies of which documents were inclosed.

That your Lordship desired to be favoured with our opinion—

1. Whether it would now be competent to Her Majesty, by an Order in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, to create a Court with jurisdiction over offences committed since the date of the above Treaties, within the territories of the Chiefs who had signed those documents.

2. Whether a Court so created would be competent to try, on a charge of murder, the men who killed Mr. Bethell.

3. Whether, having regard to the immediately preceding conflict, the facts, as detailed in Mr. Wright's letter, constituted the crime of murder according to English law.

4. Whether it would be proper to include in an Order in Council, creating a Court with jurisdiction over the territories of the Chiefs signing the above-mentioned Treaties, a clause empowering the Court to receive evidence upon affirmation or declaration, instead of upon oath, similar to clause 26 of the Western Pacific Order in Council of the 14th August, 1879, of which a copy was inclosed.

That Sir Robert Herbert was also to request that we would be good enough to favour your Lordship with any observations upon the subject generally that might appear to us desirable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No objection to proposed Court.

That we think, though the point is not free from doubt, that it would be competent to Her Majesty, by Order in Council, to create a Court with jurisdiction over offences committed since the date of the two Treaties respectively, within the territories of the Chiefs who signed those documents. They purport to give Her Majesty power from their date "to rule in the country over white men and black men," in addition to the power of publishing laws, appointing Judges, and the other power, specified. And these powers appear to have been accepted on behalf of Her Majesty. It would appear, therefore, that Her Majesty had authority to try and adjudicate upon all offences committed in the territory of each Chief, from and after the date of the Treaty. This being so, there does not seem to us to be any objection, in principle, to the creation of a Court which is to try past offences. It is totally different from the creation of offences ex post facto, which would of course be open to the gravest objection.

Such Court competen to try alleged murder of Mr. Bethell.

2. We think, therefore, that a Court so created would be competent to try, on a charge of murder, the men who killed Mr. Bethell. We presume that murder was recognized as an offence in Montsioa's territory, and, if so, we think it may be regarded as an offence against Her Majesty, though no laws have yet been published by her.

Limitations under Treaty.

We would, however, observe that the wording of the Treaty is somewhat peculiar. It may be contended that the wording of the third paragraph, which gives authority to arrest and imprison criminals, &c., limits the authority conferred by the preceding general words, and that there is no power to inflict capital punishment.

Question as to murder one for Court.

3. If Mr. Bethell had met his death in the course of the conflict which took place between the armed forces, it would be open to serious doubt whether the crime of murder had been committed. But if the account of the occurrences contained in Mr. Wright's letter is to be relied on, and Mr. Bethell was shot when lying wounded in the way described, we think it may fairly be contended that the offence of murder was committed. At all events, we think the determination of that question might properly be left to the Tribunal before whom the case was tried.

As to objections to Court, &c.

Any objection to the jurisdiction of the Court constituted by an Order in Council, and any question as to the sentence it had power to impose, might also be raised at the trial.

No objection to provision in Order.

4. We see no impropriety in such an Order in Council containing the provision suggested.

As to presence of murderers in Transvaal.

We may add that it is not clear whether the alleged murderers are still in the territory of the Chief or are now in the Transvaal. If the latter, we are not aware whether there is any Convention with the Transvaal under which their presence in the protected territory could be secured for the purpose of trial.

We have, &c.

FARRER HERSCHELL.

1884

the 31st December was inclosed a copy of a letter from the Chief Magistrate, in which he stated his reasons for not issuing a warrant.

That the decision of the Magistrate was at once communicated to the Belgian Minister.

Renewed application for his extradition.

That on the 8th March Baron Solvyns renewed the application for the surrender of the accused, inclosing further documents in support thereof, and also copies of communications from the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Procureur-Général at Brussels in reply to the arguments of the Chief Magistrate.

That that note was communicated to the Home Office, and in the reply from that Department of the 18th March was a copy of a further letter from the Chief Magistrate, in which he still declined to issue a warrant, and stated the grounds of his refusal in the following terms:—

Reasons for continued refusal to issue warrant.

"It appears that the accused signed certain papers with a fictitious name and address, for the purpose of evading French customs duties on goods sent by him from Belgium into France. The Judgment of Lord Mansfield, C.J., in Planché v. Fletcher (1 Douglas, 253), applies to this case: 'One nation does not take notice of the revenue laws of another.' On that ground, upon facts substantially similar to the present, he held that there was no fraud in England.

"Having, then, no regard to the French Tariff, I find that the documents upon which the claim for extradition is founded do not contain any evidence of a fraudulent intent."

That we were referred to Article II of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and Belgium, and to the heading of the list of crimes contained in the First Schedule of the Extradition Act, 1870.

That your Lordship had caused a draft to be prepared of a note to the Belgian Minister, embodying the reasons given by the Chief Magistrate for his refusal to issue a warrant in the case, and that Sir J. Pauncefote was to request our opinion as to whether the grounds for such refusal were sufficient in law, and were correctly stated in the draft note.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Better for the Magistrate to issue a warrant, and allow question to be raised by prisoner.

That we entertain grave doubt whether the uttering, in this country, of a false document, with intent to defraud the revenues of a foreign country, would not be a criminal offence here. Indeed, we incline to the opinion that it would. But even treating the matter as open to doubt, we would suggest for consideration whether the better course would not be for the Magistrate to issue his warrant, leaving the question to be raised by the prisoner, as it can be by application for a writ of habeas corpus, or otherwise, so that it may be solemnly decided after argument.

Boats being built for Chilean Government.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury respecting eighteen boats then being built by Messrs. White, at Cowes, for the Chilean Government.* That Sir J. Pauncefote stated that hostilities between Chile and Peru had ceased, and that a Treaty of Peace was signed on the 20th October last, the ratifications of which had not, however, been exchanged pending the approval of the Peruvian Congress, which was expected to assemble next month.

That our opinion was requested as to whether, under those circumstances, a state of war existed between Chile and Peru within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which made it incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to prevent the shipment of the boats, and generally as to what steps should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

May be removed, though the Treaty with Peru is not ratified.

That, inasmuch as it appears that a Treaty of Peace has been concluded, and only awaits ratification, which there seems no reason to doubt it will receive, and that no warlike operations between Chile and Peru are now in progress, we think that these vessels, which, from their nature, are not likely to be employed in warlike operations, may be allowed to be removed.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 19th February, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter and inclosure from the Treasury on the subject of the boats being built at Cowes for the Government of Chile;* and that he was to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as speedily as possible, in view of the fact that the steamer which was to take the boats appeared about to start from Shields on the 23rd February, in order to take up the boats at Cowes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

No further opinion to add.

That we have nothing to add to our former Report in relation to the stoppage of the boats in question.

Should inquire into export of torpedo boats during last three years.

It is deserving of consideration whether some inquiries should not be made in consequence of the statement contained in Messrs. Laws, Surtees, and Company's letter of the 20th instant, that they had carried torpedo boats to the Chilean Government during the last three years.

Chile and Peru war. Claims of neutrals. Italian objections to propositions as to rights of neutrals.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Currie's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was to transmit to us a note† from the Italian Ambassador at this Court, in which, in pursuance of instructions from his Government, he drew the attention of your Lordship to certain passages which appear in the preface to the first award pronounced by the Anglo-Chilean Court of Arbitration, established for the purpose of determining the amount of indemnity payable to British claimants who sustained losses at the hands of the Chilean forces during the late war between Chile and Peru.

That the Court of Arbitration was sitting by virtue of an Agreement between the British and Chilean Governments, of which a copy was inclosed.

That Her Majesty's Government had not yet received the text of the award referred to by the Italian Ambassador, but that the propositions of law to which his Government took exception are quoted verbatim in his note.

That those propositions did not appear to conflict with the statement of the legal position and rights of neutrals, contained in the Foreign Office Memorandum (C) transmitted therewith, and which was approved in our Report of the 1st November last.

That Mr. Currie was to request our opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the inquiry of the Italian Ambassador.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

The propositions may require qualification.

That the "considerations" appear to be accurate as general statements of international law, though it is possible that, in exceptional cases, they might require some qualification.

To what extent do they object?

We would suggest that it might be well to inquire of the Italian Government to what extent they take exception to them.

Chile Claims Commission.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us the papers* relating to the claim of James Noble, a British subject, which had recently been before the Chile Claims Commission.

Rejection of claim of James Noble on plea that he has not proved his nationality.

That that claim was rejected by the Tribunal, on the plea that the claimant had not proved his nationality.

That it appeared that the Tribunal, not having laid down any rule that preliminary proof of British nationality would be required, it was assumed by the British Agent that the fact of the claim being presented by him would be accepted as primâ facie proof.

That no objection was taken on that ground by the Chilean Agent during the preliminary stages of the proceedings, and the claimant was therefore taken by surprise.

That nevertheless no time was allowed him to adduce the proof required, but that his case had been dismissed.

That Sir J. Pauncefote was directed to request our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a remonstrance to the Chilean Government on the subject, and in asking them to agree to the case being reopened in order to allow of evidence being given to prove the nationality of the claimant.

That a copy of the Convention† for the settlement, by means of a Mixed International Commission, of the claims of British subjects, arising out of the war between Chile and Peru, and the Rules of the Procedure‡ were inclosed for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Remonstrance should be addressed to Chilean Government, who should be asked to reopen the case.

That we think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in addressing a remonstrance to the Chilean Government on the subject, and in asking them to agree to the case being reopened in order to allow of evidence being given to prove the nationality of the claimant.

War between Chile and Peru.

Claims of neutrals.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir J. Pauncefote's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers* relating to the proceedings before the Court of Arbitration at Valparaiso for the settlement of the claims of neutrals arising out of the war between Chile and Peru.

That in pursuance of instructions received from his Government, the Italian Ambassador, in a note dated the 30th October, drew your Lordship's attention to certain general principles which the Italian Government had been informed had been asserted by the Chilean Agent at the Court of Arbitration, in opposing the claims that had been presented on behalf of British, French, and Italian subjects, who suffered losses in consequence of the military operations of the Chilean forces during the recent war with Peru.

General principles asserted by Chile.

That the principles thus asserted by the Chilean Agent were explained under three headings in Count Nigra's letter, their general tenour being (1) that foreigners domiciled in Peru or Bolivia during the war had no better claims than the subjects of those countries; (2) that Chile was not responsible for injuries inflicted on such foreigners by the civil or military authorities through acts not expressly ordered or sanctioned by the superior authorities of Chile; (3) that pillage, fire, personal injuries, destruction of private property, were the inevitable incidents of all war, and that neutrals were bound to avoid them by removing from the locality were hostilities were taking place.

Italy wants opinion of Her Majesty's Government.

That Count Nigra pointed out that such theories presented a certain analogy in those advocated by the Agent of the United States before the Mixed Commission on British and American claims established under the XIIth Article of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871, and that if they should prevail they would dispose of nearly all the claims of foreigners. That the Italian Government, therefore, were anxious to know the views of Her Majesty's Government thereon.

That Count Nigra might possibly have intended to refer to the case of the "Hiawatha,"† in which a demurrer was raised on the ground of the domicile of the British claimants in the insurrectionary States then engaged in war against the United States, but that the point did not appear to have been decided in that case.

That the terms of the Conventions signed by Chile with Italy and Great Britain for the settlement of the claims of Italian and British subjects would be found in the papers (C) and (D).

That our opinion was requested as to the reply which should be returned to Count Nigra's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

Operations of war.

1. That the first of the three principles laid down, if limited to claims in respect of losses arising from the ordinary incidents and necessary operations of war, appear to be, speaking generally, correct.

Cases where neutrals stand on different footing from nationals.

But it is, we think, subject to some important exceptions. Amongst these we may specify:—

(1.) The wanton violation of premises of the Ambassador or Consular buildings protected by the national flag.

(2.) Wanton and unnecessary destruction of private neutral property plainly distinguishable by the national colours being hoisted, or otherwise.

(3.) Pillage, or other excesses in breach of military discipline, knowingly committed on neutrals.

(4.) Refusal to give neutrals the option of leaving before hostilities are commenced.

(5.) Cases in which neutral property is seized and used for the purpose of warlike operations by an invading army.

The above does not profess to be an exhaustive list of the exceptions. These instances are given by way of example only.

Responsibility for acts not expressly sanctioned by authorities.

2. The second principle appears to us to be far too widely stated. We think responsibility is not confined to acts "expressly" ordered or sanctioned.

Excesses of the soldiery, for example, committed through want of proper discipline and control, might, we think, properly give rise to claims.

The words "superior authorities," too, are ambiguous, and might exclude the acts of officials for whom a Government ought justly to be held responsible.

Fire, pillage, &c., if wanton, are not inevitable incidents of war.

3. No doubt fire, personal injury, destruction of private property, and possibly some pillage may be inevitable incidents of war. But they may also be wanton, excessive, and due to the war being carried on contrary to the usages of civilized warfare and the rules of international law.

It is evident, therefore, that the third principle, though in the main correct, cannot be accepted without qualification.

We would suggest that Count Nigra's letter may properly receive an answer founded upon the above observations.

Canton Riots.

Trial of J. H. Logan for the murder of Pak Wah-king, Chinese boy.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he had the honour to transmit to us, by your Lordship's direction, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which related to the trial of a British subject named James Henry Logan, at Canton, in China, for the murder of Pak Wah-king, a Chinese boy, aged 12, on the 12th August last.

That the trial, which lasted three days, commenced at Canton on the 20th September, before Sir Richard Rennie, Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan, and a jury. That Logan was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to penal servitude for seven years.

That for some time previously to the commission of that crime considerable excitement had been created against foreigners by the action of the French in Tonquin (see Sir H. Parkes, No. 25). That the crime committed by Logan naturally aroused the anger and animosity of the lower orders of the Cantonese, who were at all times inclined to be turbulent (Mr. Grosvenor, No. 120). That it appeared from the evidence which was transmitted therewith (report of trial of "Regina v. Logan") that Logan, who had formerly served in the Hong Kong police, was employed at Canton in the service of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs. That he spent the night of the 11th August at the house of one Nielsen in company with the latter and one Van Koken, playing cards and drinking beer. That at 6·30 on the morning of the 12th all three left the house and proceeded in the direction of Logan's house. That Logan carried a stick, and wantonly struck some inoffensive coolies who were waiting in the street for employment at a tea factory. That one of them remonstrated, whereupon Logan became excited and ran into his house, where he procured a loaded revolver, with which he chased the Chinese in the street, discharging the weapon. That he unfortunately wounded a woman named Chan Anan (evidence, p. 9), the bullet passing through her left shoulder.

That the woman followed Logan, crying out, "Taipan, you give me some medicine to cure me, as you have hit me, and I am covered all over with blood."

That Logan then became further excited and returned to his house, from which he brought out another loaded pistol, or carbine, with which he proceeded some distance to a bridge.

That there he deliberately stooped down and discharged the weapon, with the result that a Chinese boy (Pak Wah-king) was killed, and a Chinaman (Ng Shap-ng) was wounded (evidence, p. 17).

That on the trial for murder the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and the prisoner was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. That that sentence had caused the greatest dissatisfaction and resentment among the Chinese population and in Chinese official quarters.

That the popular ferment was increased by the circumstances that a few days before another Chinese had been drowned by being pushed into the river from the British steamer "Hankow," by a Portuguese named Diaz, belonging to the ship, and who was removed on board a Portuguese gun-boat, and taken for trial to the neighbouring Portuguese Settlement of Macao.

That, being further exasperated by this unfortunate incident, a Chinese mob attacked the foreign Settlement at Canton on the 10th September, where sixteen houses were burnt, and during several hours the rioters gave themselves up to looting, until the arrival of troops sent by the Viceroy, whose assistance had been invoked by the foreign Consuls in order to quell the disturbance and protect the Settlement.

That the correspondence that had taken place between Her Majesty's Consul at Canton and the Viceroy on the subject of the riot was inclosed in Sir H. Parkes' No. 24 of the 10th October.

That it seemed that a protest was made by the Viceroy against the leniency of the sentence passed on Logan, and that he also intimated that in view of its inadequacy he might be unable to protect the foreign residents at Canton against the lawless mob.
